A gentleman laying claim to thirty years' trade experience has unburdened himself to me at some length on the subject of the recent decision in the Cupar Sheriff's Court upon a disputed dressmaker's bill. In that case the Sheriff held that where a dress had been sent back for alterations nine times, the customer forfeited the right to ultimately refuse to accept it. My present correspondent contends that if this is the law, it will be very hard on tailors and dressmakers, as it will lead customers to reject every unsatisfactory garment straight off; and he argues that customers are very rarely satisfied with a garment when it is first tried on, partly from mere fidgetiness, and partly because the garment has not become properly moulded to the figure of the wearer. I trust that these considerations will have due weight with other judges who may be tempted to follow the ruling of the Cupar Sheriff. The inference from it seems to be that the law ought to allow a tailor or a dressmaker one misfit, just as it allows a dog its first bite.

Not for the first time the Aston police have distinguished themselves by a scandalous abuse of their authority. Last week they haled a Birmingham Councillor before the Aston Bench on a charge of contravening a by-law of the Warwickshire County Council by "shouting" in the street. The only basis for the charge was that this gentleman, in addressing an open-air meeting, spoke loud enough to make himself heard by the crowd, and the police admitted that no complaint had been made to them by residents or anybody else. Nevertheless, the defendant was taken into custody, marched through the streets by two policemen, and at the lock-up ordered to turn out his pockets, and treated just as a pickpocket would be. The magistrates dismissed the ridiculous and trumped-up charge, and for the sake of the inhabitants of Aston it is to be hoped that the Councillor will bring an action to test the legality of his arrest. It is manifest that their lot will become perfectly intolerable if the police are not sharply checked in their high-handed proceedings.

For the second time within a fortnight, "Graham & Co.," of 227, Strand, otherwise Goldstein, has been brought up at Bow-street by one of his victims, and once again he has been made to disgorge by a little pressure from the magistrate, in the shape of a visit from a warrant officer. This is all very well, but one cannot help asking how long it is to go on. Are these people to be judicially slated at Bow-street once a week, and allowed to get off with no worse consequence than refunding the money obtained from one particular victim? Sir John Bridge will, I doubt not, be the first to recognise the anomaly of this method of procedure, and I think that if he gave a hint on the subject to the police, some steps might be taken to shut up Goldstein's shop altogether.

I do not blame Goldstein half so much as my fellow-editors and newspaper proprietors who co-operate in his little game by placing their columns at his disposal. In the last case at Bow-street the journal concerned was a paper bearing the seductive title of Home, Sweet Home, in which the victim had read one of the usual highflown puffs of "Graham & Co's." rubbishy watches. Of course I know what the answer will be. The advertisement manager of every paper which publishes "Graham & Co's." advertisements is doubtless prepared to depose on oath that he knows absolutely nothing of their real nature. There is a point, however, at which such protestations cease to convince the impartial observer; and that point is reached when evidence of the fraudulent character of an advertisement is within everybody's reach, and when the advertiser is being denounced once a week from the Bench of the Chief Metropolitan Police-court. There is a certain class of advertisements which it is the duty of newspaper managers to be on their guard against, and Goldstein's, alias "Graham & Co's.," is one of them.

I have received the following letter :—

61, St. Martin's-lane, Charing-cross, London, W.C.,
July 25, 1896.

Sir,—Messrs. Perrin, Dunn, & Co. have consulted me in reference to a paragraph which appears in this week's issue of Truth, in which you refer to them in the most offensive terms.

My clients' business is carried on in a most straightforward and legitimate manner, and the matter and inuendo in the paragraph referred to is (sic) unfounded.

Under the circumstances, unless a retractation is made in your next issue of statements which, if uncontradicted, are calculated to seriously injure my clients in their business, I must take such proceedings as may be advised for the vindication of their reputation and the prevention of a repetition of the libellous statements.—Yours truly,

Henry Grain.

What this means I do not know. I stated that Perrin, Dunn, & Co. had addressed a letter offering pecuniary assistance to a married lady, now deceased, and I described this letter as "of a particularly impudent and nefarious character." "The matter and inuendo," says Mr. Grain, if he will allow me to correct his grammar, "are unfounded." As regards the "matter," I have the letter in my possession, and it was sent to me by the husband of the lady to whom it was addressed. It is absurd under these circumstances to request me to retract my statements respecting the letter. As regards the "inuendo," here is the letter to speak for itself :—

Imperial Mansions, Oxford-st., W.C.
(Facing Tottenham Court-road),
London, 13th July, 1896.

Dear Madam,—Your name having been mentioned to us as requiring an advance of money we shall be pleased to arrange same for you if you will write or give us a call.—Yours truly,

Perrin, Dunn, & Co.

This is what I call "impudent and nefarious"—"impudent," because it is an insulting thing to write to a stranger, and a person of good credit, that you believe him (or her) to be in want of ready money; "nefarious," because it is a wicked, mischievous, and vile thing to try and tempt a married woman to borrow money at a loan-office behind the back of her husband. If Mr. Henry Grain considers this carrying on business "in a most straightforward and legitimate manner," I can only say that I am sorry to hear a member of an honourable profession express such an opinion. I adhere to everything I have said about Perrin, Dunn, & Co.'s letter, and I shall be content to take the opinion of any twelve British husbands whom Mr. Grain can get into a jury-box as to whether my view of the matter is not a just one.

In connection with this same circular, it may interest Mr. Grain to know that a barrister has given me his opinion that to write of a person that you "hear he is in want of money" is unquestionably libellous, the "inuendo," in pleader's language, clearly being that the party alluded to is "a person of no credit and in financial straits." I suppose there is no doubt about this, though, of course, a libel must be published to a third party before it becomes actionable. In the very instance above referred to, Perrin, Dunn, & Co.'s circular was sent to a wrong address; and if the firm are in the habit of scattering their innuendoes about in this indiscriminate fashion, they would do well to study the law of libel themselves before invoking its protection.

I take the following from a growl that has reached me against the annual religious gathering known as the Keswick Convention. Judging from what my correspondent says, the ways and doings of the worthy people who attend the Convention are far from adding to the pleasure of a summer sojourn in the Lake District; and though I feel sure that he must be mistaken in his remark respecting the R.S.P.C.A., it might, nevertheless, be well for the headquarters staff of that organisation to inquire into the matter :—

. . . . During the Convention it is very awkward for any ordinary tourist to come within ten or twenty miles of Keswick. At any street corner he may be confronted by some impudent ignoramus who will put to him some question, intended to be soul-searching, which is too often provocative of a profane retort. But this is not the worst. These pious folks, though they would not confess that they are "on pleasure bent," yet cannot refrain from showing the workings of "the frugal mind." On every road, north, south, east, and west, hard bargains are driven with the drivers of traps and other vehicles, and these conveyances are shamefully overcrowded by parties of the "uncoʼ guid," the sufferings of the poor horses being something painful to witness. The Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals has had its attention directed to these abuses, but they seem to shrink from the exposure of the difference between piety in pretence and piety in practice.

Apropos of the statement in Truth of the 16th inst. about the cruelty to fowls in transit from London to Ireland viâ Milford, a correspondent tells me that, some years ago, being in the employ of the Great Western Railway Company, he himself called the attention of an officer of the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals to this subject. It is evident that the state of things described the other day in Truth is really an abuse of old standing, and I hope that this time the matter will attract the attention of the R.S.P.C.A. My present correspondent remarks incidentally that the fact of poultry being kept without water during a journey lasting over two days or more makes all the difference to their condition on their arrival at market. So I should have thought; but it is a consideration which does not seem to trouble those who send the poultry to market.

THE UGANDA RAILWAY.

What it will cost no words can express,
What is its object no brain can suppose,
Where it will start from no one can guess,
Where it is going to nobody knows.

What is the use of it none can conjecture,
What it will carry there's none can define;
And, in spite of George Curzon's superior lecture,
It clearly is naught but a lunatic line.

Until a few days ago the secretary of the local branch of the Irish National League of Great Britain was employed at Messrs. Laird's ironworks at Birkenhead. In his absence from home one day, a canvasser from the Birkenhead Conservative Association called, and ascertained from his wife where he was employed. A few days afterwards the man was dismissed from his employment, without any reason being assigned. Is there any connection between the Tory canvasser's visit and the man's dismissal? He thinks so, and if he is right, it is a piece of political spite as mean as it is malicious. I do not suppose that such a thing has been done with the knowledge of the principals of the firm, or that they would approve of it if it came to their knowledge; and, if that is so, I think they would do well to inquire into the matter.

Now that the Land Bill has attracted again attention to the question of judicial rents in Ireland, the following facts, given to me by a gentleman who has had large experience as a valuer under the existing Acts, may be of some interest, as showing the absurdity of attempting to "fix" a fair rent:—

At a fair held in Timoleague, co. Cork, I bought six lambs for £1. The next year I got £1 each for lambs of exactly the same quality. Another year I got for fat cattle almost any price I liked to ask, the butchers actually coming and asking me to sell. The very next year after that fat cattle were almost unsaleable, actually fetching in February little, if anything, over their price as stores in the preceding August. Such fluctuation would upset any "fair rent."

Similar fluctuations, though perhaps not so rapid and violent, occur in the price of crops and other agricultural produce. It seems clear from such facts that no fixed rent which is based on price can possibly be a "fair" one to both parties.

To beat a Government possessed of a majority of 146 is always pleasing to an Opposition. But whether Radicals outside Parliament will approve of some of their representatives beating the Government on a snap division, at the cost of every principle which they have professed, is doubtful. On Wednesday last a clause in the Irish Land Bill, which provided that landlords selling their estates should be paid their ascertained value in the current coin of the realm, was under discussion. An amendment was proposed declaring that they should be paid in bonds. This was supported by all the Irish, and was carried by the aid of the Radicals present. The effect is this: an estate is valued at £1,000. It is paid for in a security which may at once be sold for £1,100—i.e., the owner receives a bonus from the Treasury of 10 per cent. It was urged that this bonus would be divided between the selling landlord and the buying tenants. But whether it goes to the one or the other, or whether it is divided between the two, the effect is the same so far as regards the British taxpayer. He pays the piper, and it is hardly likely that he will consider that he has got a quid pro quo by the Government having been defeated in an almost empty House.

FROM THE FLOOR OF THE HOUSE.

Lines to Mr. Balfour.

BY A PERSPIRING M.P.

They may call you weak, my Balfour,
They may feeble style your reign,
They may chide your cynic humour,
They may deem your acts inane:
Men of energy and impulse
May denounce your manner mild,
They may jeer at your confession
That in tactics you're a child;
They may speak of you as idle,
In derision they may scoff
At your wasteful love of "wheeling,"
At your woeful zest for golf;
Nay, comparisons suggesting,
They may hint you do not shine
Like your famous predecessors;
But take courage, Arthur mine!
Let them censure and upbraid you;
Let them talk of "Dizzy's" fame,
Let them dwell on Peel and Gladstone,
And applaud Lord Randolph's name;
Let them praise Sir Michael's method,
And extol Sir William's bounce,
And good Mr. Smith remember,
Who was always "on the pounce;"
Yet be calm! Though these have triumphed
In their miscellaneous ways,
'Twill be yours to make a record
That shall last to distant days.
'Twill be yours to be remembered
And be lauded to the skies
Every time the glass to ninety
May in London chance to rise.
Yes, M.P.s as yet unthought of,
In hot sessions yet to come,
When the most loquacious members
By the heat are stricken dumb,
Shall, perspiring in their places,
Of a sudden take new heart
When they recollect how boldly
You have played a leader's part.
Aye, posterity's debaters
Shall rise up and bless your name,
And the Senate of the future
Shall your memory acclaim
As the leader of all leaders
Who, discomfort to avert,
Dared to lead the House of Commons
In a simple flannel shirt!

Last Friday Lord Rosebery, in a speech at Epsom, called attention to the competition in our home market of "German-made" articles, and he ascribed it in the main to Germany having a better system of technical education than we have. I have frequently noticed this explanation before, but I do not believe it to be correct. In some particular cases technical education would aid us, but by no means in all. All else being equal, the consumer will, of course, buy in the cheapest market. In Germany either an artisan works per hour for less money than our artisans, or the German capitalists contents himself with less profit; and if the material put into the article be the same, the saving by machinery the same, and the skill of the worker be the same, it follows, as a necessary consequence, that the price of the German article is less than that of the English article.

But there is another factor—the greater the subdivision of labour the greater is the output. In America certainly, and in Germany probably, the subdivision is carried to greater lengths than with us. This subdivision substitutes an abnormal facility in one particular detail of a trade for a general knowledge of all its details. Machinery and subdivision of labour tend to make the artisan himself a machine rather than an intelligent worker. Mind is sacrificed to manual quickness. On many grounds this is to be regretted, but the regret does not alter the fact that converting artisans into one wheel of a labour machine unquestionably cheapens output.

I have always thought that, owing to circumstances peculiar to Great Britain, Protection would ruin us. But it is well that the argument which has led other countries to adopt Protection should be understood. It is this: a home market is secured where the price is kept down by domestic competition. The main profit of the manufacturer comes from this home market; he therefore can keep his workmen always employed by manufacturing goods for the foreign market and selling them there at an almost nominal profit.

Our monopoly of the markets of the world was based on two things: we had a monopoly of capital and a monopoly of skilled labour; thus the selling monopoly was the outcome of manufacturing monopolies. So soon as other countries became possessed of capital and skilled labour, it was obvious that they would come into competition with us. We might perhaps have held our own against them owing to being already in possession of the markets, but our manufacturers neither took measures to keep abreast of their opponents by employing able commercial travellers, nor would they provide what foreign countries wanted, instead of what it was considered that they ought to want. Moreover, they sought to increase their gains by furnishing shoddy rather than honest articles. At present we have almost a monopoly of the ocean carrying trade. But even this is becoming a questionable advantage, for such is the competition amongst our own shippers that its profits are becoming a vanishing quantity.

I see it stated (I know not with what truth) that the French Government contemplates the bestowal of the Grand Cordon of the Legion of Honour on President Kruger. Would it not be a graceful act for the Queen to bestow the Grand Cross of the Bath on him? Certainly no man could have behaved more generously in his action towards the raiders from Rhodesia and towards the Company-mongers in Johannesburg, who spent money to get up a revolution which, by their own admission, no one there wanted except themselves.

The tricks and dodges of Mr. Cecil Rhodes's friends in the Press afford an inexhaustible field of study and amusement. On Monday morning, under the heading of "Cape Sympathy with Mr. Cecil Rhodes," the Daily Telegraph gave a report of a "mass meeting of citizens" at Capetown, where a resolution of sympathy with the fallen Colossus in his apple-cart misfortune was unanimously carried. "The enthusiasm," said the ingenuous reporter, "manifested by those present is without precedent in the history of the colony." A telegram in very similar terms, including the unanimity and enthusiasm, was published by the Times; but with the addition of the following somewhat important sentence:—

> Mr. Anderson, a merchant, presided, but nearly all the leading and influential people held aloof from the movement.

That Mr. Rhodes was actuated by patriotic motives I always doubted. He always seemed to me to put his own interests above those of his country, except when the two happened to be identical. But I did suppose, until recent events, that he was a clever man. This notion his recent proceedings have entirely dispelled. His stock-in-trade was a conviction that almost every one is to be bought, and that every one is to be humbugged. He now, it appears, has turned on Dr. Jameson, who, he complains, has "upset his apple-cart." His interview on December 30 last with Mr. Schreiner, the then Cape Attorney, was an effort to throw all blame on the Doctor if the raid failed, and to profit by it if it succeeded. Unfortunately for Mr. Rhodes, the cipher telegrams have upset that apple-cart.

Rhodes and Beit provided the money for the raid out of the funds of the Chartered Company. They got up the grievances at Johannesburg; they were cognisant of the post-dated letter respecting the "women and children." Rhodes concealed all this from his ministerial colleagues and from the Cape Government. When all was prepared, the company's troops assembled, the letter in the hands of Dr. Jameson, the provisions and horses distributed along the route to Johannesburg, Rhodes wrote a telegram—after the line had been cut—urging Jameson not to advance. Then he hid himself away, and declined, when telegraphic communication was re-established the next day, to forward the telegram. His next step was solemnly to deny that he had had anything to do with the raid. All these shifty tricks have now been exposed by the Cape Parliamentary Committee. If Mr. Rhodes had been an intelligent man he would have perceived that his special pleading, his pettifogging subterfuges, and his endeavour to throw all responsibility on his puppets, can deceive no one, besides being alike mean and silly.

Cæsar and Pompey agreed to divide the world. But eventually they fell out, when one put an end to the other. I am reminded of this by a speech of Lord Lorne to the African Association last week. Thus spoke his Lordship :—

After a topical allusion to the Royal marriage apropos of the union of South Africa, Lord Lorne said that before long we ought to be masters of the Zambesi as well as of the Nile. He remembered saying to Mr. Cecil Rhodes, "Well, we mean to take the Nile if you will take the Zambesi," and he replied, "This is just what we mean to do."

The career of Mr. Cecil Rhodes has been cut short, and this conqueror is, according to last accounts, dolefully wandering about the veldt on a "large, well-fed horse." This is almost to be regretted, for otherwise Pompey Lorne and Cæsar Rhodes, each at the head of an army, might have met and fought somewhere in the interior of Africa, and interesting indeed would have been the battle.

THE ST. STEPHEN'S MUSIC-HALL.

When a worried politician said the House he has to lead
Bears resemblance to a music-hall, he spoke the truth indeed,
For in very many matters, as comparison will show,
Both the institutions mentioned on all fours appear to go.

There are music-hall performers who are very much the rage ;
Are there not, too, special favourites on the House of Commons' stage,
Who, with répertoires unending, nearly always cheers invite,
As they go on re-appearing, doing several "turns" a night ?

Of comedians at St. Stephen's the supply, 'tis true, is small,
But we three at least could mention who've engagements at that hall ;
Whilst of would-be "serio-comics" we could designate a score
Who with ill-advised persistence nightly take, and keep, the floor.

At St. Stephen's, too, are Jugglers who with figures do strange things ;
And Contortionists who startle with the oddest verbal flings :
There are Fencers, too, possessing a most pretty skill, no doubt,
And not a few examples of the genus "Knock-about."

Then, of course, of "Living Pictures" there are some at which to laugh,
And repeated presentations of "The Animatographe ;"
There's a Ministerial Troupe, too, great at "leaping in the dark,"
And Herr Joseph's tight-rope dancing has already made its mark.

And St. Stephen's has performers, like the other halls in town,
Who with Jingo recitations try to bring the country down ;
Men who seek to rouse excitement by their blatant bounce and brag,
And their very ill-timed waving of the good old British flag !

There is not just now a ballet on the House of Commons boards,
But the "All-Night Sitting" often an attraction great affords ;
Whilst on Fridays, when the audience, as a rule, is somewhat sparse,
The night's programme is enlivened with "The Estimates" —a Farce.

But in spite of all these items, rather varied, p'r'aps, than strong,
The "St. Stephen's" Hall 'tis certain will not run its programme long.
There, in fact, are signs already that its series of mishaps
Will result—and very shortly—in a well-deserved collapse.

And, indeed, when we remember what fiascoes it has seen,
And how plentiful the failures of this Music-hall have been ;
When we note that its performance has grown worse and worse of late,
We can only hope they'll close it at a very early date !

SCRUTATOR.

LOYALTY VERSUS FLUNKEYISM.

THAT Royalties should marry and be given in marriage can hardly be a subject of complaint. I wish Princess Maud and her Danish husband every sort of happiness. I am glad, however, that the orgie of flunkeyism that breaks out whenever a Royal marriage takes place is over. There is something to be said for a Monarchy such as ours, in which the Sovereign is the ornamental figurehead of the State, reigning but not ruling. King Log occupies the throne to keep out King Stork. What I object to, and what I shall always object to, is the servility which is not necessarily part and parcel of the institution, but which has grown up under it. Loyalty to the Crown means loyalty to the country. In this sense it is a commendable feeling, and it is in no way inconsistent with respect for the incumbent of the Throne, when the incumbent has proved worthy of it. I have never, however, understood what is meant by loyalty to the family of the Sovereign. The idea seems to me to be an absurdity. Why, indeed, should there be a Royal Family, maintained in a condition of quasi-royal state by the taxpayer ? What is the raison d'être for this ? Where the benefit to the nation ? It costs annually a considerable amount. What is the quid pro quo ? It is a survival of a condition of things that has passed away. Time was when the Sovereign was deemed an almost divine being, and then his family was supposed to share in this divinity. At present the Monarchy exists alone as a political arrangement, dependent for its continuance upon the good pleasure of the nation. The family of the Sovereign is, therefore, the Sovereign's private concern, with which the nation ought to have no more to do than with the family of any other public official. At most the nation has an interest in the direct heir to the Sovereignty.

It is, moreover, full time that all the mediæval tomfooleries connected with a Court should cease. They are an anachronism in the present age. Why hedge in the Sovereign with an etiquette which is as contemptible as it is ridiculous, and which—except that habit becomes a second nature—must be to the Sovereign, if a person of common sense, an intolerable nuisance ? There always will in every country be a herd of flunkeys who take a positive delight in abasing themselves. Being invertibrates, their backs naturally curve. But why should the country pay this herd for bowing and scraping? Yet such is the case. A large portion of the Civil List is spent in salaries to people for degrading humanity in their own persons. If it be held that there ought to be a relief fund for the pauper members of the aristocracy, then let us have the courage of the opinion, and vote it directly. But why contribute this monetary assistance to the nobility under the guise of a Civil List to the Sovereign?

So long as the Queen occupies the Throne, these questions cannot well be raised. But whenever her reign ceases, they will have to be seriously considered by the light of common sense. Theoretically, I prefer a Republic to a Monarchy, because I regard the former as more consistent with self respect, and less likely to bring into existence creeping vermin. Practically, being a citizen of a country in which there is a Monarchy, I believe that there are many other things more baneful, and which consequently ought to occupy reformers, rather than the conversion of the Empire into a Republic. But I would have the Monarchy adapted to the spirit of the age. The President of the French Republic performs all the representative functions with which he is entrusted on a salary of £40,000 per annum. He is treated with decent respect, but it occurs to no one to give large salaries to the French nobility for cringing before him, or for looking after his servants and his horses. To this respectable position I would reduce the first magistracy of this country, the sole difference being that in France the first magistrate is elected, and with us position is inherited. A Court—as we understand it—I would abolish. A Royal Family—as we understand it—I would put an end to. Financially, the change would save us many hundreds of thousands per annum; politically, it would alter nothing; socially, it would strike a blow at the flunkeyism which makes us contemptible in the eyes of the world.

In a few months time, the Queen will have reigned longer over England than any previous Sovereign. Her reign has been prosperous, and she has, far more than any of her predecessors, realised the conditions under which alone a Monarchy is tolerable. It is suggested that the event should be the occasion for some sort of celebration, and already many Press scribes are tuning their lyres for the gush with which they intend to inundate us. A national holiday is proposed. This would be foolish; for a national holiday simply means that on a given day the workers are to receive no wage. But there seems no reason why the epoch should not be marked by addresses to the Queen from public bodies; and to this I trust that the celebration will be confined. In these addresses there will, no doubt, be a good deal of abject flattery, but for this, those who indite them or vote them must alone be held responsible. The addresses would probably be more manly in their tone if it were distinctly understood that no baronets or knights will be created on the occasion.

MORE INVALID TROOPING HORRORS.

In my last article on "Troopship Atrocities," Truth, June 25, I dealt generally with the whole subject of the conveyance of troops between India and England. The wider question had been raised by the facts which came to light respecting the last homeward voyage of the Clive; but it will be remembered that attention was first called to this subject in Truth in connection with the lamentable deficiencies in the accommodation for invalid soldiers on the troopships. It is the invalid trooping service which most urgently calls for amendment. During the last few weeks I have been receiving correspondence on the subject from all parts of the world, which throws a good deal of new light upon the evils which exist, and serves to further demonstrate the futility of the attempts which have been made in certain quarters to pooh-pooh the Truth allegations.

It may be remembered that the original picture which I gave of the conveyance of a detachment of troops from the Indian frontier to Netley hospital was founded upon facts which admittedly occurred some three or four years ago. Although ample evidence is forthcoming to show that no material change has taken place since, advantage has been taken by officialdom of the subsequent lapse of time to suggest that the Truth picture does not represent contemporary facts. I only wish that I could see the slightest ground for believing that contention to be well-founded; but not only is all the evidence I have seen to the opposite effect, but I have been supplied by a thoroughly competent and trustworthy eye-witness with an account of the recent voyage of a party of invalids from Rangoon and Bombay, which surpasses in horror anything that has yet been stated on the subject. The voyage in question was made in the ship Dalhousie, of the Royal Indian Marine, formerly owned by the British India Company, a boat described to me as "a wretched old tub." She sailed from Rangoon on October 7, 1895, and arrived at Bombay on October 19, carrying about a thousand troops, including the autumn invalids from Burmah, some forty men. Here is the account of the treatment of these invalids:—

> There was no hospital accommodation worthy of the name on board. A small cabin on the main deck, close to the engines, was told off for the purpose. It might have been about double the size of an ordinary state-room. Six bunks were ranged round it, in each of which was a mattress, indescribably foul and filthy. The only ventilation was provided by two small ports and the door, which opened immediately opposite the engines. There were no baths, and no ablutionary arrangements of any kind, and no w.c. There were no sheets to be had, and there was not even a chair. The food served out was the ordinary rations issued to the troops, and no other could be procured.
> Among the invalids were half-a-dozen cases of chronic dysentery, and a like number of human wrecks soaked with malaria. All these men were in urgent need of the best medical appliances and comforts. How much of these necessaries they got, you can judge for yourself from the foregoing statements.
> But the crowning horror was the presence among the invalids of one poor wretch covered from head to foot with foul sores, arising from a disease which I leave you to guess. The poor creature was wasted to a skeleton. The stench from his body was intolerable even to the most hardened to such things; and he was an object of horror to himself as well as to everybody else. It was impossible to place him anywhere but in the "hospital," and his presence in that apartment soon made it impossible for any other invalid to remain there. The whole of the victims of malaria and dysentery had consequently to be sent among their comrades, and left to lie as well as they could upon the crowded deck. One fever patient became so bad through lying on the deck by night and by day with no protection from the sun or weather, that the Doctor thought it absolutely necessary at last to take him below into the "hospital." He was laid as far as possible from the other occupant of the cabin; but, ill as he was, it was soon more than he could stand. He begged and prayed to be taken out of the place, and at last, thinking it the less of two evils, the Doctor had him carried back to the deck, and got his comrades to clear a space and do the best they could for him. . . .

Such was "the best trooping service in the world" in October last. By way of bringing the matter a little nearer up to date, I would call attention next to the last voyage of the transport Teucer. This vessel left Portsmouth in October last with a few troops for the Far East. The extent of her accommodation may be judged from the fact that on her inspection at Portsmouth the medical authorities made some objection on the ground of her being overcrowded. She then had less than 200 soldiers on board. At Hong Kong this vessel, officially pronounced unfit to carry 200 troops, took on board 300 for the passage home. About sixty of these were invalids, most of them suffering from malaria, and several in an advanced stage of consumption. An eye-witness, in a position to speak to all details of the arrangements for the troops, gives the following account of the condition of the ship on her homeward voyage:—

The hospital accommodation consisted in the first place of two small compartments on deck, each fitted with four bunks. They contained neither latrine, bath accommodation, nor any provision for ablution, and there was only room for one person beside the patients to enter at a time. The excreta of the sick had all to be carried by hand through that portion of the deck occupied by the women and children. This hospital accommodation was supplemented by two compartments partitioned off on the main troop-deck (the fore main cargo-hold). One compartment, which had neither ventilation nor light, candles having to be used all day, served for a dispensary; the other was fitted with eight cots for patients. The cots all but filled up the space, so that two attendants could not pass one another. There were no more conveniences here than in the other "hospital," and all the excreta and refuse had to be carried through the main troop-deck.

There being no room whatever in the "hospitals," the Medical Officers had to see their daily sick on the main troop deck, where all clerical work, &c., had to be performed.

The sick, both in and out of hospital, were on the ordinary troops' rations, consisting of salt beef, salt pork, &c. The M.O.s ordered occasionally extra rations, but what could be obtained on such a ship?

A word as to the treatment of women and children. Of these the ship had accommodation for twenty-four. In this space forty-one persons were packed. There was only one w.c. among them all. They were supposed to mess on the main troop deck, but in consequence of its crowded state, they had to take their meals as well as they could on deck, without either table or seat. In wet weather, and when loading the cargo, the space where they took their meals was wholly unprotected; at other times it was partially covered by an awning of one thickness. The latrines for the troops were immediately adjoining this spot, and the women and children were often compelled to clear off in consequence. For the number of children on board, the regulation allowance of milk should have been sixteen tins a day; but only six tins were issued. No rations of rum were obtainable during the voyage. Complaints were made, but there was no alteration.

From a private letter which has been sent to me since the foregoing communication, I gather that there has been some disturbance at headquarters as to the condition of the Teucer on her homeward voyage. Inquiries have been sent from the War Office to the medical authorities at Hong Kong respecting the practice of keeping all invalids until the end of the year, although there is a strong feeling in the Service that the War Office knew as well as anybody else what the practice has been. I understand that the Admiralty have issued instructions to Hong Kong that invalids are only to be sent in ships containing a certain percentage of sick accommodation to the number of troops carried, and that in other cases invalids are to be sent by mail. I gather also that the Hong Kong authorities have been in rather hot water over the Teucer business, but I fancy this is merely the usual official attempt to shunt the responsibility from headquarters to somebody lower down the scale. However, it is satisfactory to hear that the official mind really has been exercised on the subject.

It would be easy enough to multiply statements from soldiers, medical officers, naval officers, and others who have had experience of the subject, in order to prove the lamentable shortcomings of the trooping service in every respect; but the evils seem to be so notorious that it is almost waste of time to dwell on the subject further. It is interesting to note, however, that in the face of all the evidence now forthcoming on this subject, the Calcutta Englishman recently had the hardihood to publish an article asserting in the most uncompromising terms that what has appeared in TRUTH on this subject has no foundation in fact. This was published after the appearance in TRUTH of the description of the state of things which prevailed on board the Clive on her last voyage home; and the Englishman has the brazen audacity to remark that "no unprejudiced person can hesitate for a moment in rejecting TRUTH's picture of the state of things prevailing on the troopship Clive as a clumsy caricature." All I would reply to this is that no one who knows anything about the facts will hesitate to attribute the Englishman's observations either to deliberate dishonesty or to incurable stupidity. As I think myself that dishonesty is more common in the Press than stupidity, I should be inclined to adopt the first of these alternatives, though many may be of opinion that the article contained a fair share of both ingredients.

The Englishman has not, and does not pretend to have, one jot or tittle of evidence to rebut any of the allegations that have appeared in TRUTH, either in regard to the Clive or any other vessel. Its article offers two points, and two points only. The first is that after what has already appeared in TRUTH it is incredible that the authorities would have allowed the Clive to come into port in the condition described. Now, the first TRUTH article on the Invalid Trooping Service (and it dealt with nothing but the invalid Service) was published on February 19, and could not have reached India till at least a fortnight later. The Clive sailed not later than the middle of April; so that the editor of the Englishman credits me with the power of bringing about a complete reform in the conditions of the Trooping Service in the space of about one month. Without undue modesty I think I may say that he rather over-estimates my powers, as well as the amenability of Indian officialdom to criticism in the Press. He also overlooks the trifling fact that even if "the authorities" were as sensitive as he imagines, they had not the slightest reason to expect that the Clive would be overhauled on her arrival by a representative of TRUTH. As far as I am aware, this is the first occasion on which a representative of the Press has inspected a troopship on her arrival, with her passengers aboard; and I should not be at all surprised if it is the last. So much for the Englishman's first point. The second is simply that the gentleman who inspected the Clive on my behalf "admits that he does not know much about ships." My representative stated that he had not sufficient nautical knowledge to name correctly the various compartments and divisions of the ship. The Englishman would apparently ask its readers to infer from this that my representative is incapable of counting the number of persons confined in a given space, or to measure the extent of that space; that he is unable to tell whether a latrine is or is not in an offensive condition, and whether the arrangements do or do not violate the first principles of decency; that he is mistaken in objecting to such arrangements as that which compels healthy men to wash in the same basins as those suffering from the vilest infectious disease; that when he saw two families suffering from measles lodged in a horse-box with a canvas screen to separate them from the rest of the passengers, his optical powers were impaired by his lack of nautical knowledge, and so on, and so on. It is hardly worth while to argue over this twaddle, but it may interest the Englishman to know that a medical officer, who has performed more than one voyage in Indian waters in the Clive, tells me that his experiences in regard to the lack of hospital accommodation and the defective provision for the sick on this ship are far worse than anything suggested by my representative's report. I wonder that the Englishman did not suggest that because my representative has not studied the construction of ocean-going ships, therefore "no unprejudiced person will hesitate for a moment to reject" the C.O.'s condemnation of the provisions supplied to the Clive, or this officer's statement that hundreds of pounds of provisions had been thrown overboard. The Englishman's idea of an unprejudiced person would appear to be one who first makes up his mind that a certain state of things is right, and on the strength of this rejects the testimony of an unlimited number of reliable witnesses who are in a position to depose to the exact state of the facts. I have heard many a complaint from Anglo-Indians of the servility and lack of independence of the Anglo-Indian press, but I confess I was hardly prepared for such unmitigated pandering to official abuses as this.

Since the foregoing was written, I have come across, in a London paper, a Press telegram giving the result of some inquiry which seems to have been held at Bombay into the allegations respecting the last voyage of the Clive. I am glad that the Indian authorities have had sufficient conscience to hold any inquiry at all, but there all matter for satisfaction ends. An inquiry which must necessarily have been held in the absence of every witness who was likely to have cause of complaint—that is to say, the whole body of troops who travelled by the ship—can only be regarded as a worthless farce. The account of the result that I have seen is most meagre, and two points only among the matters referred to in TRUTH are touched upon. The first is the overcrowding, which seems to be admitted, inasmuch as an apology is offered in the fact that "an unusually large number of invalids had to be sent home." The other is the condition of the latrines during the voyage, as to which it is coolly affirmed that the statements that have been made were "grossly exaggerated." These statements were made (1) by the gentleman whom I sent down to look over the ship, and who had no conceivable motive for misrepresenting what he saw with his own eyes; and (2) by an intelligent and trustworthy N.C.O., who had kept a careful diary of the state of things prevailing day by day throughout the voyage. Their statements were confirmed by every single soldier on board whom my representative had time to interrogate. For the Indian authorities to hold an inquiry without an attempt to take any of this evidence, and, in the absence of the witnesses, to pronounce them guilty of "gross exaggeration," is simply to add insult to injury; and the public will rightly reject the findings of such a tribunal as unworthy of serious consideration.

The truth of the matter seems to be that, so far from there being any serious doubt as to the shortcomings of the Trooping Service, whether for invalids or healthy troops, the authorities, both in England and India, have been for a good many years past considerably exercised on the subject, as, indeed, they ought to have been; for I hear on all hands that they have been almost incessantly beset by forcible reports on the matter both from medical officers and officers commanding troops. The abandonment of the old system of Government troopships was the result of a consciousness in official circles that things were not what they ought to be, and from 1893 onwards the matter was under discussion between the Home and the Indian Governments. The Admiralty, in the first instance, proposed to substitute for the old troopships the conveyance of troops in armed cruisers specially built for the purpose. The Indian Government opposed the suggestion strongly, and with the best reason, for it was open to many and weighty objections. In return, the Indian Government proposed that a new class of vessels should be built for the trooping service, and worked under the joint control of the India Office and the Horse Guards, without the intervention of the Admiralty. They calculated that in this way the comfort of the troops would be increased, and a yearly saving effected. This proposal also fell through, probably through the influence of the Admiralty, and the discussion resulted in the adoption of the new system of conveyance by hired transports. This system, by general consent, seems to have had great advantages as regards the comfort and convenience of officers and their families; but, as mentioned in my last article on the subject, it has brought little or no benefit to the rank and file. It is now evident that yet another new departure will have to be made.

Judging from the evidence which is forthcoming as to the management of the Clive, and other ships of the same class directly under the control of the Indian Government, I should hesitate to say that the difficulty can be solved by placing the whole service under Indian administration. It does seem to me, however, that the suggestion made by the Indian Government, that they should undertake the business in conjunction with the War Office is a promising one, more especially in view of the estimated saving which can thereby be effected. Probably there is no room for any actual reduction of expenditure; but there is a strong feeling among experts that the present accommodation might be vastly improved without any addition to the annual cost of the service, and any means which promise an improvement of the service on these terms ought to be tried. On one point there can be no question, however, namely, as to the necessity for an absolute separation of invalids from healthy troops by means of ships exclusively devoted to the invalids. On the outward voyage they could be used for the conveyance of stores, or, under proper care and restrictions, for that of married women and children; but on the homeward voyage every consideration of humanity requires that those invalid troops whose condition is such as to require their separation from their healthy comrades, should be conveyed in hospital ships, specially designed and equipped for the purpose. That suggestion was made by the officer whose observations on the invalid trooping service first called my attention to the subject. It has since been endorsed by numerous medical officers who have communicated with me, and the necessity for it is demonstrated by everything that I have since heard of the sufferings inflicted upon the sick, and the indescribable abominations endured by the healthy, under the present conditions. I trust, however, that the reform will not end here. The present service is bad all round, and the War Office ought to take the opportunity of initiating reforms at once while there is a strong public feeling on the subject to back them up.

A RECORD BURIAL SCANDAL.

There has lately occurred in the parish of Deptford one of the most astonishing incidents that has ever come before readers of newspapers under the familiar title of "Burial Scandal." The matter has been brought before the Deptford Burial Board and the Bishop of Rochester, and the facts as stated to these authorities are as follows:—In the early part of May a Deptford undertaker conducted in Brockley Cemetery the funeral of a man whose friends had desired the undertaker to have him buried in unconsecrated ground. It seems that between the original order to the undertaker and the funeral itself, the clergy of St. Paul's, Deptford, through one of the curates, had persuaded the widow of the deceased to order the burial in the consecrated portion of the cemetery; but the lady altered her mind again before the funeral, and her final instructions to the undertaker were in favour of unconsecrated ground. When the funeral party reached the cemetery, the undertaker found himself called upon to pay the additional fee of 4s. 6d., which is charged for burial in consecrated ground. He refused to pay it, but while the first part of the service was proceeding in the Nonconformist chapel, one of the clergy of St. Paul's remonstrated with him on the responsibility he was taking, and the undertaker then consulted the superintendent of the cemetery, who advised that the body should be buried in consecrated ground. This course was accordingly taken; but the undertaker did not pay the extra fee, the fact being, as I understand it, that he had himself only been paid on the unconsecrated scale. Here ends the first act of the drama.

On June 2 this same undertaker was in charge of the funeral of a child at the same cemetery. In this case it was the free wish of the parents that the burial should take place in consecrated ground, and the fees were paid accordingly. On the arrival of the funeral at the cemetery, the Rev. Dr. Hodson, Vicar of St. Paul's, called the undertaker aside, and demanded the extra fees which had not been paid for the funeral above described. The undertaker refused to pay them—in which, of course, he was well within his right, as they would have had to come out of his own pocket, with an extremely remote probability of his ever recovering them from anybody else. Upon his refusal, the vicar absolutely refused to read the service over the child then awaiting interment until the fees for the previous burial were paid, and persisted in his refusal in spite of every remonstrance. The result was that the mourners, who had come there desirous of an interment in consecrated ground in accordance with the rites of the Church, had to proceed with the corpse to the Nonconformist chapel, and to submit to the burial of their dead in unconsecrated ground.

These are the facts which the father of the child thus buried, whose feelings, equally with those of all the relatives of the deceased, have been wantonly and heartlessly outraged, has laid before the Burial Board and the Bishop, and which, in the absence apparently of any means of redress, he has asked me to lay before the public. The Bishop of Rochester, after inquiry into the facts, writes that he "deplores the result;" and I take it that among all who read the story, irrespective of creed or denomination, there will be a unanimous feeling of indignation and disgust at the vicar's conduct. This feeling will only be aggravated when the circumstances under which the scandal arose are more clearly understood. From inquiries which I have made into these circumstances, it would appear that there prevails in this particular parish what can only be regarded as a sort of trade rivalry for the custom of parties who have corpses to dispose of. There is a gentleman, of unascertained religious denomination, who is ready to perform a religious service of some kind in unconsecrated ground at the lowest price quoted in the market. The clergy of the Established Church, on the other hand, with their superior pretensions, charge the highest recognised rate to those who desire the full benefits, present or future, of an orthodox Church of England funeral. Very naturally, in a poor district, where economy is perforce the ruling consideration and theological subtleties are somewhat at a discount, this leads to a run upon the minister, whatever his credentials, who offers his services on the cheapest terms. To counteract this tendency, the representatives of orthodoxy have recourse to their moral or spiritual influence, with the result that, as seen in the first of the above cases, the poor woman with a dead husband awaiting interment becomes a sort of shuttlecock between the battledores of the orthodox parson and the unorthodox practitioner, and is driven this way or that according as spiritual terrors or £. s. d. for the moment influence her most strongly. Ugly as this game is, from the parson's point of view it may be legitimate enough. To an unprejudiced spectator it may look rather like a contest between the professional practitioner and the amateur, or between the trade-unionist and the "blackleg;" but, so far, the parson may plausibly plead that he is actuated by conscientious motives and not by regard for his fees. But when we come to the case of the Vicar of St. Paul's, Deptford, how does the matter stand? Here we have a loyal Churchman, anxious for the burial of his child with orthodox rites, and the privilege, or right, is denied him. Why? Simply for the sake of the 4s. 6d., which the parson lost last time, when the unqualified practitioner got the best of the game. The sole object of the vicar in refusing Christian burial to this child seems to have been to put pressure on the undertaker, who acts as the middleman between the parson and the customer. Because the undertaker, who is in the position of stakeholder, has on a previous occasion paid the fees over to the party whom he condered entitled to them, this cleric virtually says, "I perform no more services for you until you have handed to me the profits which went last time to the opposition firm." Until the undertaker pays up, therefore, he can conduct no more funerals in consecrated ground; and if this leads to a funeral party or two having to take their dead to unconsecrated ground, what does that matter to a parson with a vested interest in fees to protect?

Well may the Bishop of Rochester "deplore this result." It is a disgrace to the Church; and when the Burial Board have to confess, as they have done in this case, that they are powerless to interfere, because "the clergy of the parish are not under their control," the whole law in regard to the burial of the dead is brought into contempt. Such a state of things is deplorable from every point of view, and I can only suggest that all parties concerned—parishioners, Burial Board, and Bishop—should unite in some attempt to remedy it.

NOTES FROM PARIS.

A ROMANCE OF USHANT.

I HAVE had a talk with a naval officer long engaged in coastguard duty in the waters of Ushant. He says the islands there are a paradise on earth, but by no means a place for dreamy lotus-eaters. The men are strong and daring seamen; the women are the prettiest and most industrious that he knows of. The type perhaps is monotonous. But one of the most overpowering sights that could fall on a masculine eye is to see four or five hundred girls ranged round the port to wave kerchiefs at the fishing fleet as it sets out for Newfoundland. They wear flat linen head-dresses, curiously wrought with needlework, like the Italian contadina's; have dark, soft, poetic, and yet piercing eyes—often grey, but taking a dark shade from long black lashes—and neat, supple figures. The eyes take their expression from the habit of scanning the horizon at the times when fishing smacks and boats are expected. Hope and fear seem to influence the optic nerves. The teeth are splendid, but one only sees them well when the mouth is distended by hearty laughter. Otherwise the edges alone appear. They are shown in speaking, for the lips are finely formed and close well. These island beauties have no idea how beautiful they are. They herd about 10,000 sheep, cultivate the ground, spin, weave, and dye the wool, and have the deftest hands for feminine industries, such as embroidery, knitting, and making clothes. The men fish, and the elders shear the sheep. All the 3,000 inhabitants of Ushant are related to each other, and have been time out of mind; hence the monotony of type. Pure air and active hardy habits prevent degeneration. The men take to the water like Newfoundlands when a wrecked crew or a drowning person is to be saved. Every one is familiar with the idea of death from drowning. Deeds of daring in the rushing waters round the islands form the burden of insular ditties. Romances sometimes grow out of daring rescues. Naval sea-fights off La Hogue and Ushant have inspired the local bards and story-tellers.

The late Prince Sayn-Wittgenstein's love for Brittany and the Bretons was due to his life having been saved at the greatest risk by an old fisherman. The Prince, whose Polish estates have gone to the Hohenlohe-Schillingsfürst family, was driven, under stress of weather, in a yacht into the Race of Fromveur. His vessel was knocked to pieces. But Prince and crew were rescued. When brought to shore senseless, he was tended by the lass whom he afterwards married. She was of an insular family that migrated to the mainland, and had come on a visit to the island. For some time the marriage was kept quiet, for the Prince had to take his Breton beauty through the church to the nuptial chamber. He made splendid post-nuptial settlements on her, and to please her built a grand castle on the coast where her youth was passed. There she resided among her own people. As he was attached to the Russian Embassy as Military Secretary, he could not bring her out in Paris, even had she cared to go. Her favourite amusement was to go to fancy balls in her own character—that of a Breton peasant. She could be natural, and talk and laugh as she might, but not as heartily, she said, as if there were real sailors and their sweethearts in the company. The fine society the Prince brought to the château wearied his wife, but she was good-tempered, hospitable, and did her best to be pleasant. She fell into a maladie de langueur, or wasting sickness, that puzzled the doctors. It was due to inability to adapt herself to new conditions. The Prince was in despair. She was fond of her kindred. He bought cutters and barques for the men, sent some of the boys to naval cadet schools, and gave dowries to the girls. His sorrow at her death was black and incurable. It soon brought its own cure in death from utter incapacity to enjoy life.

I remember seeing the Archduchess Dorothea Amelia at Chantilly soon after the final defeat of Thiers. The hopes of the Royalists were then high. There was a grand family gathering round the Duc d'Aumale, who, being the wealthiest member of the family—and the most clever—was accepted by all his kindred as the chief. There were three little Palatine Hapsburgs from Alcsuth under the grand-maternal wing of the Princess Clementine, three little De Paris, three little De Chartres, a little D'Alençon, and four little Montpensiers—Antonio, Christa, Mercedes, Fernando. The three last are dead. The eldest De Chartres—Robert—was about ten years old, but as helpless as a baby, and had not learned to speak. Most of the children were fair, blue-eyed, and had birdy noses. Their feet in every instance gave promise of tall stature. The feet of that beautiful Mercedes, who looked otherwise so Spanish, were all that an ill-natured critic could urge against her. The Archduchess Dorothea was ten years old and dressed in white with blue sashes and ribbons in her straw hat. She was a great deal taller than the Duc d'Orléans. He was two years younger, and a fat, restless, and very naughty boy. There was a Hapsburg in the nurse's arms (an Archduke)—a fine child of two years old, who was also naughty. It was very foolish to have such an exhibition of children at Chantilly. What with all those fledglings, their parents, and grand-parents, and grand-uncles the French really got frightened. The lesson they learned in beholding them was that their Civil List allowances would leave nothing for le pauvre monde.

The Archduchess keeps the bird face she had in childhood. It was remarked how like she was to M. Waddington, then "the one-day minister" of Thiers' last Cabinet. She has a strongly curved nose, long in outline and short at the base, small twinkling eyes, and a round face that accentuates the type transmitted to her by the Princess Clementine. The late Princesse Christa de Montpensier had such a face also. I should call it the tame-eagle type. H.I.H. is highly educated and a wondrous linguist. After the Crown Prince Rudolph's mysterious death, she was reserved for the next heir to the throne. To prepare for the high situation of Empress, she learned the many tongues and dialects of the dual Empire and the Kingdom of Bohemia. French, English, German, she already knew. Her grandmother, the Princess Clementine, is a singularly accomplished linguist. I should say that the future Duchesse d'Orléans is ambitious. She has at different times visited England and was there last year, when she had an opportunity to compare the lusty person of the Duc with the consumptive Archduke Francis Ferdinand. The comparison was favourable to the Duc. The younger sister of the Archduchess married not long ago a nephew of the Emperor of Austria, Prince Turn und Taxis, one of the richest noblemen in Austria. The very strong features of the Archduchess make her look more than twenty-nine. Royalists hope she will fly the white flag at the Château d'Eu. The Society ambition of the President might enable her to do so with impunity.

Henri was the favourite name at Royalist christenings, in the Comte de Chambord's time. "Philippe," I hear, is likely to be favoured now that the Duc d'Orléans is engaged to an Austrian archduchess. It was never a popular name in France, and for centuries was counted a name of ill-omen. I dare say it originally sounded outlandish to French ears, as Leopold, Albert, and such like sound to English ears. The first King Philippe was named by his mother, a Russian Princess, after her grandfather, a Greek Emperor. His Byzantine taste for relics led to the first crusade; his joke about William the Conqueror's obesity plunged France into a quarrel that led to a series of disastrous wars. Philippe Auguste was excommunicated for being a polygamist and treating cruelly his wife Ingeborg. Philippe le Bel was the worthy father of that she-wolf of France who employed her pretty Mortimer to impale Edward II. He tortured and burned all the Templars he could get hold of, with a view to subsequently seizing their estates. There is not much to be said about Philip IV. But Philip VI. lost the battle of Crecy. Philippe, brother of Louis XIV., was a contemptible fellow, who plotted with a minion the murder of his first wife by poison. His son, Philippe the Regent, practised the Black Arts, and was a sad rascal. Philippe Egalité was worse. The Comte de Paris was Louis Philippe until the Comte de Chambord's death. He then dropped the Louis, and came forward as Philippe VII. His heir—another Louis Philippe—is now Philippe merely. In the Black Masses, which for centuries were so frequent in France, a rather curious use was made of the name of Philippe. The woman who was the central figure wound up the ceremonial by decapitating a toad dressed as a king. As she did so she cried, "Ha! Philippe, would that I held thee as I do this vile beast, to be able to treat thee like wise!" Philippe is not a common name in any class, but is almost unknown in the peasant and working classes. The Comte de Paris showed himself a pedantic goose in dropping the Louis and calling himself Philippe. He should have done the contrary. Louis XX. would have had at least the moss and ivy of antiquity and great associations to recommend it.

Ladies' arms are much less over-dressed in France than in England. A reaction against voluminous sleeves is setting in. The attempts to throw out skirts with crinoline bustles and demi-hoops do not find favour here. The necessity for rapid locomotion and small trunks are an obstacle.

LETTER FROM THE LINKMAN.

THE following letters, dear Lady Betty, have been addressed to me:—

"Dear Sir,—I am old enough to recollect the brick wall which fifty years ago hid the Green Park from Piccadilly. This stood where the iron railings are now, which extend from Walsingham House to Hyde Park Corner. I therefore rejoice that you have called attention to the hideous continuation of the demolished wall which still disfigures Grosvenor-place. It is time that this also should be replaced by an ornamental railing. It is ridiculous to pretend that the alteration, which would considerably improve Grosvenor-place, and would materially add to the attractions of London, could, however slightly, affect the comfort of her Majesty, for the Queen has only occupied Buckingham Palace for twenty-four hours during the last twelve months.

"I am empowered to write, by a large number of residents in Belgravia, to offer on their behalf subscriptions, of which the total already amounts to five hundred pounds, towards removing the obnoxious wall and replacing it with a substantial ornamental railing. It is hoped, however, that as Buckingham Palace is Crown property, the authorities will effect the improvement without accepting money from the public which would be more suitably employed in relieving distress, in alleviating suffering, and in ameliorating the condition of the poor.

"You suggested in your last letter that the public should occasionally be permitted to visit the grounds of Buckingham Palace. I am altogether unable to perceive what reasonable objection there can be to that suggestion being adopted, for if the Queen and the Court do not use the Gardens, why should they be closed?—Your obedient servant, "Senex."

"Sir,—I venture to address a few lines to you with regard to the Royal procession of Wednesday. Piccadilly and St. James's-street were crowded with men and women who were anxious to see the procession, and were eager to cheer the young bride and bridegroom. After they had waited for some hours, there at last appeared a few closed carriages, surrounded by escorts of the Blues in their sombre uniforms. None of those in the houses, and few of those in the streets, could see into the carriages, and the mournful procession passed at a funereal pace without being enlivened by music, and eliciting scarcely a cheer. Whenever one who has been a prominent person is accorded a public funeral in England, a band marches at the head of the procession; when, however, there is an occasion for public rejoicing such as was the procession to Westminster Abbey during the celebrations of the Jubilee year, or a Royal wedding, we never have music. Why is this?

"There were thousands of men, women, and children in the streets on Wednesday who were eager to cheer the bride and bridegroom, but the diffidence of the British character is so considerable that few, if any, of them ventured to raise their voices so as to be heard at a distance. This characteristic of the race being recognised, would it not be well, upon any future occasion of the kind, for the authorities to place along the line of the procession small bodies of men paid to cheer vigorously, much as they have a claque to lead the applause at the theatres in France?

"The good temper, the tact, and the uncommon commonsense of the police on duty along the line of the procession excited the admiration of all who observed with what judgment they controlled the vast multitude.

"I do not trust myself to criticise the decorations. Faded scarlet cloth, paper Christmas-tree flags, an absolute disregard of taste, and no attempt at concerted action only contrived to disfigure Piccadilly and St. James's-street. "M.P."

"Sir,—The hot weather which we have experienced in England during the last three or four summers does not appear to have taught Englishmen how to keep their houses cool. I have observed that at all the clubs in the West End, and at the private houses that I have visited during the hot weather, every door and window is opened wide, so as to create a draught, which is supposed to cool the rooms. As a matter of fact, this merely fills the house with hot air, whilst the draughts cause summer colds, that are always inconvenient and frequently dangerous. In every country in the world prudent people close the windows and draw down the blinds to keep the heat out. They air their houses during the hot weather in the early morning and in the evening. Perhaps, now that these obvious precautions are mentioned in print—that is, if you publish my letter—I may be able again to visit my club without being at one and the same time suffocated by the heat and chilled by the draughts. "Anglo-Indian."

Boodles' is one of the oldest institutions of the kind in England, and though the fortunes of the club have varied, it still possesses sufficient historic and intrinsic interest for its future to be a matter of public concern. The recent death of Miss Gayner may affect the future of the club considerably. With regard to this matter I have received the following letter:—

"Mr. Gayner, the proprietor of Boodles', died a few years ago, leaving his large fortune, including the Club, to his three sisters, the two Miss Gayners and Mrs. Greenhill. Mr. Greenhill objected to his wife sharing in carrying on the Club, so that lady was paid her portion, and the Club was carried on by the two maiden sisters, and managed by the elder, who died the other day without leaving a will. Her property has, therefore, to be divided again, notwithstanding the previous settlement, between the remaining Miss Gayner and Mrs. Greenhill. Mr. Greenhill still objecting to his wife being associated with the Club, Miss Gayner will probably not be able to buy her married sister out a second time, and carry on the concern herself.

"There will be a meeting of the family and the managers in September, followed probably by a general meeting of the members of the club.

"It is understood that if the club is to be sold it will be offered first to the members.

"The lease is said to be worth beween £20,000 and £30,000. The furniture and plate are of great value, being as regards some items unique. The cellar was recently valued at £6,000. It contains some very rare wines; very old sherry of the beginning of the century, and some wonderful Hocks and Moselles. There is a quantity of '80 champagne left, and some '65 still Sillery. The '84 wine, which in most clubs has already come to an end, is hardly begun, there being over sixty dozen of one brand alone—Giesler.

"The 'managers' of Boodles' form a species of secret and mysterious tribunal, their names being unknown, whose duties are understood to correspond with those of a committee in an ordinary club. Their proceedings are conducted with the utmost secrecy. Their existence is inferred by the fact that from time to time, at intervals varying from six months to fifteen years, a printed notice, generally affecting dogs or strangers, is put up—'By order of the managers,' and generally appeals to the 'custom of the house existing from time immemorial,' which are the only rules (unwritten) that exist, resembling in that respect the Common Law of England. I have long thought of editing a 'Commentary on the Laws of Boodles.'—White Pebble."

The popular owner of the White Heather, Mr. Whitaker Wright, who bought that magnificent yacht when the German Emperor had to give her up early in the year, has recently purchased Lee Court, near Milford, in Surrey, from Mr. Davison, for £60,000. Mr. Wright is now spending close upon £200,000 in building and in other directions upon the Lee Court Estate, £10,000 of this sum alone being about to be spent in erecting a palm-house.—Believe me to be, very truly yours,

SPORTING NOTES.

ST. FRUSQUIN and Persimmon have been doing no work at Newmarket lately, and both colts will be the better for their rest. They will not commence their training for Doncaster for another fortnight. They are both looking very well indeed. Whatever may be the issue of the Leger, St. Frusquin and Persimmon will again meet a fortnight later in the Jockey Club Stakes of £10,000. If Mr. de Rothschild's colt wins at Doncaster each would carry 9 st. 7 lb., but if he fails to carry off the Leger, then Persimmon would again have to give him 3 lb. It may be hoped that the conditions will be altered if these races are continued, as every winner of £4,000 should be made to carry the extreme penalty. Galeazzo has resumed work since the rain fell at Newmarket, and he is going remarkably well after his long rest. Galeazzo is really one of the best three-year-olds in training, and if anything happened to St. Frusquin he would prove a most dangerous opponent to Persimmon at Doncaster. Galeazzo has an engagement in the £2,000 stake at Kempton Park next month, and if he goes on all right I should think he will win. He has several nice engagements at the Newmarket October Meetings, and will, no doubt, be entered for the Cambridgeshire. Santa Maura, who was backed for the Leger recently, is not likely to stand a preparation, as she has been very groggy since she fell lame when being trained for the Oaks. Roquebrune is another filly of whom great things were expected, but who invariably goes wrong after a week or two of galloping. Ortolo has not a 1,000 to 1 chance at Doncaster, and people who back Knight of the Thistle must be the most infatuated of idiots. Mr. McCalmont's great baby of a colt wants time still, and he will not be seen at his best until next season. If Knight of the Thistle goes for any race as a three-year-old I should think it will be the Jockey Club Stakes, in which he would have a 5 lb. maiden allowance, which would give him a great advantage with the cracks. Bucephalus, who is the Leger fancy of some addleheads, has not a 1,000 to 1 chance for that race. If it was now necessary to back anything for a place I would choose Helm, in the uncertainty which prevails as to Arreau running at Doncaster. Galeazzo figures on the lists at 10 to 1 and 12 to 1 for a place, but I do not see how he could be kept out of being third, at least if he started and was ridden out. Nouveau Riche, who has been talked of as a promising outsider to back for a place, is really, I believe, considerably behind Canterbury Pilgrim. His Reverence could not stay the Doncaster course.

There will not be a large field for the Goodwood Stakes this afternoon, and I fancy that Powick ought to win. Lord Hindlip's horse has been expressly reserved for this race, and he is certainly very well handicapped.

Entries for the Cesarewitch and for the Cambridgeshire are to close on Tuesday next, the conditions being the same as last year. £500 is nominally added to each race, but, inasmuch as an entrance of £5 is imposed on every entry, the sum which the Jockey Club ostensibly give is sure to be got back. These handicaps continue to flourish, in spite of their miserably meagre pecuniary conditions, simply because they are now the only really great betting races of the year. On each of these events speculation continues to be so heavy that a large stake can still be won by dexterous management without any corresponding outlay. These, moreover, are the only events upon which there is still extensive speculation on the part of the public before even the entries have been made. Between twenty and thirty horses have already been well backed for each race. Portmarnock is the great fancy for the Cesarewitch, and next to him come the filly by Saraband out of Busybody, Minstrel Boy, Rockdove (who won last year), Bard of Avon, Pride, Dormeuse, Omnium II., the filly by Salisbury out of Galop, Fatherless, Bonnie Briar, Bowline, Opera Glass, and Telescope. Considering the ignominious failure of the Galop filly in the Oaks (when she ran, moreover, like a non-stayer), it is odd to find her fancied for the Cesarewitch, and Pride has been so thoroughly exposed, and has shown such excellent form that he will certainly be among the top weights, but Mr. Brassey's horse has fallen lame, and it is quite possible that the last has been seen of him on the turf. The favourite for the Cambridgeshire is Indian Queen, who won that race in 1894, and who has done nothing since, but is supposed to be in reserve for another handicap coup. Whittier is another favourite, but this horse (even if he stands training again), cannot stay the course. Quarrel (who is sure to be among the top weights), Avilion, Love Wisely, La Sagesse, Easter Gift, Gazetteer, Marco, The Tup, and St. Michael are the other leading fancies for the Cambridgeshire. Laodamia has been in request, and if she was in her three-year-old form (when she ran a great mare in the race with 8st. 9lb. on her back), it would not be easy to stop her. Marco, who won last year so easily, has been considerably backed. If Mr. Luscombe's horse can be trained again he is sure to win a good race in the autumn. The Cesarewitch will be run on Wednesday, October 14 (just five weeks after the Leger), and the Cambridgeshire on October 28.

The Duke of York Handicap at Kempton Park (run Saturday, October 10) also closes next Tuesday. The value of this race has been reduced from £5,000 to £2,000, but it will no doubt obtain every bit as good an entry as last year. The managers could not be expected to maintain this handicap on its last year's footing, as it then cost the fund £3,100, while in 1894, when the value was £2,000, there was a loss of £860.

Entries close on Tuesday for several important events at Doncaster, including the Great Yorkshire Handicap of £1,300, the Portland Plate of £500, the Prince of Wales's Nursery of £1,000, and the Doncaster Cup of £600.

Gulistan has been struck out of his Goodwood engagement because Mr. L. de Rothschild intends to run him for the Baden Grand Prize, on August 27. Lord Drummond and The Owl have also been left in for that race, which is well worth winning, as its value is £4,000, besides a gold cup of the value of £500. I wonder that English owners do not more generally patronise the principal events at Baden, for they are most generously endowed, and the opposition is not formidable as a rule. Next year there is a three-year-old stake of £2,900, for which only three English horses have accepted, one by Mr. de Rothschild's smart colt Brigg, while the others are owned by the Prince of Wales and Lord Durham respectively. The only English entries for next year's Grand Prize are Galeazzo, Lord Hervey, and the Prince of Wales's dark colt St. Leonards.

Victor Wild is all right again, and he is to be trained for the Prix du Conseil Municipal, which is run at Longchamps on the Sunday before the Cesarewitch, and if he comes to the post all right he will probably win the rich stake.

This year's Eclipse Stakes has cost the Sandown Park fund £1,782, which is a somewhat doleful result, considering that last year only £1,081 had to be thus contributed, while in 1894 the added money was £810: but in 1893 there was a surplus of £617, while in 1892 no less a sum than £1,831 had to be added in order to make up the promised £10,000. The National Breeders' Produce Stakes of £5,000 resulted in a surplus of £82 in 1892, while in 1893 the added money was £1,916; but in 1894 only £1,047 was required, and in 1895 there was a surplus of £213. To this year's race £613 had to be added. It is evidently impossible to predict how these big subscription stakes will ever turn out, but it is certain that they are more costly now than when they were originally started, as owners have become so much more sharp in looking after their forfeits. Such events are fearfully expensive to an owner who engages his animals generously.

When writing about the Liverpool Cup I expressed the opinion that anything that could beat Canterbury Pilgrim would win, and the issue of the race was the easy victory of Lord Derby's filly, whose Oaks trial signified Nouveau

Riche in this handicap at a ridiculous weight, and she was "off" when she was defeated for the Coronation Stakes at Ascot. Lord Derby's victory was, of course, received with great enthusiasm at his home meeting, and it was a most satisfactory result of the race, for his colours are thoroughly trusted by the public, and therefore very popular. Paris III., who was heavily backed, had no pretension to give the winner of the Oaks 7 lb. more than weight for age; and Spook, who was also a great tip, is not a nice colt for a boy to ride. Dule Tree was unlucky not to be placed. The American horse, Santa Anita, was very heavily backed, but ran in a most contemptible fashion. Regret, of course, had a difficulty in winning the £2,500 three-year-old stakes, yet he had nothing to beat, and the race was an ignominious failure, there being only four starters, with an entry of 109, while 5 to 1 was laid on the Duke of Westminster's colt, who figures nominally at 12 to 1 in the Leger betting, but no creature fit to be at large would take ten times that price, as he could no more stay the Doncaster course than fly. The other three-year-old race at Liverpool fell to Shaddock. I see it is asserted that the colt is 10 lb. inferior to Regret. This may be the case over a mile, but Shaddock would win at even weights over the Leger course.

There was a splendid finish for the £2,000 two-year-old race at Liverpool, Brigg winning by a head, while there was a dead heat for second place between Galtee More and Glencally. Inasmuch as Brigg was in receipt of only 2 lb. from Galtee More, it is clear that Mr. Gubbins's colt is not the superlative flyer that was supposed after his victory at Stockbridge. Glencally had 8 lb. the best of the weights with Galtee More, and he ought to have won if there had been any justification for the trumpeting of which he has been the subject. Glencally is a heart-breaking beast, for this is the third rich stake for which he has been beaten by a head since his successful début at Chester. On Thursday, however, he made some amends for these tragical reverses by winning the Mersey Stakes.

Now that Pride has been scratched, I cannot see anything in the Goodwood Cup entry that is likely to beat Count Schomberg, with his advantage in the weights. Portmarnock is not expected to show in winning form before the autumn.

Lord Durham's colt Hellebore, by Peter Flower out of Satanella, is a tip for the Prince of Wales's Sweepstakes, which is a race worth winning, as its value is £2,800. Having Fiorini in the stable, Lord Durham can get an accurate line of the two-year-old form, but his colt will have to be smart to defeat Velasquez, although he has the advantage of a 5 lb. breeding allowance.

I am told that Rampion will win the Chesterfield Cup on Friday, and Helm ought to secure the Nassau Stakes, although she has so much the worst of the weights with Miss Fraser and other fillies.

Next week there will be racing at Hurst Park (a Bank Holiday orgie), Ripon, Brighton, and Lewes, and, of course, the best sport will be at the Sussex meetings, where there are sure to be large fields and plenty of betting. Lord Derby's Pace Egger and Mr. Pilkington's Glencally seem to be the best pair in the Corporation Plate at Brighton; but the Astley Stakes at Lewes will be the most important two-year-old race of the week, and it may be won by Blue Water or Brigg.

Velasquez has been backed for next year's Derby, but his admirers would do well to wait until after the Newmarket October meetings, as we have not yet seen half of the season's two-year-olds, and there are certain animals at Kingsclere (notably Orelio and Guernsey) of which great things are expected. The New Stakes form has not come out well since Ascot. Velasquez is an exceedingly handsome colt, and he has capital legs. After his race to-morrow Velasquez will no doubt be reserved for the Champagne Stakes at Doncaster, as there are no penalties in that race, which is a mistake with a two-year-old event run in September. When the conditions of next year's Champagne Stakes are drawn out there should be a penalty of 7 lb. for winners of £500 and upwards, and 10 lb. for any winner of £1,000.

Stag-hunting on Exmoor is to begin earlier than usual this year, as the Devon and Somerset pack will have their first meet next Wednesday at Cloutsham.

Lord Macclesfield was a fine sportsman of the old school. As a four-in-hand whip and as a judge of horses he was unrivalled. Lord Macclesfield hunted the South Oxfordshire country with great success for twenty-seven years. He showed excellent sport, and there never was a better nor more fearless rider. He also thoroughly understood every branch of his business as M.F.H., and no hunt ever had a more courteous and considerate ruler. It gave many of his friends a start to see him gallop down hill at a racing pace, but he was a consummate rider. It should be added that he was a most liberal and considerate landlord, and he was very popular among all classes in Oxfordshire.

It is so easy to criticise, but some of those who watched the conclusion of the game between the Australians and the M.C.C. thought that the last wicket of the Colonials was given rather a free hand in the matter of run-making. It was a grand idea to put Gunn on to bowl. Hill had been sticking at 49, and Trumble was playing a regular stonewall game. The mob began to jeer, but Gunn went on, and it yelled with delight. Four runs in half an hour did not please a Saturday crowd. Now there would be hitting. But they were mistaken. Trumble poked about, and got bowled. Hill, who had played fairly freely and whose strokes on the leg side were extremely pretty, went out and hit the ball full-pitch to Gunn. Kelly did likewise to Stoddart, but then came Jones and McKibbin, and the second-class bats had a good time. The lobs had no terrors for them, and they hit merrily until Woodcock sent McKibbin's stump flying out of the ground. Probably Attewell instead of Gunn would have saved both time and runs. As it was the last wicket saved the game. Very pretty indeed was Stoddart's innings, and the way he drove Jones both to the on and off was grand. Both MacLaren and Ranjitsinhji were out to Trumble in the same way. They each tried to put a ball round to leg and failed. After all, Trott was the hero of the match. In both innings he played a careful game, although he was fortunate enough to find in Board a merciful wicket keeper.

There is a good deal of nonsense being written about the final of the three test matches. People want it played out to the end, however long it may take. This sort of cricket does not do in this country. On the whole, the Australians are certainly slow scorers, and their methods would soon ruin the game. Three days are quite long enough to settle the question of supremacy, and, if it cannot be done in that time, let it remain in abeyance. As for the visitors, if they choose to play for their averages instead of playing to win, that is their affair, and so much the better for their opponents.

No one would insult the Catford ground by calling it a first-class cricket pitch, and the ardent supporters of Surrey would like to see some other county, Yorkshire for preference, taking their chance on it. At the same time, the pitch alone does not account for the miserable show made by Surrey in their first innings. They have shaped this year too much like a team that can only play on a good fast wicket. Martin, the Kent bowler, well deserved the subscription that was raised for him on the ground. Some brisk hitting by Key and Lohmann and good bowling by Abel and Richardson had enabled Surrey to revenge themselves on Middlesex earlier in the week when Stoddart came out as a bowler. Soar's bowling accounted for the downfall of Essex in their match with Hants, but they pulled themselves together against Derbyshire, and scored a fairly even draw. Bonnor seems likely to develop into a very useful bat. Now that Jackson and Brown have returned, the Yorkshire team has again been victorious. The Somerset bats were all out of form, and they could do nothing with Peel's bowling, who was also very deadly against Lancashire. They had not Roe's help, whose batting was extremely useful against Kent, in which match Livesay scored well, and Shine, the Cambridge bowler, was very successful. Indeed, he has been so useful to his county that it is wonderful that more use was not made of him in the University match. Kent certainly had a successful week, and it is to be hoped their present run of luck will last during the Canterbury week.

A correspondent wants to know why an innings cannot be closed at any time by the remaining batsmen not going in. In the rules there is nothing to prevent such a course, and it is peculiar that no one has ever made the experiment. If a man is absent or hurt he cannot bat, and the only point is that the opposing captain could object to those who did not bat going out to field, on the ground that as they had not batted they had declined to take part in the game. Whether or not this would be a valid objection must be left for those learned in the laws of cricket to determine.

The Royal St. George's Y.C. Regatta at Kingston was most successful. On the first day there was good, steady, smooth, water breeze, and on the second day, although there was rain and the wind a bit unsteady, it never dropped away until the finish. Under the circumstances, the big cutters could not have had a fairer test. Of course Meteor won, but the feature of the racing was that Ailsa on both occasions beat Britannia for second place. In the other classes Isolde and Carina came out even, each winning a race, and Saint on both occasions beat Niagara with ease.

It is almost a formality to say that Mr. A. J. Chitty admirably managed the Lawn Tennis Championship at Wimbledon. It was unfortunate that Baddeley had been severely indisposed just before the final. It is only too usual to make excuses for the defeat of champions. But this is only a statement of fact, and every man must take the chance of good or bad health. Invalids cannot be champions. At the same time it was rough luck, and Baddeley failed to last out against Mahony, who well deserved to win, for he had had a hard fight to get his place. In the Ladies, Mrs. Pickering was decidedly disappointing against Miss Cooper, who had a much easier task than when they met earlier in the year. The winner had more nerve, and this probably had a good deal to do with the result. Perhaps the best play was seen in the Doubles, when the Allens were beaten by Doherty and Goodbody. All four are Cambridge men, and on their form in that round the latter pair ought to have beaten the Baddeleys in the final. Why are the champions only called on to play one round unless it be for gate purposes. It is surely unfair on the other competitors that they should have the wear and tear of the whole tournament and then have to play the person who, if there is anything in the title, should be best able to stand the strain.

Goodness only knows where the pleasure or profit comes in for amateurs in doing a ride for twenty-four hours on a bicycle. However, both amateurs and professionals have been indulging in these pursuits, and the former—the winner being Goodwin—cut all records for amateurs. The "pros" made a poor show, and finished at a slow crawl. Unless professionals improve in their displays, they will soon cease to "draw"; while these long races are utterly valueless and absurd. They are an obvious strain on the riders, whose constitutions must in many cases eventually suffer. Much more interesting was the tandem record for an hour, when over thirty-five miles and a half was done by Chase and Walters. There is no truth in the report that they have been engaged by any railway in Kent as substitutes for an express engine.

Molesey Regatta was as crowded as ever, and fortunately the rain held off. There was quite an excitement when Guinness was upset by Beddington in the sculls, but he won the final all right, as the heat was given him on a foul. Forrester at last won his junior sculls, though Ross (Thames) ought to have beaten him in his heat. Cooper's Hill just beat Kensington in the Thames eights, the latter having to row the final in less than an hour after their heat. It was a pity the programme was not better arranged. The senior pairs were easily won by Kingston, and Thames continued its successful career by clearing off the other senior events. The School of Mines did very well to win both the junior eights and fours.

MAMMON.

From MOSES MOSS to BENJAMIN BOSS.

Sunday.

My dear Ben,—Considering that we are now, as our French neighbours call it, en pleine saison morte, the state of affairs on the Stock Exchange during the past week cannot be viewed as discouraging. At all events, although everybody and their wives are hurrying off to their holiday haunts, there are plenty of surplus funds left in the market, and the hunger for gilt-edged stocks was again last week shown by the rush of investors for the Burma Railway issue made by Messrs. Rothschild under the guarantee of the Indian Government. The subscriptions are estimated at twenty times the amount of the capital.

When Will the Boom Come?

The plethora of money thus again illustrated, and the low rates prevailing, undoubtedly point to great activity in the course of the autumn, when the holiday-makers return, and a more general upward movement would not then be surprising. It will hardly touch the Yankee market, which must necessarily remain in an unsettled condition until the fate of the Presidential election is decided in December. At best a see-saw movement can therefore be looked for in this section. Home Railway stocks bid fair to retain their hold upon the favour of investors, and the additional million or more of dividends which is about to be paid to holders, as compared with the first half of 1895, is certain to bring fresh capital into this department, the more so as traffics continue to show most favourably. A hitch might perhaps be caused by renewed trouble with the coal-miners, but there are still hopes that matters will be adjusted. It would, indeed, be a thousand pities if the present distinct improvement in trade were to be checked by a strike, which would be quite as disastrous for the miners as for the coal-owners and business men generally. For the boom, if boom there is to be, we must, however, chiefly look to the Mining market. It must be admitted that the Kaffir Circus is not at present in a condition indicating, on the face of it, the probability of a boom. Yet circumstances closely affecting South African mines are gradually improving, as shown by the initiation of reforms on the part of the Transvaal Government, and by the disposition of the whilom Reform leaders to put their shoulders to the wheel in actual work. From this point of view the decision of Mr. John Hays Hammond to renew his engagement with the Consolidated Goldfields, is a favourable point. The great financiers connected with the South African market are apparently doing nothing, and those amongst them connected with the Jameson raid are no doubt awaiting the result of the Jameson trial, and better news from Rhodesia. Such adverse features will eventually disappear, and I am still of opinion that the advance will be all the sharper the longer the present dulness and sagging movement last. I refer, of course, more especially to the sound Transvaal gold and land properties as worthy of attention. A market which is already showing unmistakable signs of a coming boom is that for West Australian gold mines. The distinct rally in the Whitaker Wright group, and the sensational advance in Lake View Consols, coupled with the still more sensational news concerning the wealth of gold discovered in this mine, are highly encouraging features. The falling into line of a number of new mines with large crushings confirms the opinion which I have expressed for some time, of the richness and permanence of the West Australian goldfields, and in due time we shall, therefore, see a regular rush for the good properties, and a corresponding upward movement in prices. The New Zealand section has been quiet, the excessive promotion of new Companies making investors shy, and, considering the very doubtful quality of some of the new ventures, this is a salutary development. Indian mines have now and again shown signs of growing animation, and I quite expect that the next favourable news from the Colar goldfield will bring about a fresh rise. I look for a revival in the Cycle market when, in a week or two, the New French Dunlop Company sees the light of day. With reference to the numerous Industrial Companies which are now being rushed forward by promoters, the greatest discrimination should be shown, as nine-tenths of these are over-capitalised or doubtful, and highly speculative.

More Home Railway Dividends.

Dividend announcements are following each other rapidly in the Home Railway market, and I have now to chronicle two of the "Heavy" distributions, viz., those of the North-Eastern and Midland. Both were exactly in accordance with my forecast, and quite up to market expectations. The Midland dividend—at the rate of 5 per cent. per annum, with £18,000 forward, as against 4 per cent., with £13,000 carried forward for the corresponding half of 1895—caused a moderate improvement. That of the North-Eastern, at the rate of 5½ per cent., against 4½ per cent. last year, was not altogether up to the anticipations of some rather sanguine operators, and the price of the stock has eased off; but if the North Western and Great Western dividends about to be announced should be in the same proportion, we may expect the Home Railway market to gather fresh strength, more especially as there has been a good deal of profit-taking, and the account should, therefore, be of moderate dimensions only. The South-Western dividend, at the rate of 5 per cent., against 4½ per cent. last year, was not considered satisfactory, a better result having been looked for owing to the large traffic increase. On the other hand, the Metropolitan District dividend, at the rate of 3½ per cent. on the Preference stock, against 3 per cent. last year, was viewed favourably; and the fact that the Chatham Company pays, for the second time in its history, the full 4½ per cent. on the Arbitration Prefs. was also satisfactory, although the amount carried forward disappointed some. It is curious that, notwithstanding the issue of a most favourable report by the South-Eastern Directors, Dover "A" should have reacted. The reduction of the ratio of expenditure to gross receipts from 57·5 per cent. in the first half of 1895 to 55·4, is distinctly encouraging, and there is now little doubt that a considerably increased dividend may also be looked for in the current half-year. Under all the circumstances Dover "A" at 102 are a very promising speculative purchase. Great Eastern have hardened to 103⅞, which seems to be quite high enough when compared with Dover "A." Brighton "A" have maintained themselves at 184¾, and are good value in view of the excellent traffics of the line. As I anticipated, the traffics of the Scotch lines have picked up considerably, in view of the Glasgow Fair, and the Caledonian shows an increase of £14,225, and the North British one of £14,016. These returns bring up the increases for the twenty-five weeks to £98,884 and £91,605 respectively. This is even better than had been anticipated, and I consider that both Caledonian Deferred ("Coras") and North British Deferred at present prices are a very tempting purchase, more especially the latter.

Yankee Rails Still Unsettled.

There has been a recovery in the American market from the lowest points touched last Monday, and at one time a good deal of strength was shown owing to the action of New York banks in strengthening the gold reserve of the Treasury. Their efforts, and those of Messrs. J. P. Morgan & Co., and of other Anglo-American houses, were distinctly praiseworthy and patriotic. But they cannot affect the final result, which depends entirely upon the result of the Presidential election. The news with reference to the chances of the different parties varies from day to day, and one day we are told that the Democrats will all combine, and that the Populists will support them in carrying the silver "Plank," while next day rumours reach us that the Democratic party is in a state of disintegration, and that one wing of the party is as strongly in favour of maintaining the gold standard as the other is uncompromisingly opposed to gold and in favour of free and unlimited coinage of silver. Unfortunately this silver craze has obtained a strong hold on the minds of numbers of people in the States, who regard it as the exclusive remedy for that great variety of economic maladies which have been current in that country during late years; while the chief strength of the movement finds its home in the farming sections, where the fall of prices has been a perpetual worry for years. I hope and trust that wiser counsels will prevail, and that the sound money men will carry the day. As Messrs. John H. Davis & Co., leading New York bankers, put it very cogently, it is well that the lines in the contest are sharply drawn; it is to be gold and national credit, or silver and national humiliation and disaster. It is no time for apathy or indifference. Every capitalist, every business man, every labourer who works for wages, every depositor in a savings bank, every person for whose benefit a life has been assured, owes it to himself as well as to his country to make the four months' period one of unremitting work in favour of sound money upon a gold standard. Messrs. Davis finally point to the startling shrinkage which has taken place of late in the market price of the leading stocks dealt in on the New York Stock Exchange, the total value of twenty-nine listed securities having fallen almost 60,000,000 dols. The total stock of the Chicago, Burlington, and Quincy is worth over 6,000,000 dols. less than it was a few weeks ago; of Atchison, over 5,000,000 dols.; of the Southern Railway, over 4,000,000 dols.; of Western Union, nearly 3,000,000 dols.; of Manhattan, over 2,000,000 dols.; of New Jersey Central, over 1,500,000 dols.; of Chicago Gas, about 2,000,000 dols.; of American Sugar Refining, about 6,000,000 dols. less; and so on through the list. The firm believe, however, that the worst has been seen; that stocks and bonds of intrinsic merit are a purchase now; that by the end of the year the silver craze will have subsided through the verdict of the American people at the polls; and that before two years have gone by even those who are now most vociferous in calling for free silver coinage will have occasion to rejoice that the delusion was as short-lived as it was intense. With reference to the dimensions of the "Bear" account, some of my New York contemporaries are making all manner of guesses, from insignificant figures up to 200,000 shares. As far as the so-called "loan crowd" is a reflection of the size of the short account, it would indicate that the latter is not considerable, as stocks can be borrowed at money rates. Experience has shown that there is no method of accurately determining how extensive the short interest may be, as private borrowing of stocks both in the New York market and by cable renders it impossible so to do. In the present instance it seems reasonably safe to assume that the short interest is not unusually large—that is, considering the severe slump of the last few weeks. Wall-street is still very much exercised over the London purchases, which were effected some time ago, and they are having quite a crow over the operations of the South African clique of Angel Court fame; but the latter would be but a sorry support to lean on in case of a further slump; while if the Kaffir Circus were to boom again they would no doubt promptly rush out of Yankee Rails into their own favourites. As far as can at present be gathered we shall continue to have a see-saw movement with occasional slumps and sharp rallies, until the political atmosphere clears, and the result of the Presidential election can be more thoroughly gauged. By the way, it might be as well to point out that gilt-edged American Railroad bonds, payable as to capital and interest in gold, should not be affected by an adverse result, and I may mention that only gold bonds have all along been recommended by me. Canadian Pacifics, after recovering, have eased off again in sympathy with American Rails, and Grand Trunks have been fairly steady, although also in their case the unsettled state of the American market has prevented any improvement.

Foreigners and South Americans.

In the Foreign market the chief event has been the issue of the new Russian loan, which is, however, confined to France, Germany, Holland, Belgium, and Russia. It was bound to be placed, but, even if subscriptions had been invited in this country, very little interest would have been taken in it here. Some withdrawals of gold from the open market to Paris were the result, but the movement has not assumed any large proportions; and in case of any strong demand the United States will, no doubt, be drawn upon for supplies. There has not, however, been any enthusiasm over the Russian loan this time, the premium at which it is quoted being but small. Italians and Spanish have moved within narrow limits, and Turks have been flat, as the news both from Crete and Macedonia is unsatisfactory. Very little movement may at present be expected in interbourse securities, owing to the absence of many operators from the Continental Bourses. The gold premium in Buenos Ayres keeps remarkably steady, and Argentine Government stocks have maintained quotations. There is a fair prospect of the Argentine Unification scheme becoming law, although some amendments have yet to be discussed. Amongst these there is one to which the Chamber of Deputies have agreed, at the request of the representative of Entre Rios, that the National Government should make good any deficiency where one or the other of the Provinces does not hold the 65 per cent. of its debt in Four and a Half per Cent. Internal Gold bonds. Prospects of the Provincial bondholders, and especially of those of the Province of Buenos Ayres, are distinctly more favourable, and have, as I stated last week, resulted in higher quotations of the bonds. Altogether, the advance which has now been established in Argentine National and Provincial Government bonds since the years of the crisis has assumed very large proportions, as will be gathered from the following comparative table:—

—	Lowest in 1891.	Lowest in 1893.	Lowest in 1895.	Price on Jan. 2, 1896.	Present Price.
Argentine, 1884	29	33¼	39	45	60
Do. 1886	52½	58⅛	62½	69	82
Do. Funding ...	47	59½	66	73	83½
Do. 4½ % Sterling	27¼	35	39½	46	56
Cedulas "B"	14	24	24¼	26	32
Buenos Ayres, 1882-6 ...	27	23	20	28½	44
Entre Rios, 1886-8 ...	18¾	31	20	29	40
Santa Fé, 1883-4	18⅛	14½	18⅛	25½	40

The differences are, of course, greatest compared with the lowest prices touched in 1891; but there has also been a marked appreciation since the commencement of this year, the 1886 Loan having advanced 13 points, the Funding Loan 11, and Buenos Ayres Provincial bonds 16. It is a source of great gratification to me that, when all the financial scribes advised holders to get out of their stocks, and especially during the dullest period, I strongly urged my readers to stick tight to their holdings. For the patience then shown they are now richly rewarded. Uruguay bonds have displayed a much stronger tone, the old loan having at one time improved to 51, while there has been a very considerable demand for the new loan. Considering the large interest which many of the leading financial houses now hold in Uruguay bonds, I am strongly of opinion that at a given moment a sharp advance will be engineered, which would, moreover, be justified by the position. A settlement has now been granted on the London Stock Exchange for the new Uruguay bonds for August 6. Brazilian and Chilian bonds have been quiet, but Mexican Sixes have, as usual, shown a firm front. Absolutely no interest is being taken in the stocks of the South and Central American Republics, which are at present under the cloud of default.

Stagnation in the Kaffir Circus.

The Kaffir Circus is at present in a state of suspended animation. The big financiers are allowing matters to drift, and it is difficult to see what they could do to restore animation while the holiday season is in full swing, and so many untoward influences have yet to pass away. I have repeatedly explained that there is no earthly reason why the difficulties of the Chartered Company, and the trouble in Rhodesia, should affect Transvaal mining enterprises. Yet such is undoubtedly the fact, owing perhaps chiefly to the connection of many of the men prominently engaged in them with the Chartered Company's fortunes. The Jameson trial is also a disturbing element. On the other hand it is quite possible that the July output of the Witwatersrand mines may prove very favourable, in which case it would probably give an impulse to the Kaffir Circus. Even as regards the Chartered Company, I have not the slightest doubt that, in view of the powerful interests concerned, we may at any time, on the receipt of news of a victory in Matabeleland or Mashonaland, witness an attempt to put prices up. It is a well-known fact that at the end of August a number of options in Chartered shares are maturing, and active steps will no doubt be taken by those interested to avail themselves of any favourable developments for the purpose of a market rig in the shares. That the debentures would benefit from the same circumstance is obvious. At the present settlement, however, quite a shake-out has been caused by the withdrawal of a million sterling from the market by Messrs. Wernher, Beit, & Co. Why the firm should have chosen this critical period for such a step is not quite apparent, but a slump in the stocks in which they are chiefly interested—viz., Chartered, Consolidated Goldfields, and Rand Mines, Limited—has been the inevitable result. As regards the position in the Transvaal, all accounts are to the effect that the native labour trouble has passed away. The Transvaal Government is probably awaiting the issue of the Jameson trial to take any further measures in the direction of reform; and there have also been current certain rumours that in case the decision does not meet with the approval of the Boers there may be further trouble with reference to the Suzerainty. It boots not to speculate on such developments, but the favourable facts bearing upon the mining industry in the Transvaal, viz., growing abundance of labour, and the proportionate reduction in cost, reduction of railway rates, and the passing of the liquor restriction Bill, cannot be denied. Some time ago it was stated that Mr. John Hays Hammond, who had done so much on his first appearance in South Africa to ensure the satisfactory development of the Barnato mines, would not return to the scene of his labours. The fact that he has again engaged himself for three years to the Consolidated Goldfields tends to show that he has with other Reform leaders made up his mind to accept the inevitable, and will in future devote himself to the development of the mining industry. It also shows that he has a full belief in its future, especially as he appears to have accepted terms which are dependent upon results. I still maintain the view that sound Witwatersrand mining properties should be borne in mind in the first instance by investors. Their position can be so accurately gauged that they are no longer speculative counters. Then follow the leading land Companies, some of which are exceedingly promising. Finally, the shares of Lydenburg and Barberton Companies are likely to receive a great deal of attention in the near future. I need not particularise as regards the Witwatersrand shares, which appear to me most promising. It is easy enough to make a selection amongst substantial mines of the Barnato and Robinson groups, say—amongst the former, New Primrose, Glencairn, Buffelsdoorn, Rietfontein, Johannesburg Consolidated Investment, Barnato Banks, and Barnato Consols. Again, in the Robinson group, Langlaagte Estate and Randfontein are certain to maintain and improve their positions. Amongst Land shares Oceana and Austral-Africans, in view of the amalgamation, are most promising, and so are Mozambique shares, in view of the coming combination with the Companhia da Zambesia. Amongst the Lydenburg properties Lydenburg Goldfields appear to me likely to lead the way; but Lydenburg Estates are also promising. A new Transvaal Mining Company is a novelty in these times; at all events, as far as the issue of the same in London is concerned. I refer to the Cataract Barberton Gold Mining Company, Limited, which is formed with a capital of £250,000 in £1 shares, for the purpose of working and developing a property in the Barberton district of the Transvaal, known as the Waterfall Reef, and consisting, according to the prospectus, of 150 claims, double banked, giving a length of nearly 3,880 yards, or over two miles along the line of the reefs. This is, at all events, no hole-and-corner flotation, as are so many of the concerns registered in the Transvaal only; and the reefs are favourably reported upon by well-known engineers. The average value, according to the experts' reports of the reefs, varies from 15 dwt. to 1 oz. 7 dwt. per ton, as regards No. 1 reef; while although No. 2 reef has only been proved on the surface to give an average of about 5 dwt. to the ton, there is a prospect of its becoming richer in depth. A favourable point about the prospectus is that the Directors have agreed not to go to allotment unless a minimum of £20,000 is provided for working capital, while 50,000 shares are held in reserve in order to provide further working capital for the acquisition of full permanent plant, &c. The issue is made by the Transvaal Exploring Company, a Company which holds a good many valuable interests in the Transvaal, and the shares of which, at present quoted at from 1 to 1⅛, will no doubt in the case of a revival in the Kaffir Circus reach a higher level. I still hold a favourable opinion of Woodstock (Transvaal) shares, now quoted at 1⅝ to 1¾; and I see no reason for altering my opinion of Niekerk, which stand at 1¼. The result of the first Midas Estate crushing is not so favourable as had previously been stated from an unauthorised source. The total yield is only 1,438 oz., against 1,741 oz., as previously announced, and the yield is but 12 dwt. against 25 dwt., which makes all the difference, and does not constitute the Midas Estate a tempting concern. The strike in the Robinson Deep is a favourable feature; but I protest against its being utilised for the purpose of rigging all the other deep-level properties. The Meyer and Charlton Directors have decided not to distribute any of the half-year's profits. This has been a much over-rated mine, and, as the Citizen puts it in a review of its history, the present experience of the Company shows how foolish it is not to make any allowances for such contingencies as dykes and reduction in the value of the ore. I also feel inclined to agree with my contemporary that, although Meyer and Charlton have fallen from 7 to 5⅝ during the last three months, the decline will have to be much more substantial before a purchase would be warranted, a fair value of the shares being £4. The issue of the first annual report of the Eastern Investment Corporation discloses the fact not hitherto known that its chief interests are in South Africa. The net assets, according to the accounts, stand at £1,030,069, while the issued capital is £750,000; but all depends, of course, upon the quality of the assets which is not determinable at present. I wonder whether Sir Edgar Vincent is still interested in this concern? The Central Buffelsdoorn has, according to a circular just issued, suspended operations, as the result of the first borings has not proved satisfactory; but is the case so hopeless that a second borehole should not be made? I should like to know who are the people behind the South African Argosy Association, which was established last October? Diamond shares have receded with the rest of the South African market, and De Beers are down to 29⅜, New Jagersfontein to 10⅞. Leicester Diamond shares, however, have remained firm, and so have the shares of the new Consolidated Leicester Diamond Company. At the extraordinary general meeting of the Leicester Diamond Company, held in Kimberley on the 15th inst., the amalgamation of this Company with the Consolidated Leicester D.M. Company was agreed to. The new Company will start with a working capital of £100,000, of which a portion has been subscribed at £2 per share; and the amalgamation being a promising one, an advance in the shares would be fully justified.

THE WHITAKER WRIGHT GROUP TO THE FRONT.

I have for several weeks, during the reaction in Westralians, advised the purchase of shares in the group of the West Australian Exploring and Finance and London and Globe Finance Corporations, and more particularly of the shares of these two parent companies, also Lake View Consols, Hannan's Golden Group, and Hannan's Golden Treasure. All who have bought shares on the recent slump have done well, as Globes and Explorings have each advanced about ½, and Lake View Consols are at this writing 6¾ bid. In regard to the Lake View Consols, Mr. Callahan, the new superintendent, after making a searching examination of the property, confirms Mr. Kaufman's opinion in every respect, and states that "there is every reason to believe that it is the biggest mine in Western Australia, the lowest level demonstrating that there is no doubt that it eclipses everything in his experience in extent and richness." Those who ought to know predict that these shares will double their present market price within the next three months. I again advise the purchase of Hannan's Golden Groups and Hannan's Golden Treasures, from which properties the most favourable reports are coming to hand, and it cannot be long before they score a material advance, which their position in the wonderful Hannan's Goldfield fully justifies. It is reported with regard to the Mainland Consols that the mill is running on high grade ore, and that the return for the current month will be larger than last month. I strongly advise the purchase of the shares of the London and Globe and West Australian Exploring and Finance, it being reported from responsible sources that the profits of these Companies this year are equal to four times the capital of the Corporation. When all the particulars are officially known, I cannot see how the shares can fail to greatly advance in market value. The shares of the Austin Friars Syndicate (associated with the above group) should also be bought now. I may add in conclusion that Mr. Haggard, one of the Directors, has returned from New Zealand with the highest opinion of the properties controlled by this Syndicate, especially the Thames Hauraki.

GOLDEN WEST AUSTRALIA.

The fact that the Whitaker Wright group is bracing up, and that the Lake View Consols Mine is proving so wonderfully rich, cannot fail to favourably affect the whole of the West Australian market. To this influence must be added the receipt of satisfactory first crushings from a number of new mines, which go far to prove the great richness of the goldfields in this Colony. Other mines will also contribute first returns to the output in the near future, and it would be strange indeed if these actual results would not weigh much with the public. Amongst such recent developments I may mention the second crushing on the Glenloth lease of the Mackenzie Mining Company of 104 tons for 176 oz., the tailings assaying 15 dwt., so that the return is estimated at 2 oz. 9 dwt. to the ton, an improvement of 6 dwt. on the first crushing. With reference to the Great Boulder Main Reef crushing of 117 tons for 379 oz., it is now announced that the tailings contain 2 oz., bringing up the total to the value estimated before crushing, viz., 5 oz. The Menzies Crusoe had a crushing of 185 tons for 507 oz., the Menzies Gold Reefs one of 175 tons for 357 oz. The Edjudina, Hit or Miss, and Golden Arrow are about to commence crushing. A moderate reaction has occurred in West Australian Joint-Stock Trust shares to 3½ premium, but when in a week or two the Northern Territories Company is issued, a recovery is probable in these and in other shares of the group. I am glad to learn that Mr. Allan Stoneham is recovering from his indisposition. West Australian Goldfields are quoted at $9\frac{3}{8}$, and it is understood that the Directors' report and accounts of the Hampton Plains will shortly be issued. Hannan's Brownhill shares have recovered to $5\frac{1}{16}$. I have made it my business to inquire into the trouble with reference to the machinery, and from what I can learn the only hitch is now that with regard to the treatment of the slimes, of which there is a very large proportion. Pressure of space does not permit me to enter more completely into this matter to-day, but from what I gather shareholders must not just yet anticipate more than the present crushings from about 200 tons. When the new appliances for treating the slimes are completed, however, they will probably in three months' time obtain returns from 600 to 700 tons of ore, and everything seems to point to the prospect that eventually this dry-crushing process will prove a success. This would undoubtedly be a very important circumstance for the whole of the West Australian goldfields, where water will always be wanted, considering the enormous extent to which mining work will eventually be carried on there. The issue by the Great Boulder Proprietary of the Great Boulder Junction Reefs, referred to last week, appears to have been received favourably, and the shares are stated to have been dealt in at $\frac{1}{8}$ to $\frac{1}{4}$ premium. The shares in the Hannan's Empress Gold Mining and Development Company have been in some request. At the statutory meeting of the Hannan's Empress Gold Mining and Development Company, Limited, very favourable statements were made by the chairman, according to which there is a very large lode from 50 ft. to 80 ft. wide in places, of which some 20 ft. is expected to be found payable. Recent development is represented as having been very satisfactory by the manager, who states that gold is visible in certain portions, and that good gold is obtained from dollying in other parts. King of the West shares have been in demand at $2\frac{1}{4}$. According to the latest mail reports from the manager, Mr. Walter Burrell, they are driving through stone showing fine gold, and the width of the reef in No. 2 shaft, at a depth of 58 ft., is 14 ft. The manager also states that the mine is looking first-class. Hannan's Lode shares are quoted $1\frac{1}{4}$, with a considerable amount of dealings. According to cable advices from the managers, Messrs. Colin J. McCulloch & Co., of Kalgoorlie, the No. 1 shaft is now 25 ft. down, and the No. 2 shaft 17 ft. down. The managers add that they can put out gold. Gladiators have been in demand at 1 to $1\frac{1}{8}$, the news from this mine being very promising. Professor Nicholas wrote on June 10, 1896:—"The shoot of gold is pitching deeper, going east in No. 5 shaft. The reef is evidently 15 ft. thick, for the wall on the north side has not yet been reached in cross-cutting the reef, which also contains galena and pyrites. The new main shaft is being sunk at good speed. It is 70 ft. deep. A new leader of quartz has just been discovered in the 'Barrier Queen' lease in the bottom of the shaft, which will be broken into during my visit in the next week." The following telegram has been received from the mine manager at Coolgardie of the Rome Consolidated Mines, Limited:—"Have had samples assayed with following result: No. 1 assay of ore from 130 ft. level, 4 oz. of gold per ton. No. 2, New shaft, from 50 ft. level, 3 oz. 5 dwt. of gold per ton. Recommend sinking the vertical shaft in order to further develop reef." Burbank's Birthday Gift have been dealt in at $1\frac{3}{4}$, and there appears to be every prospect of the shares in the new Burbank's Consols, now quoted 1 to $1\frac{1}{4}$, following in the wake of the older Company. Burbank's North, too, are promising well, the shares having been bought in some quantity at $1\frac{1}{4}$. West Australian Gold Concessions have remained firm at $1\frac{3}{4}$, notwithstanding the agitation concerning the Bailey's West, which by some is attributed to "Bears" of the Concessions. On the Hannan's Golden Dyke property of the latter Company highly auriferous ore has been struck. Amongst the shares which have suffered declines are Hainault, Abbott's, Arrow Brownhill, Hannan's 100 Acre, Lady Shenton, and Lake View South. Rumours have been current of a rich strike on the Murchison New Chums, which have fluctuated between 7s. and 8s., and I regret to notice that the same reprehensible secrecy is still being practised by the Directors. The statements made at the Londonderry meeting were not very encouraging, but I trust that the legal action to be taken will promptly decide the point as regards the transfer of the profits of the Colonel North of £70,000 to the Company. More light is wanted with regard to the position of the West Australian Minerals and Finance Corporation, and the shareholders will do well to demand full particulars. I should like to know the raison d'être of the 90-Mile Development Syndicate. It acts as an intermediary for the transfer of eight leases to a Company with a capital of £150,000, which at once purchases these properties. I wonder to how much the profit of this unnecessary Syndicate is to work out? With reference to some brief remarks which I made in last week's issue concerning the Central Finance Corporation, Limited, I have received a communication from Mr. D. N. Shaw, one of the Directors, with which I propose to deal next week. I shall, of course, be pleased to give him every opportunity of explaining the matter. Cable advices concerning the mines of the Venture Syndicate group continue satisfactory. The British Empire, Victoria United, and Carlisle at Yalgoo are stated to develop splendidly, and on the Sugar Loaf (25-Mile district) the reef has been struck 4 ft. wide, at a depth of 115 ft. The 90-Mile Proprietary mill is stated to be running smoothly, and a good crushing is looked for, the stone, of which there is an immense body, averaging from $1\frac{1}{2}$ to 2 oz. to the ton. The news from the Hannan's Britannia is to the effect that the lode is 3 ft. wide, and that rich ore is expected to be struck at a deeper level. Latest cablegrams are to the effect that the lode has been crosscut at 80 ft., and is rich in gold. An important piece of news comes by cable from Perth to the effect that the second reading of the Loan Bill, to provide money for the great water scheme, has been moved in the Legislative Assembly by the Premier, Sir John Forrest, so that there is a prospect of the goldfields being in future fully provided with water. The outlook in the mining industry must indeed be very bright, to judge by the huge outlay of upwards of £2,000,000 which is contemplated for water, railway extensions, improvements in existing lines, harbour works, and a good supply of rolling stock. Incidentally, I hear that not long ago 100,000 acres were under lease, and since that time numbers of leases have been applied for. The Premier is, of course, ably assisted by the Minister of Mines, Hon. E. H. Wittenoom, who, being the only member of the Government in the Upper House, has to pilot all the Bills through it. I hear that the Government have a very ample programme, which includes a reduction of taxes and a Redistribution of Seats Bill. The latter means an appeal to the country during the next recess; but although the elections are expected to be very lively, the Government are pretty certain to carry the day.

Indian, New Zealand, and Other Mines.

Those who ought to know are of opinion that Indian Gold Mining shares, which have suffered in sympathy with the other Mining sections, will be benefited by improved July crushings. In the meantime, however, Mysore are firmer at $7\frac{13}{16}$, Champion Reefs at $7\frac{1}{2}$, Ooregum at $3\frac{3}{8}$ xd., and almost the only marked rise has occurred in Balaghat. Goldfields of Mysore at 24s. 6d., and Coromandel at $2\frac{1}{8}$, appear both to be a good purchase amongst the lower-priced shares. It is stated that the lode at the bottom of the shaft in the Coromandel mine is as much as 6 ft. wide, and goes 1 oz. 4 dwt. to the ton. It is surprising, under the circumstances, that the recent rise has not been maintained. Turning to Australian Mines, I find Aladdin's Lamp firmer at $1\frac{7}{8}$ xd., and Wentworth Proprietary 1. The Aladdin's Lamp Mine is again making an excellent return for the last four weeks with an output of 1,507 oz., valued at £5,530. This return appears to foreshadow another dividend of 1s. per share (or 5 per cent.), and there are not many mines which show such returns monthly. In Charters Towers Mines, Bonnie Dundee and Day Dawn Block have improved. Mount Lyell have fluctuated wildly, and, after touching 7¼, have improved to 7¾. Gibraltar, British Broken Hill, Mosman, and Australian Broken Hill have also declined. In Mount Reid shares a considerable business has been transacted at 1 7/16. New Zealand Mines are lower all round, especially the high-priced shares. Taitapu are down to 2¾, Waihi Silverton to 2⅜, Waihi to 6⅝, Waitekauri to 5½, almost the only improvement being marked in Thames Hauraki to 1⅛, and Consolidated Goldfields of New Zealand to 4 3/16, Komata Queen are quoted 4s., Preece's Point 3s. 9d., and Maoriland Gold 3s. With reference to the latter, cablegrams have been received stating that the transfer of the property to an English Company has been effected, and that further developments on the mine will at once be started, new machinery having been ordered. I mentioned last week, at special request, that a Committee of Yorkshire shareholders in the North Queensland Mines Agency would interview the Managing Director (Mr. Macfie) in London with reference to the position of the concern. A circular has now reached me from Mr. Arthur Lennard, chairman of the Committee, stating that the explanations given at such interview to the Committee were satisfactory; it was arranged that Mr. Macfie should call a meeting of the shareholders of the new Company within three weeks to appoint a London Board of Directors and Secretary, and the advice is given to shareholders to send in their certificates. It strikes me that, after all the fuss that has been made, the explanations above referred to should be fully published for the benefit of the other shareholders. In the general foreign section Burma Ruby, Columbian Hydraulic, Pestarena, Banner Gold, and Doric are all lower, but Richmond have improved. Copper shares have receded under the lead of Rio Tinto, which are down to 23⅜.

New Enterprises and Issues.

The prospectuses of the following new Companies and issues have been placed before the public during the week:—

The Key of Komata, Limited.—This Company has been formed to acquire 149 acres, or thereabouts, of mineral land containing gold reefs, situate in the Thames district of the Coromandel Peninsula, New Zealand. The capital is £100,000 in shares of £1 each.

This property is situated within an easy distance of the township of Waitekauri, and the reefs are reported as generally large, and carrying well-defined walls. On the Komata Reef property they range from 4 ft. to 20 ft. in width, the assays from which have been fairly satisfactory. The cost of mining in this district is comparatively low, as the lodes are of a soft character, hence the working expenses will be small after development. This appears to be a fair mining venture with the probability of developing into a valuable mine.

New Zealand Iron and Steel Company, Limited.—This Company, according to the prospectus, is formed to meet the demand for marketable iron and steel in New Zealand and Australia, and to purchase and work a Government Lease of New Zealand for the entire existing deposit as shown on a map at the Company's offices. The capital is £450,000 in £1 shares.

This is a venture that had better be left alone until further progress has been made. What the promoters propose to do will take a long time to complete, and a large business will have to be done to realise anything like the estimated profits.

The New Brighton Tower and Recreation Company, Limited.—This Company has been formed to purchase the Rock Point Estate of about 20 acres in extent at New Brighton, upon which it is proposed to erect a tower 550 ft. high. The capital is £300,000 in shares of £1 each.

This venture is nearer the flourishing City of Liverpool than London, and the inhabitants of that city can form a far better estimate of the possibilities of success than Londoners. I think it would be better to let the Liverpudlians have it all to themselves.

The Howe Cycle and Sewing Machine Company, Limited.—This Company has been formed to acquire the works and business now carried on by the new Howe Machine Company, Limited, at Bridgetown, Glasgow, as manufacturers of sewing machines and cycles, &c. The capital is £250,000 in shares of £1 each.

Brockie-Pell Arc Lamp, Limited.—This Company has been formed to acquire the inventions for the construction of electric arc lamps of Messrs. Brockie & Pell, and the various patents, rights, and future improvements thereto. The capital is fixed at £80,000, in shares of £1 each.

Lovell & Christmas, Limited.—This Company is formed to take over a provision business that has been carried on at Smithfield, E.C., with the freehold and leasehold premises appertaining thereto. The capital is £350,000, and 200,000 Four per Cent. Mortgage Debenture stock.

I cannot conceive how so excessive a capital can be asked for a business of this description. The profits depend entirely upon commission earned by the sale of goods, and should the supply fail there is not much to fall back upon. There are far better investments in the market.

Gavin's House-to-House Cycle Cleaning and Insurance Company.—This Company has been formed for the purpose of establishing in London and the provinces depots for cleaning, repairing, storing, and selling cycles, and for other purposes. The capital is fixed at £300,000 in £1 shares.

The objects that this Company proposes to undertake are multifarious, but not such as to warrant the enormous capital of £300,000. With the exception of insurance, there is nothing but what existing cycle manufacturers and small traders can and possibly will undertake to do. The sum paid to the vendor also is very large for what is simply an idea.

The Cannon Brewery Company, Limited.—This is an issue of £500,000 Four per Cent. "B" Debenture stock, redeemable in 1915 at £110. The price of issue is £104 per £100 bond, which will be secured by a floating charge over all the assets of the Company, subject only to the prior claim of the First Mortgage Debenture stockholders. Applications are to be sent to Lloyds Bank, Limited, 72, Lombard-street, E.C.

Thorpe Brothers & Co., Limited.—With a capital of £150,000 in Cumulative Six per Cent. Preference shares and Ordinary shares of £1 each, and Four per Cent. First Mortgage Debentures, this Company is formed to take over as a going concern the wholesale and retail businesses of Messrs. Geo. Thorpe & Co., at Bradford. £50,000 of the Debentures and £50,000 in Cumulative Preference shares are now offered for subscription.

Batchelar & Son, Limited.—This Company is formed with a share capital of £55,000 and Debenture stock of £30,000, to take over and carry on the old-established business of Batchelor & Son, furniture removers, cabinet makers and upholsterers, and proprietors of depositories at North End, Broad Green, Summer-road, and Duppas Hill, Croydon. Issue of 5,000 Five and a Half per Cent. Cumulative Preference shares of £5 each at par, and £30,000 Four and a Half per Cent. First Mortgage Debenture stock at 103 per cent.

The West Australian (Gold District) Trading Corporation, Limited.—This Corporation has been formed for the purpose of taking over the assets and liabilities of the West Australian (Gold District) Trading Syndicate, Limited. The capital is fixed at £505,000, divided into 500,000 Ordinary shares of £1 each, and 5,000 Founders' shares of £1 each. This is an issue of £100,000 Ordinary shares at a premium of £1 each.

The Belmore Hill Amalgamated Gold Mines, Limited.—This Company is formed to acquire eight mining leases of about fifty-three acres in extent, situated on the Belmore Hill, two miles and a half from Canowindra, and eighteen from Cowra, New South Wales. The capital is £150,000 in £1 shares.

Notwithstanding the expert reports, I cannot see anything in this prospectus to warrant my recommending it to my readers.

Benskin's Watford Brewery.—This is an issue of £150,000 Four and a Half per Cent. "B" Mortgage Debenture stock at the price of £108, redeemable at the Company's option in 1910 at £113. Applications are to be sent to the National Provincial Bank of England, Limited, Bishopsgate-street, E.C., or any of its branches.

Notice to Connoisseurs of Fine Dry Champagne.—Périnet & Fils' Cuvée Réservée, Extra Sec, is in magnificent condition, at Hotel Cecil, Hotel Savoy, Midland Grand Hotel, Spiers & Pond's Hotels and Buffets, and most leading Hotels & Restaurants.

The Sanitary Engineering Co. (Carter Bros.), 65, Victoria-st., Westminster, for making Sanitary Surveys in London or country.

The Acme Insurance Company, Limited.—This Company has been established for the purpose of undertaking every form of insurance (life excepted). The capital is fixed at £250,000 in shares of £1 each.

This Company has undertaken to do what is already done by other Companies, but its promoters claim that owing to economies rendered possible they will be able to insure at rates considerably under those at present charged. My readers must not forget that cheapness does not always mean safety, and the capital is to my mind too small for an insurance business covering the ground this one proposes to do.

Thomas Edward Brinsmead & Sons, Limited.—This Company is formed for the purpose of acquiring and carrying on the business of pianoforte manufacturers carried on by Thomas Edward Brinsmead & Sons at Camden and Kentish Town, N.W. The capital is £100,000, in shares of £5 each.

A. M. Peebles & Son, Limited. — Share capital £200,000. This Company has been formed to acquire and carry on the business of A. M. Peebles & Son, 153, Queen Victoria street, and Peebles & Son at Whiteash and Rishton Paper Mills, Lancashire.

The Liverpool Lighterage Company, Limited. — Capital £150,000, divided into £75,000 Preference and £75,000 Ordinary shares. This Company is formed for the purpose of uniting several lighterage businesses of Liverpool and other ports on the Mersey.

MY LETTER BOX.

The following are replies to inquiries from various correspondents:—

GOVERNMENT, &C., BONDS.

Beaulieu.—1. The Argentine Funding Loan is a 6 per cent. loan, which, under the Romero-Rothschild agreement, receives 5 per cent. for the present, and was to return to the 6 per cent. basis in 1899. The present quotation is 84, and it will be dealt with under the Unification Bill, apparently receiving very satisfactory treatment. 2. The Old Uruguay Three and a Half per Cent. Loan stands at 50¾. The new bonds bear 5 per cent. interest, and were issued at 71½ per cent. They are at present quoted 1¼ discount, and thus yield upwards of 7 per cent. per annum; and these are the bonds which I consider preferable for investment. Twenty-five per cent. has been paid up, 25 per cent. more is payable on August 15, 1896, and 21½ per cent. on September 30, 1896. The first quarterly coupon of £1. 5s. per cent. is payable on October 31. Hard Hit.—No option but to hold for the present. A. B.—Perhaps you had best put the £200 into a large dividend-paying South African or West Australian gold mine, which you can easily select from my letter. As regards the Metropolitans you might hold for a further improvement. Jack.—The new Uruguay loan will receive a settlement and quotation in due time. There is a prospect of the Argentine Provincial debts being settled, and you should hold now. Tanner.—No reason to sell the Argentine Government bonds; hold for a recovery. Phono.—Both the Government stocks mentioned by you are fair investments, but no catch. Personally, I should prefer the new Uruguay loan, which yields a much higher return.

BANKS, TRUSTS, AND FINANCIAL.

Faint Heart.—A fair investment, but you must consider the uncalled liability of £20 per share. P. A., Clapham.—I have given you all the information you required, and have at your request recommended you a smart firm of City solicitors; what more do you want? Jigs.—The firm has as you say formerly settled all accounts promptly; but as there appears to be some change in the position you had better at once set the firm of City solicitors at work, the address of whom I forward in your envelope as requested. Uglifer.—Union Bank of Australia shares are recovering again, and I do not advise a sale now. Patey.—1. I am afraid that by waiting so long you have forfeited your right of claim, unless it is a very strong case. It is a matter for a solicitor, and I have at your request sent you the address of a smart firm. 2. You have absolutely nothing to complain of. The receipt which I return is perfectly in order, and there is no doubt that the matter will be all right. C. H. R.—If you want to buy Paris Lottery bonds you had better apply to a respectable firm of foreign bankers in London, such as Messrs. N. Keizer & Co., 1, Cowper's-court, London, E.C. A. P.—You might put the money into sound Home Brewery debentures, or into Brighton "A," which yields £3. 17s. per annum, with every prospect of an increased yield. B. B. B.—Outside brokers; why do you persist in dealing with such people when I have always warned my readers against them? You ought to deal through members of the Stock Exchange only. C. M. F.—All high-class investments are at present at exaggerated prices, so that it is very difficult to recommend a stock yielding the return mentioned, with a certainty of increase in capital value. G. M. A.—I do not like this concern, and I advise you to take an opportunity to get out. H. N. W.—I do not see how I can help you; it is a matter for a solicitor. Tobias Twister.—I advise you to have nothing to do with these outside dealers.

HOME RAILS.

E. B., Harrogate.—There is not so much speculation in this stock as in the others, and very little market in London. T. N.—For a speculative purchase Caledonian Deferred (Coras), North British Deferred, and Dover "A" might be most suitable.

AMERICAN AND FOREIGN RAILS.

Porphyry.—1. Yes, Central Argentine stock is a sound investment. 2. A fair purchase, but no catch at present. R. N.—1. No option but to hold for the present. 2. I do not recommend averaging, but hold; the decease of Colonel North is an unfavourable feature as regards this stock. Domingo.—No option but to hold for the present until the market takes a favourable turn. East Anglia.—Yes, you should hold these; the interest is being paid, and the future seems fairly promising. Addis, Birmingham.—I do not advise purchase of Yankee Rails at present, as these will be very unsettled until the Presidential election has been decided. R. I.—No option but to hold for the present. Seaman.—There is no Government guarantee, but a contract with the Government. Torquay.—The Cordoba and Rosario conversion took place after the date mentioned, and the Debentures were first officially quoted in their new from on August 28, 1895, as follows:—The Four per Cent. Debenture stock at 93½, and the Six per Cent. Debenture stock at 71.

MINING SHARES.

Enquirer, Wardrobe-place, E.C.—These shares are not dealt in on this market, and nothing is known as to the Company's position or prospects. Enquirer, Newport, Mon.—I am not an admirer of the W. A. Gresham Syndicate, and you ought to be able to obtain the information you require from the Secretary. F. F. H.—If you cannot obtain a settlement employ a solicitor. Trams.—It is absurd for you to expect an upward movement in any particular South African or West Australian share, unless the whole market improves. There is every prospect of this taking place, but it will have to be awaited. Be careful with reference to the publication mentioned. Juvenis.—Hold for the present, but there is no temptation to buy more. Nith.—Although the Australasian Gold Trust has not done anything much yet to encourage its shareholders, I think it is advisable to hold. E. W. W.—I do not recommend purchase of Broad Arrow (1); but Holcomb Valley Prefs. (2) are a fair mining risk. Of the other shares mentioned, Nos. 3 to 7, I prefer Randfontein (5) and Glencairn (6). Sholto.—1. I do not care for Klipfontein. 2. Not just yet. 3. Quite nominal. 4. There is no market here. H. P. G.—Mount Lyell shares are quite high enough. Tristan.—Try the Scottish Widows' Fund. With reference to your mining shares, Nos. 1 to 20, a great many of these are not bought on my advice, but there is no option than to hold those specially mentioned by you, Nos. 8, 12, 17, and 18 for the present. There is no hurry in selling the others, on which you have good profits, as yet. You ought to have bought Mainland Consols and Lake View Consols before, but there is still a prospect of a further rise in these. Prow, Aberdeen.—The talk about Waterfall Estates is absurd. It is a promising Company, and whenever the South African market revives they will reach a higher level. J. H.—Hold for the present; a circular has just been issued to the shareholders. H. O.—It is absurd that you should pay attention to blackmailing circulars of this kind. If you take your cue from such persons you will be sorry for it. Italiano.—No; I do not advise investment in Bechuanaland Exploration. Pizzicato.—No reason for selling West Australian Exploring and Finance shares. Write to the Secretary for an explanation. With reference to the other shares mentioned, Nos. 1 to 3, they should be held. Acacia.—No reason to sell Nos. 1 to 5 at present, although I do not like Great Fingall Reefs (3). With reference to other West Australian shares to buy, I must refer you to my letter. Nos. 6 to 9 are fair mining risks; but no catch. Rothes.—I consider Komata Queens (C) promising; but I do not think much of A and B. Tha Brough.—1. Yes, Barnato Banks are a good purchase. 2. Do not pay the call, but join the other shareholders in objecting. Fido.—1. A fair New Zealand mine. 2. A fair mining risk. Proof.—I do not advise purchase of any of the shares mentioned by you. X. Y. Z.—In the position of the widow lady in question, she should certainly not speculate in such doubtful mining shares. West Cliff. — Amongst the shares mentioned by you, I should prefer Gladiators and Transvaal Exploring. Pop Gunner.—A fair mining risk. W. B., Manchester.—1. No, I do not advise purchase of Sam's Wealth of Nations. 2. Central Exploration

BORWICK'S BAKING POWDER. Pure & wholesome, assists digestion.
BORWICK'S BAKING POWDER. Guaranteed to be free from alum.
BORWICK'S BAKING POWDER. It has the largest sale in the world.

CHINA AND GLASS. — Messrs. GOODE, Artists and Designers, solicit an inspection of their collection in their recently-extended South Audley-street premises, now by far the largest and most important in Europe. Messrs. Goode guarantee the excellence of all their productions, and invite a comparison of their prices with those of any co-operative stores.

of W.A. is a promising Company. 3. You got too high into Great Boulders. 4. No. 5. Yes, Paddington Consols is a promising Company. 6. Do not buy now. Wealth of Nations (7) and Hannan's Proprietary (8) should be held. F. H., Colchester.—It is impossible to tell how Great Boulders will move in the near future; and with regard to the other questions you should write to the Secretary. Barrow Club.—Amongst the shares mentioned by you A to G, it would be advisable to hold the majority. I can tell you nothing about any possible dividend on the Barnato Consols. Amongst West Australians I should advise you to make your selection from the recommendations in my letter under "Golden West Australia." You have done quite right in buying Glencairn and Randfontein. Jeg.—You should disregard such stupid comments, and keep your shares. Dingle.—Chartered shares may rise again, when you should sell (1). You might also risk holding Nos. 2 to 4. Correspondent, Great Coram-Street.—I cannot tell you when the general meeting will be held; but you should apply to the Secretary for information. B. B.—The South African Colliery Company in question will probably come all right, but at present business in the Transvaal is not flourishing. The Australian Trust shares should be held for the present. W. C. L. L.—1. You should certainly take your proportion of shares in the new Barnato amalgamation, whenever this takes place. 2. Hold all these shares, and await the publication of the particulars. 3. Yes. 4. About 4½d. Gwalia.—1. The date of the meeting has not yet been fixed. 2. No. 3. Yes, I still retain my favourable opinion. 4. No reason to sell. 5. No. 6. Yes, Barnato Banks would be preferable. King's Road.—1. A good mine. 2. Yes. 3. In August or September. Cam.—I do not know any reason; but a circular has been issued to the shareholders, and the shares should be held. Carousal.—Hold your mining shares Nos. 1 to 6. I have no settled opinion with regard to Pegamoids (7). Unlucky.—This mine has been very disappointing, but I should not advise you to sell now. Morley Club.—1. Be careful. 2. I advise you to have nothing to do with it. 3. The Aroha is a promising New Zealand mine. J. W. G.—I think there is every prospect of African Estates recovering again. J. R., North Devon.—I quite agree with you as regards the recent step taken in connection with Colenbranders to supply the Chartered Company with funds. Constant Reader, Manchester.—You got in rather high, and should sell as soon as you see a slight profit. A. E. H.—Amongst the shares mentioned by you, I prefer Nos. 1, 4, 6 (Croydon Consols), and 11 (W.A. Share Corporation). I do not advise averaging the shares mentioned at present. The firm in question is considered reliable. Sligo.—I do not recommend the investment. Airdrie.—The London-Paris Corporation is fairly promising, but I do not advise purchase of the other shares just now. R. T. L.—I do not approve of Lisbon-Berlyn. With reference to the West Australian shares mentioned by you, the future is as yet doubtful. Jokers are a good purchase, and the Trust shares should improve. Realisation.—I do not think much of this concern. H. N., Clifton.—1. New Explorers' Syndicate should be bought. Nos. 2 and 4 are fair mining risks. With reference to No. 5, the meeting is not likely to take place for some time, but the Company is doing very well. I do not remember the syndicate in question. W. S., Broxburn.—Amongst the shares mentioned by you I like Hannan's Proprietary (3) and Associated Southern (4) best. Dimin.—I have not, so far, received any such information concerning the Central Wealth of Nations, but I think that it is time for the shareholders to bestir themselves and bring the Directors to their bearings. E. R. L.—1. Hold Mainland Consols for a fresh rise, and see remarks under "The Whitaker Wright Group to the Front." 2. Hold, but take a fair profit. 3. Randfontein are bound for much higher prices when once the general depression has passed from the Kaffir Circus. D. O. E.—Yes, Burbanks Consols are a good purchase; the mine is a very promising one. Hextoldian.—A fair mining risk, but no catch. 2. Take a good profit in Hit or Miss when you get it. 3. I do not care for Klerksdorps. 4. Fair prospects. 5. No catch. Newry.—The Wealth of Nations Mine will come right again. Hold! Alabaster.—Amongst the shares mentioned by you I should prefer Gladiators and Burbanks Consols. Erina.—1. Sell when you get out without a loss. 2. A fair mining risk, but you got rather high into Hainault, and could have done better elsewhere. 3. I do not like North Fingalls at all. 4. Hold Holcomb Valley. 5. No catch. Take any fair profit. 6. Research and Development shares are quite high enough. Investor, South Tottenham.—How can I advise you without your giving me the name of the Murchison Mine in which you are interested. Badger.—I quite agree with your strictures on the proposal of Colenbranders to pay £5,000 to the Chartered Company, and expressed this view already last week. Omega.—1. Make your selection from Golden West Australia; Gladiators, Burbanks Consols are promising shares still at a low price. You should also buy at once Lake View Consols and Hannan's Golden Group and Golden Treasure. Certainly amongst the new mines Great Boulder Junction Reefs, and Hill End Consols are promising. Shirlaw's Gold Mine should be held. 2. No reason to sell Sheba and Randfontein; they will eventually rise to a higher level. Cain.—Yes; hold all these shares for an improvement. A.B.P.—1. I should prefer Associated Southern to 2. As regards 3, it is promising, but you are of course aware that the South African position is still very much involved. Snipe.—No; Hannan's Associated are not tempting. Search Light.—A report has just been published. Why do you not write to the Secretary for information. X.Y.Z.—1. I am told that the Directors' report and accounts of the Hampton Plains are now being drawn up. 2. I cannot tell. 3. Absolutely no reason. Unlucky, Ballinamore.—Amongst your list of shares I prefer Gladiators (1), Golden River Quesnelle (4), and West Australian Concessions (2). 8. The Randfontein will not crush itself; it is a parent Company which will eventually have some twenty mines as sub-Companies. 9. The Croydon Consols Mine is improving as it goes down, but it is not possible to fix the life of the mine. The Croydon goldfield generally is, however, very permanent. 10. About ten shares. Truth Reader, Bexhill.—Keep your £5 at the Savings Bank! Sphinx.—No reason to sell. John Shaw.—I think you might as well adopt a different nom de plume. Hold your mining shares for the present. Victor.—I do not like this concern at all, and I do not think that the shares will turn out "friends." R. T. M.—No option but to hold the first-named shares for the present. I do not advise purchase of the shares mentioned by you. You could do better in those referred to in my letter.

INDUSTRIAL SHARES.

Lea.—You must be aware that unfortunately Olympia has not prospered, and there is absolutely nothing to be done in the matter. You are doubtless aware of what has been decided by the committee of shareholders. Cork Reader.—Dunlop Deferred shares never rose above ⅞ premium in this market. Electricity.—The future is still too uncertain. Ryot.—There is no market for these shares at present, and nothing for it but to wait. Alpha.—I see no reason why you should not hold the shares; the money has been found by the underwriters, and the undertaking in itself is promising. Bernasconi.—1. I see no temptation to buy these music-hall shares. 2. Any stockbroker will buy them for you. J. D. H.—These preference shares are fair value, and nothing has occurred to change my opinion. It was a clerical error. A. W. C.—I do not consider these tea shares promising. Ignorant, Maidenhead.—You must tell me what return you require, and whether you want debentures or shares. C. T., Carlisle.—You will see that I have given special attention to the Brighton and Hove Dairies, Limited. Irish.—I do not like either of the shares mentioned by you. Flageolet.—I think it would be advisable, before buying any more American brewery shares, to await the upshot of the present political movements in the United States. Rotterdam.—The process is a successful one, and it is hoped that the Companies will finally come all right. Sally.—In view of the surroundings of the Kent Coalfields, I do not advise the investment. Viva.—I do not recommend this new Tea Company. Essex.—No; I do not advise the investment. Pool.—1. I do not like this warehousing Company. 2. No reason to buy these meat shares now. Infelix.—I quite agree with you that these preference shares are very promising. Ladyship.—I do not know the reason, but I daresay the insiders know. Aorillia.—Yes; I do not anticipate much of a rise in these Cycle shares at present. Somerset.—A fair industrial investment, but no catch. Glam.—I do not recommend purchase of the New Premier or Singer Cycles. Westminster.—I do not think there is any risk with this Company; some of the Press comments are unfair. As the capital has been provided by the underwriters, I do not see why you should worry yourself so much.

MIXED INVESTMENTS.

Nemo, Highgate.—1. A fair investment, but no particular prospect of a rise. 2. No. Cheshire.—1. You got rather high into Rand Reefs; hold now. 2. St. Louis Brewery shares would have improved ere this, had it not been for the currency trouble in the United States. Peggy Bane.—I really cannot advise you on this matter; you had perhaps better wait until the other shareholders have obtained some result. You should certainly hold Uruguay bonds. Sawdust.—1. I do not think much of this purchase. 2. Hold, but do not buy more to average. Yates & Co.—This inquiry is written on the back of a circular bearing this name, and being anonymous I can take no notice of same. New Club.—The list you have made up re the investment of your £8,000, Nos. 1 to 14, is fairly satisfactory; but I consider Nos. 6 and 8 too uncertain. American Breweries are at present hanging fire, and Home Industrials are very speculative, unless you buy the debentures and are satisfied with a small interest. Pioneer.—1. You ought to join other objecting shareholders in the Dunlop-Truffault Cycle Company, and demand the return of your subscription; but I cannot tell you anything about the persons in question. 2. It is a question which you must yourself decide. 3. No option but to hold your Chartered shares for the present in the hope of a recovery, when you should sell; it is a pity that you did not take my advice to keep out of them. Cheeroot.—I agree with you that these Tea Companies are now "on the crest of the wave," and I really cannot advise you to invest this large sum now. Valloneto.—Yes; the new Chilian Five per Cent. loan is a good investment. I do not think much of the other shares mentioned. Cheque.—1. I do not like New Seddons either, and do not think they will go to the price mentioned. 2. These shares should improve, but when it is impossible to tell. William B.—1. You had better hold these Buenos SPRATT'S PATENT various Dog Foods and Medicines can be obtained of all Corn Dealers, Grocers, and Chemists in the United Kingdom and in all important Continental cities. They are also stocked at 14, Rue des Mathurins, Paris; Rummelsburg, Berlin; and 239, East 56th-street, New York. Your own tradesman or stores will supply you.

Ayres bonds now, as the price is rising. 2. Impossible to tell. Wharfedale.—There is no market for the first-named shares at present. As regards the mining shares, there is no option but to hold on the chance of recovery. Dok.—Sell the Tyre shares as soon as you can get a small profit. Hold London and Globe Finance shares for a considerable rise. 19.—You might put some of the money into the new Uruguay and Chilian loans, and into a few dividend-paying South African gold mining shares, such as Langlaagte Estate, New Primrose and Glencairn. Tiney.—1. A fair mining risk, but very speculative. 2. Yes. 3. If the silver party should prevail in the United States, the outlook would be very bad; but I cannot bring myself to believe that they will succeed. 4. I do not advise purchase of the London Drapery Stores. C.L.C.S.—1. You will have to hold for some time before you can get a good price. 2. No. 3. Yes; it would be preferable to hold. C. F., Bournemouth.—No particular reason to get out of the Brazilians at once. The bank in question is not suitable for making investments through. You must tell me in what class of investment you wish to put your thousand pounds. No option but to hold New York Central now. H. W. B., Manchester.—Your American Railroad bonds Nos. 1 to 6 are well selected, and you should hold for a recovery. The West Australian mine in question has been a great disappointment, and there is no option but to hold. The Springdale is a good mine, but the management has been bad. If you want something new, you may go farther and fare worse.

VARIOUS INVESTMENTS.

Money continues abundant and cheap, and gilt-edged investments are as much in demand as ever, as illustrated by the great success of the Burma Railway issue. Consols have been remarkably steady, and show very little change for the week at 113$\frac{5}{16}$. Silver is slightly easier at 31$\frac{3}{8}$d. It is, of course, out of the question to already discount the possible victory of the Silverites in the United States. Rupee Paper has improved slightly to 64$\frac{5}{8}$, chiefly on purchases by Eastern Banks for the Indian market, and the success of the new Rupee loan. Brewery shares have been firm, and Allsopps have advanced to 180 on dividend rumours. It is now expected that the announcement will be made next Friday, the market going for 8 per cent. Guinness are easier at 650. Nitrate Rails have been quiet at 7$\frac{1}{4}$, and Mexican Rails have also been neglected. In Cycle shares very few dealings have taken place, and prices have shown a sagging tendency, Dunlop Deferred declining to $\frac{5}{8}$ premium. Humber Extensions have been well supported at $\frac{5}{16}$-$\frac{3}{8}$ per cent., although the fire at the Coventry works must affect them, as stated at the meeting of shareholders. Beeston's have dropped to 4$\frac{1}{2}$, but Cycle Tubes are firm at 1$\frac{1}{16}$. The disclosures in connection with the financial operations of the former Colonial Treasurer of New Zealand, the Hon. J. G. Ward, in his examination before a Judge of the Supreme Court of New Zealand, are of a very damaging nature. He admitted that the balance-sheet of the J. G. Ward Association, of which he is Managing Director, was not correct, and his dealings with the Colonial Bank were, to say the least of them, curious. Frank Tarrant & Co, of 70 and 71, Bishopsgate-street, London, E.C., are circularising the public with boastful statements, according to which they have just closed a Midland joint deal at 425 per cent. profit, and that they have closed twenty-six deals without a single loss. I remember several outside dealers at various times boasting of similar results, but they invariably finished up with big losses. It is quite clear to me that if Tarrant & Co. could always make such big profits, they would do the business for their own account and not for the public, and I should personally be very sorry to put a single shilling down with such syndicate touts. Mr. Claude Audain, stock and share broker and dealer, of 107, London-wall, is sending out prospectuses of "The Brighton and Hove Dairies," capital £20,000 in Seven per Cent. Preference and Ordinary shares of £1 each. He "has secured the firm call of a block of shares, and offers an underwriting bonus of 10 per cent. in fully-paid Ordinary shares." Although Mr. Audain describes this as "an unusual opportunity of acquiring a good home investment, yielding a high rate of interest," I should prefer to invest my money elsewhere, but I should like to know what profit that gentleman expects to make out of the block of shares of which he has secured the call.—Your affectionate uncle, MOSES.

QUEER STORY.

BANK HOLIDAY AT BROWLESWORTH.

WHEN the Vicar of Browlesworth suffered a temporary breakdown of health, and was ordered by his doctors to go away for three months' change, his parishioners heard the news with some regret; for though the old gentleman was prosy in the pulpit, procrastinating in parish matters, and generally somewhat slack and behind the times, he was, nevertheless, amiable and good-natured, and rather popular than otherwise with his little flock. But with the arrival of the locum tenens, who came to take the vicar's duty during his absence, the regret of the parishioners speedily vanished. The Rev. Marmaduke Mollington was quite a revelation to the inhabitants of sleepy little Browlesworth. He was entirely unlike the average clerical stop-gap. There were about him none of those features which characterise the ordinary guinea-pig. He was young, energetic, earnest; an eloquent preacher, an assiduous parish priest, a comely and well-bred man. Naturally, he soon became popular with all classes. And it may be hardly needful to add that the fair sex, to a woman, fell in love with him. For was there ever an engaging bachelor cleric who failed to inspire wholesale passion in the bosoms of his lady parishioners?

Perhaps, indeed, it implied no great attractiveness to be beloved by the ladies of Browlesworth. Men were scarce in that benighted country town, and women were extremely plentiful. It follows, as a consequence, that, the air of the place being salubrious and the death-rate low, it contained a large number of elderly spinsters. Strangers who came to stay there often remarked with amusement upon the number of old maids who resided in Browlesworth. There were no less than fourteen such in the limited pale of Browlesworth Society, and eleven of these were (if we may be allowed an auctioneer's phrase) self-contained; that is to say, they lived in their own houses, and kept up their own small establishments. The most considerable of them, Socially, was a Miss Anstilter, who wrote "Honourable" before her name upon her cards. She lived in a small house, and only kept two maid-servants. But the daughter of a peer was necessarily a great person in Browlesworth, even though her habits were stingy and her establishment inconsiderable. Besides, although she only did live in a small house, and kept but two maid-servants, her "form" of doing things was quite undeniable. When she received at afternoon tea, the refreshments might be scanty, but they were served in a style befitting a princess; and when she gave a little dinner, though the mutton came from New Zealand and the champagne was gooseberry, her guests ate the former off some of the finest plate and imbibed the latter from some of the best cut-glass in the county.

Miss Anstilter has been designated an old maid. The description is true, if an unattractive and scraggy unmarried lady of forty-six should be so designated. It fails, however, if in the term old-maid is involved the abandonment of all matrimonial projects by the lady to whom it is applied. Miss Anstilter was not married, but the truthful historian cannot say that she did not wish or expect to be married. On the contrary, she still cherished the idea that the longed-for husband would soon cross her path, and that her post-meridian charms would shortly bless the future of some eligible aspirant. When Marmaduke Mollington appeared upon the scene, Miss Anstilter began to feel vaguely that the eligible one had arrived.

This Honourable spinster had a pretty, a poetic fancy. When Marmaduke spoke to her, she could read hidden passion in his eyes, she could detect veiled meanings in the polite forms of his conversation. Sometimes in church, when he read some passage in the Scriptures allusive to love, she knew—knew by some subtle instinct—that his thoughts on the instant flew to her, and then she blushed behind her spotted veil and felt her heart beat like a hammer right through the steels of her "Rejuvenator" corset. One Sunday in particular, there came in the second lesson that passage where St. Paul enjoins the brethren (including, of course, the sisters) "to salute one another with the holy kiss." As he read these words, he looked up from the lectern and caught her eye; then both their gazes fell; and she knew that he was thinking how sweet it would be to exercise the Apostle's precept upon herself. Oh! in what a twitter she was at that supreme moment. It was as if she actually felt the pressure of his saintly lips upon her cheek.

Now to do the locum tenens justice, he was very far from being a flirt; nor did it ever occur to him to make love either to Miss Anstilter or to any other of the Browlesworth ladies. He was civil, polite, courteous to all; perhaps rather more, indeed to the Honourable old maid than to any of the rest. But that was due to no amatory sensations on his part. It was, partly, a mark of respect to her superior rank; partly a way of ingratiating himself with her pour le bon motif. Any one who was not absolutely blind could see that the Rev. Marmaduke was entirely wrapped up in his clerical work, and that he cared not a brass farthing for anything outside it. He was rather appalled at the backward state, ecclesiastically, in which he had found the parish of Browlesworth; and he was anxious, simply from love of his calling, to work the parish into a better condition, before handing it back to the vicar upon his return. Success in this depended, mainly, upon the co-operation of the parishioners themselves—especially of the lady parishioners. And that is why the reverend locum tenens was so anxious to ingratiate himself with Miss Anstilter. She, as the daughter of a peer, set the tone to the other ladies. And if she could be induced to take an active share in parish work, there was no doubt that many others would follow her Honourable lead.

One of the first parish institutions which the Rev. Marmaduke took upon himself to work up and improve was the local branch of the Girls' Friendly Society. This had existed for many years in Browlesworth, but had lately fallen into an almost moribund state. It had been originally started by the vicar's late wife, and during her lifetime had flourished tolerably well; but when she died, no other lady in the parish could be found to take her place; and though one or two remained who were nominally associates of the society, they practically did no work in connection with it, and left the few members who hung on very much to themselves.

This state of things the locum tenens at once set himself to amend. He had long taken a deep interest in that admirable society, and having seen what excellent work it had effected among the girls and young women in other parishes with which he had been connected, he could not bear to see it languishing and dying in Browlesworth from the want of a little energy to resuscitate it. He preached a stirring sermon about it from the text, "The harvest truly is plenteous, but the labourers are few;" and the day afterwards, wishing to strike while the iron was hot, he went round to see some of the leading ladies of the parish, with a view to inducing them to take up this excellent work. Of course, he began with Miss Anstilter. He was delighted to find her amenable and in every way ready to fall in with his suggestions.

"Ah, Mr. Mollington," she said, with a sweet glance of her faded eyes. "After your beautiful sermon yesterday, could I possibly refuse?"

"Ah! you flatter me," he replied, deprecatingly. And then he added, with earnest energy: "It is a noble work."

"It is indeed," she assented. "Oh, Mr. Mollington, what tender plants are we women! And with what dangers and temptations are we encircled on every hand. We are all so weak, Mr. Mollington, so weak, and so—so—foolish!"

"We are all weak and foolish, taken individually," said the locum-tenens, feeling rather alarmed. "But when banded together we acquire strength to fight against unnumbered foes. That is one of the chief advantages of these great organisations. Then I may count upon your co-operation in this?"

"My most hearty co-operation," she said, fervently.

"And you will take steps to become enrolled an associate of the G.F.S. as soon as possible?"

"Certainly I will."

"This is truly good of you. And you will use your influence—your great influence—to induce the girls and young women of the parish to join—will you not?"

"You may rely upon me, Mr. Mollington. When once I put my hand to the plough, I am not one to look back."

"I am sure of it, dear lady. I may add that the G.F.S. makes a great point of getting at domestic servants—alas! the most spiritually neglected class in the whole community. But many of them think it infra. dig. to join the society. I wonder whether you could persuade your two maids to become members. It would indeed be a help if you could; for did your domestics join us, few others, I believe, would hold back."

"Oh, I will get them to join, never fear," said Miss Anstilter, confidently.

"Thank you, indeed. Then I know that the battle is already half won. I am particularly anxious that the work should be accomplished quickly, not only because, alas! my time here is short" (Miss Anstilter sighed audibly), "but also because I should like our members to be enrolled in time to take part in the great Diocesan meeting of the G.F.S., which is fixed for Bank Holiday. The Bishop, you know, entertains the whole Diocesan branch of the Society in his grounds at the Palace. It will be a grand thing if we can muster there in strong force."

After a few more minutes' conversation, the Rev. Marmaduke took his departure, well satisfied with the result of his interview. Having Miss Anstilter on his side meant that he had a tolerably easy task before him. And so indeed he found it; for within three weeks there had been enrolled in Browlesworth two working and six honorary Associates, and close upon seventy Friendly girls—many of the latter domestic servants. When he saw this satisfactory evidence of his labours, our simple-hearted cleric was quite childish in his eager expressions of delight.

On the Sunday before the holiday he preached another stirring sermon—addressed especially to the members of the G.F.S. He dwelt on the importance of the parish being well represented at the great meeting on the morrow. He entreated the girls, if they had already formed plans for enjoying Bank Holiday in more secular fashion, to abandon those plans, and make a point of going to the G.F.S. gathering instead. He alluded—though with becoming delicacy—to the temptations and dangers incident to the day as it was often spent by young women, and pointed out that Bank Holiday had been intentionally fixed by the Society for their meeting, in order to draw girls away from the danger to which they were then exposed. He exhorted the mistresses of houses, also, to deny their own conveniences for this one day, and to let such of their servants as were members attend the meeting. His pleading was earnest and eloquent. It was well calculated to move female hearts. Many shining eyes were fixed upon the preacher's eager face. Many tender bosoms throbbed and fluttered. Truly religion is the royal road to woman's heart. The pen may be mightier than the sword. But (where ladies are concerned) the stole can give points to either.

Next day broke fine and warm—the eventful Monday to which so many were looking forward. The Rev. Marmaduke's sermon had not been without effect. The Friendly girls and their Associates, bound for the Bishop's Palace, assembled at Browlesworth Railway Station almost in full force. Miss Anstilter was there, with her two domestics; so was Miss Primster, the other working Associate, with her two domestics. Four of the honorary Associates also put in an appearance. Taken together the band must have numbered nearly sixty. But at present all felt that it was like the play without Hamlet; for the Rev. Marmaduke, the one for whose sake, and for the pleasure of whose company most of them were going, had not yet put in an appearance. At length, just before the train started, there arrived, not the reverend gentleman himself, but a messenger bearing a note from him addressed to Miss Anstilter. She opened the missive with trembling fingers, and, having mastered its contents, communicated them to the rest of the party.

They were to the effect that the clergyman had been called away, at the last moment, to visit a dying man, but that he would follow them by the next train.

The news was received with evident disappointment, especially by the Associates, who had looked forward to the delight of making the journey in the same compartment with the fascinating cleric. However, there was nothing for it but to possess their palpitating souls in patience, and to look forward to the time—an hour or so at the latest—when he would join them at the Palace. Miss Anstilter herself found consolation in the fact that the note had been addressed to her. When she had an opportunity, she slipped it carefully into her purse, where she had several other specimens of the Rev. Marmaduke's handwriting. They were only ordinary little notes, dealing mostly with parish matters. But had they not been penned by those dear fingers? Besides, as has been said, Miss Anstilter had a pretty, a poetic fancy, and could read between the lines.

All that fine weather and an assiduous host and hostess could do to make the G.F.S. gathering "go" was done. And by most of those present the Bank Holiday treat was voted a big success. But in the hearts of the Browlesworth ladies, and more particularly in the heart of Miss Anstilter, was an aching void, which even a genial Bishop and Bishopess could not fill. For the Rev. Marmaduke failed to keep his promise. Many times during the day, when the iron gates of the Palace gardens clanged on the entry of some newcomer, Miss Anstilter's heart jumped, and her eyes were turned expectantly thitherward. But each time she suffered a shock of disappointment. The day passed away; evening came on; but no Marmaduke. Miss Anstilter began to feel annoyed and angry. She thought now she could see through the faithless deceiver's ruse. He had—had—traded on her—her—affection for him—to—to get her there, as an enticement to the others; and then—having done this—he had basely thrown her over, and had, very likely, gone to enjoy his own holiday elsewhere.

She went back that night very cross indeed, resolved that, unless the clergyman could give some satisfactory explanation, she would resign her associateship of the G.F.S. the very next day.

But when she reached home, her annoyance over this trifling matter was put into the background by a far more distressing occurrence. During her absence her villa, which she had been careful to leave securely barred and locked, had been entered by thieves. Every valuable in the house had been taken; all the old family plate, and all her diamonds and jewellery into the bargain. Not an ounce of silver—not so much as a teaspoon—was left. "Ill news flies apace." The news of Miss Anstilter's loss was soon flying through Browlesworth—and not Miss Anstilter's only. For it transpired that the houses of three other maiden ladies in the place had been similarly ransacked while they had been absent with their domestics at the treat.

The locum tenens was never again seen in Browlesworth. He is still badly wanted. So is the swag.

MUSIC.

OPERA—THE PAST SEASON AND THE NEXT.

THE Opera season closed on Tuesday; but before it ended matters were definitely settled for next summer. At one time it seemed likely that Mr. Higgins, finding himself in the same predicament in regard to the Opera as his lawyer-predecessor, Benjamin Lumley, fifty years ago, might have had to take a far busier part in the management next season than he perhaps may have desired. Matters, however, are so far straightened out that Mr. Maurice Grau was able last Thursday to definitely accept the managing directorship from May to July. The necessary capital is provided by a private Joint Stock Company, registered on Saturday as "The Royal Opera Syndicate," formed of a few wealthy subscribers, including, it is said, an American millionaire. When the sub-lease is signed, Mr. Faber, ground lessee of the theatre, will join the Syndicate. The addition of Mr. Faber's name is of considerable importance, for, while the ground lessee remains a member of the Syndicate, the house will always be available for purposes of opera. Indeed, rather than that Covent Garden should have been converted into a potato market, I understand that a South African millionaire was, under certain conditions, prepared to buy the lease. There was also a talk of a syndicate of Italian bankers and capitalists, who would, of course, have ousted the French contingent. But the opera is now practically financed by the subscribers, and although this state of matters is likely to be more profitable to the artists than to Art, it is the best arrangement that under the circumstances could be made.

Mr. Maurice Grau was offered the management some weeks ago, but he was obliged to refer the question to the United States, where, by the way, a very similar change of operatic management has just been effected. Mr. Grau will, in fact, manage the Metropolitan Opera House, New York, under the supervision of a Finance Committee, the chairman of which is Mr. William Steinway, the eminent pianoforte manufacturer. By this American Committee, who, by the way, will engage the leading artists on their own account, Mr. Grau was bound down to accept no other engagement. But the management of Covent Garden, with practically the same operatic troupe as that of New York, was felt to be so beneficial to all parties, that Mr. Steinway last week cabled Mr. Grau permission to accept it. Much will, of course, depend upon the financial results of next season; for, although the ups and downs of operatic life are notorious, a syndicate of subscribers will naturally want to see two ends meet, although if the fees paid to vocalists in the United States are to rule here, I fear the ends will not meet at all. Mr. Grau is also reputed to have a personal predilection for the operas of the past, for the old Verdi, Bellini, and Donizetti repertory, and these doubtless will best suit some of the "star" artists, and a good many of the older subscribers. The public, however, demand newer works, and therein a danger lies. Even the late Sir Augustus Harris had a difficult task in reconciling the two opinions, and I believe some of the subscribers more than once vigorously protested against the performance of Wagner's operas. Yet these are now the compositions which pay best. The Wagnerites may, at any rate, congratulate themselves that they have a powerful ally in M. Jean de Reszke, who has already appeared in "Lohengrin" and "Die Meistersinger," and is this year so bitten with the success of "Tristan und Isolde," that next season, both in New York and London, he proposes to add to his repertory Siegfried in Wagner's opera of that name, and Siegmund in "Die Walküre."

No novelties were produced during the past opera season. Indeed, there have been no new works produced abroad which at all cry aloud for a hearing here, and no manager in his senses would dream of spending money on the production of mediocrity, unless the foreign publishers were prepared to put down a heavy sum towards the cost. Mme. Calvé did not appear, and thus "Cavalleria Rusticana" was given only twice—the figures published in some of the weekly papers do not agree with the official records—and "Carmen" only three times, while "La Navarraise" was not performed at all, so that it is understood the copyright reverts to the French proprietors. On the other hand, "Roméo et Juliette," as usual, heads the list with eight representations, the part of Roméo being a favourite of both the leading tenors of the company, M. Jean de Reszke and M. Alvarez. Moreover, the opera is not a very expensive one to cast, and is, therefore, beloved by managers. "Faust" came next with six performances, and then the three Wagner operas, "Die Meistersinger," "Tannhäuser," which was given in French, and "Lohengrin," each performed five times. "Tristan und Isolde," although given only four times, was very trying to the voice of Madame Albani, the Isolde; while "Die Walküre" was only given twice, for the German colony boycotted the opera because it was performed in French, an extremely silly piece of Chauvinism. Madame Melba was, of course, the star prima donna, and during the present season indeed, as she had no real competitor, she has immensely improved her position here. The De Reszkes and M. Alvarez have also done some splendid work, but none of the new comers made any particular hit.

The hitch concerning the projected autumn opera season at Covent Garden arises from the fact that Mr. Hedmondt had signed a contract with the Carl Rosa Company as their principal tenor on tour, agreeing also to accept no other operatic engagements. The Carl Rosa Company accordingly depend on him to sing the leading parts in some of their most attractive productions, such as "Die Walküre," "Tannhäuser," and "Lohengrin." Mr. Hedmondt, however, now desires to direct an autumn season of Wagner's operas in English at Covent Garden, and he proposed, if the Carl Rosa Company would release him, that he would secure for the Company Covent Garden for a London season early in the new year. But the Carl Rosa Company do not want so large a house as Covent Garden, and would be quite satisfied if they could fill every night a theatre of the size of the Lyceum or the Adelphi. They therefore hold Mr. Hedmondt to his provincial contract. But surely a way can be found out of the difficulty. Tenors, it is true, are scarce; but Mr. Hedmondt is not the only vocalist available either for the Carl Rosa Company or for Covent Garden. Indeed, the experiment tried last year of doubling the parts of impresario and leading tenor is hardly one to be repeated.

A good deal of nonsense has been written and telegraphed last week from Bayreuth, and the gentleman who spread himself to the extent of half a column in a telegraphic description of the plot of "Der Ring des Nibelungen" must have been a greenhorn indeed. A few straight words of truth concerning the incapacity of some of the Bayreuth vocalists have been spoken. But the absurdity of the panegyrics in which others have indulged is pretty plainly shown by the eulogy with which Miss Brema has been greeted in the comparatively small rôle of Fricka. Miss Brema is, of course, a very good artist, but the fact that she is declared to be so immeasurably above her companions will suffice to indicate the present vocal standard of Bayreuth. And Bayreuth will probably go from bad to worse so long as German writers insist that none but their own compatriots shall be engaged to sing the chief parts there. Next year it seems "Der Ring des Nibelungen" is to be repeated, but with a better cast, and in 1897 also "Parsifal," which this year is shunted, will be revived.

The Crystal Palace concerts will begin this year on October 3—two or three weeks earlier than usual. The result of this very sensible step will probably be that the London season will henceforward commence at the end of September, instead of late in October. Hitherto concert managers have thought it wise to wait until the provincial Musical Festivals were over; but the festivals are rapidly losing their musical importance, and in the present year, although about half-a-dozen festivals are announced, there is not likely to be a single novelty which will tempt eminent musicians to leave London. At Worcester they depend on a local musician for a short novelty, the Bristol programme is a disappointment, while Norwich is again more or less a festival of the Italians. By delaying the commencement of the London concert season until October, November became an unworkable month; as busy, indeed, as May or June. Last year some of the concert-givers broke through the rule, and started early in October, with most successful results. The Crystal Palace has followed suit, and M. Colonne will this autumn commence his week of concert-giving with his Paris orchestra on October 12—the week, by the way, of the Sheffield and Bristol festivals. In the future, unless a festival possesses a very strong programme indeed, it will have to be over by the end of September if the committee desire to attract any more than merely local attention.

GIRLS' GOSSIP.

DEAREST AMY,—I want to tell you all about the Royal wedding, but must try not to dwell unduly on the details that have been so fully gone into in the budget of papers, illustrated and otherwise, that I have sent you. Richard and I were fortunate enough to receive cards for the Terrace at Buckingham Palace, so he in his uniform, and I in my best bib and tucker, presented ourselves at the Buckingham Palace-road entrance with extreme punctuality, as you may imagine. In fact, we were so excessively punctual that, in common with some hundreds of others similarly placed, we had to wait outside until the covered way was finished. It was being draped with pure white muslin, and this, with the carpet of ripe-cherry red, produced the Danish colours. At eleven o'clock we were all admitted, and found that the covered way was carried completely up to the Terrace, and, being open at the sides, we had a view of the gardens, with the lake in the centre, and a lively fountain making a playful bridal whiteness all by itself in the deserted grounds. The trees and grass looked rusty, like their other less favoured compeers who have not the advantage of being tended by Royal gardeners. But all verdure and foliage is dry and thirsty after the long drought.

The Terrace, you know, runs behind Buckingham Palace on the garden side, and has a broad flight of steps in the very middle. The half on the Pimlico side of the steps was covered in, roof and sides, with canvas, in which windows were inserted. The whole of the canvas had been lined with white muslin, the supports being covered with Danish red, and the floor covered with a carpet to match. Against the white walls were ranged at intervals tall palms, whose greenery made a refreshing contrast with the white and red. The Yeomen of the Guard, in their picturesque uniform, looked splendid against the pure white of the muslin, and the whole scene was one of beauty and refinement, such as befitted the Palace of a great Queen. You cannot imagine how much of this fine effect was due to the soft white muslin that lined the canvas.

Lord Limerick, in command of the Yeomen of the Guard, stood at the end of the Terrace, and the band of the Grenadier Guards occupied one corner of the large square formed by the canopy opening out from the window of the Bow Library to the garden steps. In the opposite corner sat some Danish officers. Richard and I got as near that end as possible, he sitting behind me, as the front seats were all occupied by ladies. This was a good arrangement from a spectacular point of view, the light dresses and flower-trimmed hats and toques making a long line of soft, bright colour on either side. Uniform or evening dress was imperative for men. The officers who were present wore their medals and the great people their stars, medals, and orders, it being a great occasion.

After we were all seated we found the time pass rather slowly, there being no music. The band was there for the sole purpose, as we afterwards discovered, of playing marches for the various Royal processions. But still there was occupation in noting our neighbours and their dresses. In our immediate vicinity was the beautiful Marchioness of Hastings, whose colouring is the most perfect I have ever seen. She has quantities of hair of the true auburn, dark brown with a glint of red where the high lights touch it. It is the rarest hair, and is always accompanied by a clear white complexion, with the softest pink upon the cheeks. In this instance the eyes are a golden hazel in some lights, with now a violet tinge and again a depth of sunny brown. With the Marchioness, who wore a very becoming dress of white silk striped with black satin, the bodice covered with open work jet, studded with cabochons of the same, was her second daughter, Miss Olive Chetwynd, whose early girlish freshness was admirably suited to her white muslin with insertions of Valenciennes over a lining of yellow silk. Her picturesque black hat shaded a white brow, large dark eyes, and a gentle face of considerable charm. Almost opposite was Mr. Reuben Sassoon, with Mrs. Sassoon and Mrs. Leopold Rothschild. Further down was Canon Duckworth and a group of other ecclesiastics, who seemed to be enjoying a monopoly of jokes, to judge from their hearty laughter. Mrs. Lawrence Drummond and Mrs. Gerard Leigh, one in pure white, and both divinely tall, sat not far off, near Lady Burton and Mrs. Beerbohm Tree, whose enormous hat, tilted sideways, was abundantly garnished with beige feathers. We soon had mastered all these details, and had discovered M. Johannes Wolff in a quiet corner with a lady, and afterwards we felt the proceedings to be monotonous. But it was something to be comfortably seated, with plenty of air and agreeable surroundings, and Lord Arthur Hill passed up and down more than once in his blue and gold uniform, his hand full of papers. So there were alleviations.

At length a murmur and a bustle and the word "Attention!" with the resultant grounding of the Yeomen's halberds, announced that the Procession of the Royal Family was approaching. We had time to admire the beauty of the ushers' pure white uniforms, with silk stockings and knee-breeches, and the splendour of the heralds' magnificent bravery, before there entered to us the imposing array of officials who preceded the Duchess of Teck. Dressed in grey and gold brocade, with low bodice and short sleeves, demi-toilette evening dress being the order of the day, Princess Mary was as stately as she is always genial. Her magnificent jewels included a necklace of enormous emeralds. With her was the Duke of Teck in scarlet uniform. Then followed Prince and Princess Edward of Schaumburg-Lippe, but I did not look at them, being fully engaged in remarking the wonderful improvement in the Duchess of York, whose stately carriage and fine poise of head gave added effect to her appearance. She was dressed in bright reddish mauve brocade, a tint that suited her fair colouring extremely well, and her jewels were splendid. She wore a tiara of pearls and diamonds, and had around her neck a collar containing five rows of large diamonds, besides a rivière of diamonds and a pearl and diamond necklace. With her walked Prince Nicholas of Greece. He had not the blithe and happy look I have seen him wear.

The Duchess of Fife, looking, as usual, like a bit of Dresden china, walked next in white and silver brocade arranged with knots of bright rose-pink velvet on the shoulders. The Duke of Fife was with her.

The next Princess whom I remarked—for though they all passed slowly I could not separately identify each one among so many—was Princess Louise, Marchioness of Lorne, with her Marquis. She is as young and handsome as ever, with that brightness of air and manner which has always characterised her. Her graceful figure looked its best in a charming dress of black net, embroidered with sequins, and showing a white satin lining through the meshes of the net. A few touches of pink about the bodice rendered it very becoming. The sleeves were short frills of the net, edged with silver sequins. A few pink roses nestled in its folds. The Princess wore beautiful diamonds. Princess Christian and her husband followed, and then came the Duke and Duchess of Connaught. The next couple were the Duke and Duchess of Sparta, the latter a daughter of the Empress Frederick and the former a son of the Princess of Wales's brother, the King of the Hellenes. The last quartet of this galaxy of Royalties were the Duke of Cambridge, walking with the remarkably tall Crown Princess of Denmark, and our Princess of Wales with her brother the Crown Prince. The Princess wore a sweetly harmonious dress of grey satin, veiled with grey silk muslin, and showing subtle gleams of silver in embroideries here and there. Across her bodice was the red ribbon of the Danish Royal Family, and her jewels were splendid. In addition to a high collar of pearls, a necklace of pearls and diamonds glittered round her neck, and her tiara was very high and very handsome. She looked sad, but most beautiful.

Now, was not that an interesting procession? And as they all walked quite slowly we had abundance of time to take in almost every individual. I missed some, however, including the Duchess of Albany and her sister, and one or two others.

The next procession was that of the bridegroom. It was so arranged—I was just going to write "stage-managed"—that he walked alone, the central figure—a tall, handsome, well-set-up young fellow, with good temper and a sunny disposition written distinctly on his manly face. He wore the uniform of a Lieutenant in the Danish Navy.

Just behind him walked his two brothers, the eldest extremely tall, like his mother. He was in a scarlet uniform, with a light blue ribbon across it.

The third and last procession was the bride's. Lightly touching the arm of her father with her gloved fingers, she came past us looking as if she had indulged in a good cry. She was very pale and looked extremely nervous. The Prince, on the contrary, wore an air of perfect happiness and geniality. He smiled and bowed with a radiant look as he walked. Princess Maud's dress suited her splendidly. I have told you about it before. Her pretty neck and shoulders had nothing to fear from the daylight. Her veil floated back from her face, and allowed us to see the large dark eyes heavy with the languor left by recent tears. I thought there was too much green in her bouquet.

The eight bridesmaids followed in their white satin dresses, with a cluster of red geraniums on each bodice and a spray fastened in with a white aigrette in each coiffure of the four elder ones. The other four, being children, wore red wreaths in their hair and carried baskets of red flowers instead of bouquets. Of the whole group, not one attracted so much attention as the little Lady Alexandra Duff, the Duke and Duchess of Fife's eldest daughter. This little damsel of five summers comported herself with a quite remarkable grace and self-possession. Her beautiful little head is covered with rings and curls of fair hair cut short, and her straight little limbs carried her along with an erectness and decision of gait that may be supposed to indicate force of character. She wore socks and low shoes, and was as dainty a small maiden as ever stepped.

And so ended the processions. After a long wait, during which we had plenty to talk about, the bride and bridegroom, now husband and wife, came back again, holding each other by the hand; and now the bride looked her own serene self again, and had a tinge of pink upon her pretty face. Prince Charles seemed to have had quite enough of processions. Princess Victoria of Wales was evidently sorrowing for the impending parting. The Princess of Wales smiled more gaily than she had done before. The Prince beamed, and they both nodded to friends on either hand as they passed up. The Duke of York was carrying some one's bouquet. And so they all passed out of our sight again.

Directly after, a buzz of subdued voices ran along the lines of spectators, and Mr. and Mrs. Gladstone came up the terrace, the former wearing the dress of an Elder Brother of the Trinity, and appearing to be rather excited, and the latter in black, with fine old white lace disposed upon it. She wore her bodice very much off the shoulders. On her head was a black coif, with informal streamers of white tulle floating out at the back. The next arrival was the Duke of Portland, in his magnificent uniform as Master of the Horse. And soon after him came all the Dukes and Duchesses and other distinguished persons who had been in the chapel. It was strange to see the ladies all in evening dress at that hour of the day; rather an ordeal, you know, and one which proved trying to several. Those who stood it best were the Duchess of Abercorn, the Duchess of Portland, and Lady Knollys, who had with her a lovely little daughter, with beautiful hair and eyes, and prettily dressed in soft pink and white. It was a wonderful show of jewels, quite equal to that presented by the Royalties. The Duchess of Abercorn outshone everyone else. She wore pale mauve with a cluster of lilac on one shoulder and a large diamond bow on the other, and many diamond ornaments on the bodice. Her necklaces were magnificent—one being in very large sapphires and diamonds—and her diamond tiara was by far the most graceful and beautiful we had seen. It was in a design of roses and leaves raised in relief; a spray being arranged both back and front under the high points, and at the sides the tiara ended in a sprig of roses and leaves. The Duchess of Devonshire had an all-round tiara, but I never think these so becoming as the others. They are too stiff and always suggest scalping to my ill-regulated imagination. The "Double Duchess" wore marvellous necklaces of diamonds and pearls. The Duchess of Portland's sapphires were as large as the Duchess of Teck's emeralds. Countess Cadogan had also splendid jewels, and the Marquise d'Hautpoul had a tiara round her head and another round her neck. Surrounded by distinguished men in uniform, such as Mr. Goschen, Mr. Chamberlain, Lord Rosebery, Lord Cross, Lord Wolseley, the Bishop of Winchester (with a diamond cross suspended from his collar), Sir William Harcourt, Lord George Hamilton and his brother—the Duke of Abercorn, Lord Carrington, and the Chevalier de Souza Correa (with a wonderful show of medals upon his breast and a crimson and yellow ribbon), the ladies stood talking for a long time, and we soon left the brilliant scene to go and see the chapel.

The floral decorations were beautiful. The pillars were wreathed with red and white roses. On the altar stood two vases of lily of the valley, Princess Maud's favourite flower. At the back was a sort of screen made entirely of exquisite white flowers. Two tall vases were filled with Eucharis lilies, and the Greek form of Christus was carried out in white flowers at either side. At each side of the altar rails were hung double festoons of lily of the valley and green leaves. The tall brass supports were utilised as flower-holders, and an exquisite touch was the introduction of some bright scarlet orchids. The chapel was quite transformed with all this wealth of lovely blossom. We asked who had done it, and were told that it was the work of Mr. Owen Thomas, the Queen's gardener at Windsor Castle. He must be an artist.

We had that day the unique experience of driving across Hyde Park in a hansom, in company with omnibuses, vans, drags, and, in fact, the whole of the ordinary traffic of Knightsbridge and Piccadilly, which had been turned into the Park in order to clear the route of the bridal procession.

We spent a delightfully pleasant afternoon at Ranelagh on Saturday, and found places quite near the Royal pavilion, where the Prince and Princess of Wales, with the Duke and Duchess of Sparta, and the Crown Prince of Denmark with his sons and daughters, looked on at the admirable programme with its amusing events. The Princess of Wales, looking charming, was particularly bright and animated; and Princess Victoria seemed immensely amused by the wonderful dummies and by the Victoria Cross race, in which the competitors had each to jump a hurdle with one of the dummies on his horse. The potato race was very funny, too. We liked the tandem race, because it showed to such perfection the points of the beautiful horses. The winning pair were especially fine, the leader more particularly.

The Princess distributed the prizes, and among the winners was one young lady who had dressed the best dummy, in a Norman fishwife's costume. She advanced very gracefully with a becoming blush, but without a trace of awkwardness. The ordeal was rather a trying one.

The Royal Party afterwards witnessed the musical ride by young ladies on flower-decked bicycles in another part of the grounds. The Prince, on leaving, complimented Lord Ava and Mr. Miller on the excellent programme and the smoothness of its working. Everything went admirably, and it was a very pretty scene, with the long lines of gaily-dressed spectators seated on either side of the course, some in the sunshine and others under the shade of the grand old trees.

We were attracted by some glorious La France roses in Goodyear's window on Tuesday, and going in to get some, saw miles of pale blue and pale pink ribbon being cut into lengths over billows of smilax. No doubt we looked interrogative, for we were told that this was part of the preparation for the Duchess of Devonshire's cotillon that night. The decorations must have been lovely with baskets of flowers and other devices; wands with bunches of flowers were used in one figure, and flags in another. The presents were flowers, fans, silk bags, gloves, handkerchiefs, and even stockings. The cotillon seems to have been fading out of favour of late, but this one revived all its splendours.

One of the prettiest of Princess Maud's wedding presents was the set of dainty little silver toast racks given by thirty ladies in society whose name is Maud. The divisions in each rack were in the form of the letter "M.," and were surmounted by models of her Royal Highness's coronet. They were designed and manufactured by the Goldsmiths' and Silversmiths' Company.

We saw the new felt hats with sugar-loaf crowns at Clematis's shop in Maddox-street. They are sweetly becoming, but we did not invest, our thoughts being bent on seaside straws both light and cool, and, as there was a sale on, we secured some agreeable bargains.

Clare sends me the following from Dublin:—

Dearest Madge,—How glad you must all be that the "season" is over! How you people in town have stood the almost tropical heat of the past few weeks is more than we people not in town can understand. And yet you continued to rush and to crush, to crowd, feast, and bedeck yourselves in festive array. You may well claim fashion's crown of martyrdom for the fiery ordeal you must have gone through. In weather ideally perfect for musing meditation, for the restorative tranquillity of the contemplative life, you have led the most arduous of active lives. With no Acts of Parliament to impose time limits on your work of amusing yourselves, scorning the ease of an eight or even twelve hours' day, you have cheerfully done throughout the season an almost twenty-four hours' one. With what superiority Diogenes from his tub would have looked on such toil as yours! We, in the cool calmness of an unfashionable seaside place, have been, so far inclined to become disciples of that crusty philosopher as to read with wonder the chronicles of the "season," including Royal garden-parties, wedding festivities, and so on. And the long columns of recorded toilets! The mere descriptions of the frills, fulness, embroideries, and all the superfluities of full dress made one hot. One has read of grandeur hearing with a disdainful smile "the short and simple annals of the poor"! Perhaps the poor, on their side, are prompted to smile at the more complex chronicles of grandeur.

The break in the weather here last week was a very rude one, and came when the Kingstown Regatta was in progress. The landsman and the racing seaman have not the same ideal with regard to weather. The rougher atmospheric conditions which disturbed the equanimity of the wearers of airy summer costumes at the club houses were, no doubt, more favourably received by the yachtsmen. During the first day the rain kept off, though the wind was fresh, but the second day was disastrous from our point of view. Nevertheless, there was a large attendance each day at the Royal George Yacht Club, under whose auspices the regatta took place this year. The Duke of York is Commodore of this Club, and the Lord-Lieutenant is a member. There was no Viceregal patronage given to the occasion, but we have by this given up expecting much from our present Viceregal rulers. The Kaiser's Meteor was a great feature of the regatta, Lord Lonsdale representing in the races the imperial owner. The great William's yacht won both the events in which she took part, beating in each his Royal uncle's Britannia, the Ailsa, and others. The yachts have little to do with the festivity, however, for those who enjoy it in the Club, listening to military music, and partaking of tea and ices. The guns that one hears at intervals alone recall one to the fact that we are not only assembled to merely meet each other. Most of the yachts departed for other regattas at once. At the end of the week Kingstown had an excitement still greater than that of having the Meteor and Britannia in its harbour in the appearance of many great battleships and torpedo-catchers, which took up their station just outside the harbour, in an arm of Dublin Bay between Kingstown and Dalkey. A thunderstorm and frightful weather of many varieties greeted them on Saturday. A battle in Dublin Bay is eagerly being hoped for after the Sunday rest.—Yours ever, Clare.

I am giving you this week a recipe for preserving green plums, as we have just ordered a quantity of Pollard, the fruit-grower at Evesham, of whom we obtain all our fruit, and are about to work upon this very recipe. I am sending you a small pot of the jam, made a year ago, and as every one pronounces it delicious I fancy you will like it. We put about half the kernels in, boiling the stones and drying them before manipulating them, which made the work both clean and easy :—

Divide the plums, take out the stones, and put them on to large dishes, with roughly-pounded sugar sprinkled over them, allowing ¾ lb. to every 1 lb. of fruit, and let them remain for one day; then put them into a preserving pan, stand them by the side of the fire to simmer gently for about half an hour, and then boil them rapidly for another fifteen minutes.

You will like this. It is called Riz à l'Impératrice :—

Blanch 4 oz. of Carolina rice in boiling water for five minutes, strain and put it into a pint and a half of boiling milk and allow it to simmer gently until soft, but not pulpy. While this is in process prepare a macédoine of 4 oz. of crystallised fruits. Cut the fruit into small dice-shaped pieces, and stir them over the fire, in a small omelette pan, with a liqueur glass of Kirschwasser, or any nice liqueur, until the fruit has absorbed all the moisture. Now drain the milk from the rice, and convert the milk into a custard by adding 5 oz. of pounded sugar, 8 yolks of eggs, and sufficient milk to make up the quantity (that will have evaporated) to a pint and a half; stir over the fire until creamy, then mix in ¾ oz. of dissolved gelatine, and when it has cooled add a gill of whipped cream, embed a plain mould in rough ice, pour in the cream, and, when nearly set, mix the rice and the prepared fruit very carefully into it. When the cream is quite firm, turn it on to a dish, and pour round half a pint of syrup, which is coloured pink, and flavoured with a little of the same kind of liqueur as that used for the macédoine.

To convert this into an ice pudding :—Put the cream into a hermetically-closed mould, and imbed it in ice and salt for three hours, in which case no sauce is required.

This is Riz à la Reine :—

Prepare the rice in the same way as for Riz à l'Impératrice, but instead of the macédoine of fruit, add a purée of 4 oz. of blanched and pounded almonds, and 1 or 2 drops of essence of bitter almonds. Finish in the same manner.

Ever, dear, your loving cousin, MADGE.

THE HOMACOUSTIC.

WHAT IS THE HOMACOUSTIC?

THE HOMACOUSTIC is a contrivance connected with Speaking Tubes, which entirely supersedes for indoor purposes not only the Telephone, but all other existing arrangements for indoor inter-communication.

THE HOMACOUSTIC
Is Automatic, not Mechanical. Once fixed always in Working Order. Its first cost is its last cost.

WITH THE HOMACOUSTIC
There is no blowing into pipes. The automatic whistle is always in position. One speaks and listens at the same time. The tube is closed when not in actual use. Ordinary speaking tubes can be utilised.

ONE (No. 4) HOMACOUSTIC
Places the speaker in communication with any Number of Rooms.

THE HOMACOUSTIC
Is of special value and inestimable convenience not only in business establishments, but in all Private Houses.

BRITISH WORKMAN'S AND GENERAL ASSURANCE COMPANY LIMITED.

ESTABLISHED IN 1866.

CHIEF OFFICES:—
BROAD STREET CORNER, BIRMINGHAM.

LONDON OFFICES:—
2, WEST STREET, FINSBURY PAVEMENT.

BRITISH WORKMAN'S AND GENERAL ASSURANCE COMPANY LIMITED.

The Thirtieth Annual Meeting was held in Birmingham on Tuesday the 14th inst.

BRITISH WORKMAN'S AND GENERAL ASSURANCE COMPANY, LIMITED.

EXTRACT FROM THE REPORT.—The results of the year's working, surpass everything before accomplished. The increase in business in the past, and the still greater increase expected in the future, have rendered it necessary for the Company to take in a further considerable portion of the Broad-street-corner property.

BRITISH WORKMAN'S AND GENERAL ASSURANCE COMPANY, LIMITED.

OLD AGE PENSIONS.—During the year further efforts have been made to meet the requirements of the Old Age Pension Scheme, under the Company's Endowment Assurance policies, and Special Tables of benefits have been issued.

BRITISH WORKMAN'S AND GENERAL ASSURANCE COMPANY, LIMITED.

SPECIAL INDUSTRIAL TABLES.—These also have been prepared, and they show the great advantages to be derived from the payment of premiums either yearly, half-yearly, or quarterly, instead of weekly. Under these tables a considerable amount of business has already been transacted.

BRITISH WORKMAN'S AND GENERAL ASSURANCE COMPANY, LIMITED.

INCOME AND EXPENDITURE.—The total income of the Company was £438,250 and total expenditure £395,249, leaving a balance on the year's accounts of £43,001.

BRITISH WORKMAN'S AND GENERAL ASSURANCE COMPANY, LIMITED.

NEW BUSINESS.—The total number of policies issued for the year was 354,805 at an annual premium of £218,587.

BRITISH WORKMAN'S AND GENERAL ASSURANCE COMPANY, LIMITED.

CLAIMS.—The amount paid in claims during the year in the Ordinary Department was £15,527, including £1,153 in surrender claims. The amount paid in the Industrial Department was £160,295, including £8,051 in surrender claims.

BRITISH WORKMAN'S AND GENERAL ASSURANCE COMPANY, LIMITED.

DIVIDEND.—The Directors recommend a dividend at the rate of 12½ per cent. upon the paid-up Capital of the Company, free of income tax. This dividend, which is in course of payment, is the largest distribution hitherto paid to the Shareholders, and the prospect is of a steadily increasing dividend from year to year. The Shares—£1 fully paid—are now quoted at 50s., and at this high premium it is difficult to obtain them.

BRITISH WORKMAN'S AND GENERAL ASSURANCE COMPANY, LIMITED.

A YOUNG ENTHUSIAST.—More than thirty years have elapsed since Mr. Port, a young enthusiast in the cause of industrial assurance, conceived the idea of establishing a company in the great Midland capital. He had unbounded faith in the success of a company offering broad and liberal conditions, and was prepared to deal generously with claims as they arose.

BRITISH WORKMAN'S AND GENERAL ASSURANCE COMPANY, LIMITED.

A NOBLE SELF-SACRIFICE.—For the first few months after the establishment of the Company the indoor staff of the office consisted solely of Henry Port, and such was the arduous character of his occupation that he laboured by night, as well as by day, snatching an occasional hour of repose in the office itself.

BRITISH WORKMAN'S AND GENERAL ASSURANCE COMPANY, LIMITED.

THE DAY OF FEEBLE THINGS.—In the first five years the average premium income was £2,131. The average annual income during the last quinquennium is £347,819. The comparison is convincing proof of the growing confidence of the people, and of the expanding strength and usefulness of the Company. The premium income of the year 1895-96 exceeds that of the average of the quinquennium, and amounts to £428,089.

BRITISH WORKMAN'S AND GENERAL ASSURANCE COMPANY, LIMITED.

THE TESTIMONY OF FIGURES.—The premium income for the last thirteen years is briefly stated as below:—

PREMIUM INCOME.

1885	130,057
1886	142,864
1887	153,384
1888	173,543
1889	207,575
1890	243,889
1891	274,969
1892	289,406
1893	306,234
1894	335,282
1895	380,088
1896	428,089

BRITISH WORKMAN'S AND GENERAL ASSURANCE COMPANY, LIMITED.

AN INTERESTING ANNIVERSARY.—The Company now celebrates its Thirtieth Anniversary. There are only ten other British Life Offices which possess a greater income. Among them are the following:—

Established.	Names.	Annual premium income.
1815	Scottish Widows'	£947,919
1848	Gresham	862,266
1825	Standard	786,246
1823	North British and Mercantile	678,356
1837	Scottish Provident	585,471
1843	Star	459,186
1840	U.K. Temperance and General	439,024
1845	Royal (1895)	402,460

These Offices were all established before the BRITISH WORKMAN'S AND GENERAL ASSURANCE COMPANY, LIMITED.

BRITISH WORKMAN'S AND GENERAL ASSURANCE COMPANY, LIMITED.

TRIUMPHAL PROGRESS.—The progress has been triumphal. The modest venture of 1866 has developed into a large and prosperous Company, with a total income of £438,250, and total funds amounting to £249,429.

BRITISH WORKMAN'S AND GENERAL ASSURANCE COMPANY, LIMITED.

A NATIONAL INSTITUTION.—In the British Workman's and General Assurance Company Mr. Port has built up a National Institution of great usefulness to the community, and it will remain an enduring memorial of his life's work.

BRITISH WORKMAN'S & GENERAL ASSURANCE COMPANY, LIMITED.

THE IDEAL LIFE ASSURANCE COMPANY.

PROSPECTUS.

This Company was formed in July, 1894, the Vendors taking shares for their interest in the business without any payment in cash. A prospectus was issued inviting subscriptions for 4½ per Cent. First Mortgage Debenture Stock to the amount of £150,000, the whole of which was subscribed. In January this year the Company issued 20,000 5 per Cent. Cumulative Preference Shares of £5 each, which were fully subscribed, and the proceeds have been all invested in licensed houses. The Directors believing that still further capital can be profitably employed, invite subscriptions for £150,000 "B" Mortgage Debenture Stock, which will be issued at a premium of £8 per cent., and will bear interest at the rate of 4½ per cent. per annum.

The object of the issue is to purchase other licensed house properties, and further extend the business.

The "B" Mortgage Debenture Stock of £150,000 and the interest thereon will be secured by a specific charge to Trustees of property representing an expenditure of upwards of £300,000 (power being reserved to the Company to sell, lease, and deal with the same for the purposes of the business), and by a floating charge in their favour on the general undertaking of the Company, and such charges are to rank next after the £150,000 Original Debenture Stock, and the securities for the same, but no further floating charge is to be placed before or rank pari passu with the "B" Mortgage Debenture Stock.

The property thus to be specifically Mortgaged will consist of

(a) The Freehold, Leasehold, and Copyhold Properties, &c., and Fixed plant comprised in the Trust Deed for securing the original Debenture Stock, valued by Messrs. Mason & Sons in July, 1894, at	150,045	0	0
(b) The Property and the Mortgages to be acquired with the proceeds up to £150,000 of the present issue	150,000	0	0
	£300,045	0	0

The assets of the Company (exclusive of goodwill), as appearing in the last Balance Sheet, are as follows:—

The Brewery Maltings and Freehold and Leasehold Public-houses and Plant	174,246	15	6
Book Debts and Moneys advanced on Mortgage	64,629	13	8
Other Assets, consisting of Cash, Casks, Stock in Trade, &c. ...	46,745	12	7
	£285,622	1	9
To which must be added the Licensed Houses acquired with the proceeds of the 100,000 Preference Shares...	100,000	0	0
The Assets to be acquired with the proceeds of the present Issue	162,000	0	0
	£547,622	1	9

In the above Summary of Assets nothing is included for Goodwill.

The Profits for the year ending 30th September, 1895, as per Balance Sheet enclosed, amounted to	£23,415
The Profits on Trade acquired during the current year by investment of new Capital are carefully estimated to amount to	9,300
Estimated Profit to be derived from the investment of £162,000 produced by this issue of £150,000 "B" Mortgage Debenture Stock at, say, 8 per cent.	12,960
	£45,675

Deduct Interest on £150,000 First Mortgage Debenture Stock	£6,750
Deduct interest on £150,000 "B" Mortgage Debenture Stock (present issue)	6,750	13,500
Surplus applicable for payment of Dividend on £100,000 5 per cent. Preference Shares (£5,000), Directors' Fees (£1,500), and Dividend on Ordinary Shares		£32,175

The trade of the Brewery has shown continual extension as shown by the following Barrelage of Beer sold:—

Year ending September 30th, 1893		59,882
" " 1894		61,917
" " 1895		68,071
Six winter months ending March 30th, 1896	34,368
Three summer months ending June 30th, 1896	19,795
Three summer months ending September 30th, 1896, estimated at	21,000	75,163

The Sales in June, 1896, amounted to 7,101 barrels, as against 5,981 barrels in June, 1895, showing an increase of 1,120 barrels for the month.

A copy of the Company's audited accounts will be sent to each registered Debenture holder annually.

Copies of the Memorandum and Articles of Association of the Company, and the draft of Trust Deed constituting and securing the "B" Mortgage Debenture Stock can be inspected at the offices of the Solicitors, Messrs. Young, Jones, & Co.

Applications for the "B" Mortgage Debenture Stock must be made on the form accompanying the prospectus, and sent together with a deposit of 10 per cent. to the National Provincial Bank of England, Limited, Bishopsgate, E.C., or any of its branches.

Prospectuses and Forms of Application may be obtained at the Offices of the Company, of the Bankers, Solicitors, Auditor, and Broker.

In cases where no allotment is made the deposit will be returned in full. When the amount allotted is less than that subscribed for, the balance of the deposit will be applied towards the payment of the amount due on allotment.

Provisional Scrip Certificates will be issued after the amount due on allotment is paid and Definitive Certificates will be issued by the Company as soon as possible after the payments are completed.

A quotation on the Official List of the Stock Exchange will be applied for in due course.

The objects for which this Company has been formed comprise the following:—The establishment in London and the Provinces of depôts for the cleaning, repairing, storing, and sale of cycles. The supply of all accessories connected with the use of cycles. The teaching of cycling and the provision of every accessory conducive to the enjoyment of this popular sport. In connection with the above will be maintained a large and efficient staff, who will travel about the various districts in which the depôts exist for the purpose of cleaning and executing minor repairs to the machines of subscribers at their own residences.

The system by which it is intended to carry out the above objects consists of an annual subscription of £1 6s., for which sum the following services will be rendered, and the undermentioned benefits secured:—

CLEANING.—Relieving cyclists of the disagreeable task of cleaning and adjusting their machines.——INSURANCE.—Subscribers insured against accident whilst cycling for the following amounts:—£100 at death, £50 loss of one limb, and £2 per week for five weeks during total disablement.——STORAGE.—Storing subscribers' machines when out of use, and keeping them in cleanliness and order until required by their respective owners.——TUITION.—Tuition to learners by competent instructors.——SIGNAL CARDS.—Providing a signal card which subscribers will place in their window when the services of a cleaner or repairer are required.

The following letter has been received by Mr. Gavin from Mr. Harvey du Cros, Managing Director of the Pneumatic Tyre Company:—The Pneumatic Tyre Company, Ltd., 14, Regent st., London, S.W., July 18th, 1896. W. A. Gavin, Esq., care of Gavin's House-to-House Cycle Cleaning and Insurance Co., Ltd. Dear Sir,—I have now considered very carefully the details of the House-to-House Cleaning Company which it is proposed to form, and I am of opinion that such an organisation will offer very great advantages to the ever-increasing cycling public. The system upon which you propose to work appears to me to be sound, and one which, subject to capable management, should bring substantial results to investors. On the point of management, however, so much depends upon the proper appreciation of the scope of this scheme that I for one would consider it essential that you should direct it personally. If this is agreeable to you, then my firm will be prepared to enter into the proposed working arrangement with the proposed Company.—Yours faithfully, HARVEY DU CROS, Managing Director Dunlop Pneumatic Tyre Co. Mr. W. A. Gavin has consented to act as Managing Director to the Company for a definite period.

The sources whence the Company's profits are to be derived are as under:—Profit on cleaning 500 cycles per week at each Depôt. Profit on the sale and exchange of cycles. Profit on the sale of accessories, outfits, and miscellaneous articles. Profit on substantial repairs.

Subsidies from manufacturers (already assured). There are also additional sources of revenue which have not been included in the above, but which are covered by the plan of the Company's intended operations. Full and exhaustive particulars of the Company's plans have been submitted by the Vendor to the well-known firm of Chartered Accountants, Messrs. W. H. Pannell and Co., whose report follows, from which it will be seen that an annual profit of not less than £35,880 should be made by 50 depôts. Taking the figures stated, and deducting the sum of £5,000 for general administration, Directors' fees, and various charges, there remains a net annual income of £30,880, equal to 20 per cent. upon the present issue of Ordinary Shares after providing the proportion to which the Founders' Shares are entitled.

The following is a copy of Messrs. Pannell and Co.'s report:—Library Chambers, 13 and 14, Bassinghall-street, E.C., June 29, 1896. Dear Sir,—We have gone carefully into the details of your scheme for cycle cleaning, &c., and also into the estimates you have submitted to us. We find that these estimates are based upon a very careful consideration of the facts you have gathered from various sources connected with the subject. In our opinion, your estimate that each depôt consisting of 500 subscribers should give your Company a net profit of £717 12s. per annum is fair and reasonable.

In coming to this conclusion reasonable allowances have been made for contingencies, management expenses, &c. The above profit is subject to the deduction for Directors' fees and general administration. You have produced to us, and we have carefully checked, the list of subscribers in London alone, and we find that you have already obtained 12,500 annual subscribers at 26s., which is sufficient to start 25 depôts, and which at the above rate would represent an annual profit of £17,940. We have also inspected the weekly returns of inquiries for cycles from your superintendents in the various districts, and these represent an average per week of five cycles per depôt, in addition to the large number of accessories and requests for cycles on hire.—Yours faithfully, W. H. PANNELL and Co., Chartered Accountants.—W. A. GAVIN, Esq.

The Company is protected from risk in the insurance department by a policy arranged for on advantageous terms with the Ocean Accident and Guarantee Corporation, Ltd.

Valuable offers have been received from many high-class manufacturers for exclusive supply of their products and for advertisements at the Company's depôts, which would, if accepted, bring in to the Company considerable additional revenue. The Vendor has fixed the price to be paid for everything, including the benefit of his arrangements with manufacturers, 12,000 signed application forms from subscribers (representing revenue of £16,000 per annum), the cost of forming and floating the Company, and his services at a moderate salary as Managing Director, at £23,000 in cash, 2,000 Founders' Shares (less such as may be allotted by the Directors to subscribers of 250 shares and upwards), and £25,000 in cash or shares, or partly in each, at the option of the Directors, subject to the stipulation that he has the option for himself and his nominees to claim a preferential allotment of shares up to 10,000. 50,000 shares will thus remain available for working capital, which should be ample to thoroughly establish and equip fifty depôts and allow for further extensions. For contracts see full prospectus. The above contract and the Memorandum and Articles of Association may be seen at the offices of the Company's Solicitors. Prospectuses and forms of application may be obtained from the Bankers, Brokers, Solicitor, or Auditors, and from the Secretary, at the offices of the Company.

The List of Applications will OPEN on Wednesday, July 29, 1896, and will CLOSE on or before Friday, July 31, 1896.

LIVERPOOL LIGHTERAGE CO., LIMITED.

Incorporated under the Companies Acts, 1862 to 1890.

CAPITAL £150,000,
Divided into £75,000 Preference and £75,000 Ordinary Shares.

PRESENT ISSUE:—

5,000 Seven per Cent. Cumulative Preference Shares of £10 each	... £50,000
5,000 Ordinary Shares of £10 each...	50,000
	£100,000

No Ordinary Shares are offered for Subscription, the Vendors taking £46,550, and the balance (£3,450) being reserved for the purchase of some Lighters, the negotiations for which are not yet completed.

The Seven per Cent. Cumulative Preference Shares are now offered for Subscription.

There are also offered for Subscription—£80,000 Five per Cent. First Mortgage Debentures in Bonds of £100 each.

Payable as follows—Preference Shares, £1 on Application, £4 on Allotment, and £5 on August 31st, 1896. Debentures, 5 per cent. on Application, 20 per cent. on Allotment, and the Balance, including premium, on August 31, 1896.

The Debentures are offered at £105 per £100 Debenture and are repayable on December 31st, 1920, at £105, with power to the Company to redeem them at any time after 1901 at £110 upon giving six months' notice. Interest will be payable on June 30th, and December 31st in each year, and the Debentures are a first charge on the entire property and assets of the Company. The £80,000 Debentures now offered form part of a series of £90,000. The balance (£10,000) will only be issued in the event of the Company building or purchasing additional lighters or lighterage businesses, and then only in the proportion of one-third of any such purchase.

OFFICES.—14, Water-street, Liverpool.

ABRIDGED PROSPECTUS.

This Company is formed for the purpose of uniting the principal lighterage businesses of Liverpool and other ports of the Mersey, with the object of effecting considerable saving in the management of the flats or lighters and in the distribution of the cargoes, and to enable the lighterage of the Port to be conducted in a more expeditious manner so as to better meet the requirements of the shipping trade.

The Company will include the following well-known and well-established lighterage businesses, viz.:—

J. and W. Barnes	Established about 25 years.
Wm. Bloor & Son	"	" 35	"
Berrington & Company	"	" 10	"
Henry Blower & Co.	"	" 20	"
Wm. Darlington	"	" 10	"
Thos. Harrison & Sons	"	" 30	"
John A. Kelly, Goree Piazzas	"	" 15	"
W. D & H. B. Mack	"	" 25	"
Wm. Newall, Garston	"	" 30	"
Owen Bros.....	"	" 30	"
Thos Robinson & Sons	"	" 20	"
Philip Speakman	"	" 20	"
Thos. Thompson	"	" 20	"

Contracts have already been entered into for the purchase of 185 lighters, flats, and barges, including six steam lighters, and the Company is in negotiation for the purchase of a further number, which will bring the total up to about 200.

The Company will also acquire the old-established Ship and Lighter repairing business, together with all plant and machinery, at Garston Dock, which has been successfully carried on by Mr. William Newall for over 30 years. The Company will effect a very great saving by having their own building and repairing yard, and as Mr. William Newall will undertake the special supervision of this department, the Company will have the benefit of his valuable experience.

The following are some of the advantages to be derived from the amalgamation:—

(1) A considerable saving will be effected—
(a) In the distribution of the cargoes;
(b) In having only one Liverpool office in place of about twelve;
(c) In the wholesale purchase of stores;
(d) In the Company having their own building and repairing yard.

(2) Hitherto it has been necessary in most cases for lighters to go empty from one port to another to get cargoes. The Company having a large carrying business, will generally have lighters in every loading port, and will thereby be enabled to arrange the cargoes so as to avoid this. Very considerable saving will thus be effected in wear and tear of craft, and greater facilities will be afforded to the Company's customers for the expeditious despatch of business, a matter of great importance to shipowners.

Mr. W. D. Mack and Mr. H. B. Mack (who are among the largest owners of lighters in Liverpool, the former having been engaged in the lighterage trade for over 25 years), have entered into an Agreement to act as Managing Directors of the Company.

As will be seen from the following certificate the lighters taken over by the Company have been valued by Mr. Thomas K. Hayes, Master Shipwright, of Liverpool, at £132,100 without including the value of the goodwill of any of the businesses.

Liverpool, July 24th, 1896.

I have valued the 185 lighters and barges to be acquired by the Company, and, without allowing anything for goodwill, I estimate their value to be £132,100.

T. K. HAYES.

The consideration payable to E. C. Fowler, the Vendor, for the purchase of the various Lighters and businesses, including goodwill, has been fixed by him at £162,840, payable as to £69,750 in cash, £46,540 in cash or Preference Shares, and £46,550 in Ordinary Shares. Out of this sum the Vendor will pay all expenses connected with the formation of the Company, including fees and stamp duties payable on registration, but not the charges of the Company's Solicitors.

Full Prospectuses and Forms of Application may be obtained from the Bankers, Solicitors, Brokers, and at the Offices of the Company.

July 25th, 1896.

The LIST OF APPLICATIONS will be OPENED on WEDNESDAY, the 29th JULY, 1896, and CLOSED on or before the FOLLOWING DAY.

PROSPECTUS.

The Cannon Brewery Company was Incorporated in January, 1895, the Vendors retaining the whole of the Preference and Ordinary Share Capital. Since that date the Directors of the Company, who were the original vendors, and their friends, have subscribed for 3,000 additional Preference Shares of £100 each, and 2,000 additional Ordinary Shares of £100 each, and such additional Share Capital, amounting in all to £500,000, has been paid up in full.

In the Debenture Prospectus of the 28th January, 1895, the Company reserved the right to issue a further £200,000 of Debenture Stock, to rank pari passu with the issue then offered for subscription. This right has since been exercised in accordance with the provisions of the Trust Deed.

The Assets of the Company on the 31st December, 1894, consisting of the Brewery and Premises, with Plant and Machinery, Freehold and Leasehold Houses, Loans and Interest due from Licensed Victuallers, Stocks of Malt, Hops, and Beer Casks, Horses, &c., Cash, Book Debts, &c., stood in the Books at		...£1,007,545 0 9
On the 30th June, 1896, the surplus of Assets under the same headings, forming the security for the First Mortgage Debenture Stock, and for the present issue, stood in the Books at	...£1,623,250 1 9
To which must be added the sum of ... ... being the amount of Share Capital since paid up.	71,200 0 0
The proceeds of the present issue will be applied exclusively to the further development of the business and to the general purposes of the Company, and, subject to the expenses of the Issue, will constitute an additional security for the Debenture Stock Holders to the amount of ... say—	500,000 0 0
		£2,194,450 1 9

The Profits for the Year ending 31st December, 1895, amounted to...	£95,327 11 1
And for the Six Months ending the 30th June, 1896, to ...	£69,992 0 9

" 22nd July, 1896.

" To the Directors of the CANNON BREWERY, LIMITED.

" GENTLEMEN,

" We have audited, on behalf of the Trustees to the Debenture Stock Holders, the Accounts of the Cannon Brewery, Clerkenwell, from the 1st January, 1895, to the 30th June last. After writing off depreciation and making reserves for extinction of value in such of the properties as are Leasehold, and before charging interest on Private Deposits and Loans and on the existing Debenture Stock, the Profits have been as follows:—

Year ending 31st December, 1895	£95,327 11 1
Half-Year ending 30th June, 1896	£69,992 0 9

The book value of the Assets as at the 30th June, 1896, consisting of the Brewery and Premises, Loans, Stocks, Cash, and Book Debts, amounted to	...£2,038,406 16 10
The Liabilities (other than the Mortgage Debenture Stock of £700,000) at the same date, consisting of Current and Trade Accounts and Deposits, amounted to	415,156 15 1
Leaving a net surplus of Assets over Liabilities of	£1,623,250 1 9

" Since the 30th June additional Ordinary and Preference Capital has been paid in to the amount of £71,200, which will add to the security of the Debenture Stock Holders.

" We are, Gentlemen,
" Your obedient Servants,
" (Signed) PRICE, WATERHOUSE & CO."

The sum required annually to pay the interest on the First Mortgage Debenture Stock is	£28,000
On the Present Issue	20,000
Total	£48,000

The Stock will be secured by a Floating Charge over all the assets of the Company, subject only to the prior claim of the First Mortgage Debenture Stock Holders.

Applications for the Debenture Stock are to be made to Lloyds Bank Limited, on the forms accompanying the Prospectus.

In cases where no allotment is made the Deposits will be returned in full, and when the amount allotted is less than that subscribed for, the balance of the deposit will be applied towards the payment due on allotment. Failure to pay any instalment when due will render previous payments liable to forfeiture.

It is intended to issue Provisional Certificates after the payment due on allotment has been made, and to apply for a Stock Exchange quotation in due course.

Prospectuses, with Forms of Application, can be obtained at the Offices of the Company, or at the Offices of the Brokers and Solicitors to the Company, or at the Head Office and Branches of Lloyds Bank, Limited.

ABRIDGED PROSPECTUS.

This Company has been formed to acquire Messrs. Brockie & Pell's inventions for the construction of electric arc lamps, as embodied in the various patents and patent rights, and all future improvements on such patents, &c.

The Company will acquire the goodwill attaching to such patents, and the business connected therewith, and they will work and develop the said business in connection with the several patents and patent rights and otherwise.

The Company comes before the public not as a concern to establish a connection, but with a valuable business already built up, the profits from which it is believed will yield a handsome dividend to the Shareholders.

The sale of the lamps is an increasing one. The year 1895 showed a continued increase, whilst for the first quarter of 1896 there was an increase of more than 27 per cent. over the corresponding quarter of 1895.

A guarantee of the importance of the business to be taken over is the fact that many thousands of the Brockie-Pell lamps are in use, and that over 10,000 of them have been sold. It is now being used for street and other public lighting by vestries or electricity supply companies at the following places (among others):—

London—(St. Pancras), (Ealing), (Hyde Park), (Regent-street); Aberdeen, Birmingham, Blackpool, Bray, Brighton, Bristol, Burnley, Dublin, Dundee, Edinburgh, Galway, Glasgow, Halifax, Hastings, Hong Kong, Huddersfield, Hull, Johannesburg, S.A.R., Larne, Leeds, Liverpool, Londonderry, Manchester, Nelson, Newcastle-on-Tyne, Newcastle, N.S.W., Nottingham, Oldham, Oxford, Portsmouth, Salford, Southport, South Shields, Stafford, Sunderland, Sydney, N.S.W., Taunton, Tunbridge Wells, Wolverhampton.

It has also been supplied to the following (among others):—Her Majesty's Government, Royal Arsenal, Woolwich; Royal Mint, London; Office of Works; Science and Art Department: National Museum and Library, Dublin; General Post Offices in London, Manchester, Birmingham, Glasgow, Leeds, Hull, and S.W. district; Postal Stores, London; H.M.'s Government Telegraph Factory, London; Government of New South Wales; ditto of South Australia; ditto of Cape of Good Hope; the German Government and other foreign Governments; London County Council; the Imperial Institute; the People's Palace; the Royal Exchange, London; ditto, Manchester; Free Trade Hall, Manchester; the Stock Exchange, London.

London and North-Western, Midland, Great Northern, Great Eastern, North Staffordshire, London and South-Western, South-Eastern, London, Chatham, and Dover, Lancashire and Yorkshire, Manchester, Sheffield, and Lincolnshire, Caledonian, Glasgow, and South-Western, and other railways.

De Beers, Mount Morgan, City and Suburban, Simmer and Jack, and other mines.

Sir A. Guinness, Son, & Co., Ld., Sir Titus Salt, Bart., Sons, & Co., Ld., Dalgety & Co., Ld., G. Kynoch & Co., Ld., Harland & Wolff, Ld., Peninsular and Oriental Steam Navigation Company, Spiers & Pond, Ld., Lion Brewery Company, Ld., Crosse & Blackwell, Ld., Civil Service Stores, William Whiteley, Jones Brothers, Lewis's, Manchester and Birmingham, T. J. Lipton, and many other well-known Companies and firms all over the world.

Alhambra, Empire, Tivoli, Palace, Globe, Savoy, Gaiety, and other theatres. Hotel Cecil, Hotel Victoria, Inns of Court Hotel, Criterion, Holborn, Frascati's, Blanchard's, and numerous other hotels and restaurants.

Sir David Salomons, Bart., M.A., Vice-President of the Institution of Electrical Engineers, &c., Chairman of the City of London Electric Lighting Company, Limited, in his book, "Electric Light Installations," after referring to Brockie-Pell Lamps, concludes as follows (p. 272).

"This projector and other lamps have been largely employed by the writer, and from his experience he is fully justified in saying that he has never come across any lamp equal to the Brockie-Pell for steadiness, simplicity, and efficiency."

John Hopkinson, Esq., D.Sc., F.R.S., President of the Institution of Electrical Engineers, has examined and very favourably reported on the lamps, and a copy of his report accompanies the Prospectus.

The services of Mr. Pell as Managing Director, and of Mr. Brockie as Electrician and Superintendent of the Manufactory, have been secured for the period of five years.

The working capital will be £15,000 cash, and £5,000 will be held in reserve in unissued Shares.

The outlay for the supply and erection of the necessary machinery for the manufacture of an annual output of more than double the present sales of lamps is guaranteed by Messrs. Brockie & Pell not to exceed the sum of £4,783.

Full Prospectuses and Forms of Application can be obtained from the Bankers, Brokers, Solicitors, and Auditors, and at the Offices of the Company, or applications for Shares may be made on the following form, and forwarded to the Bankers of the Company, with the full amount of the deposit.

ABRIDGED PROSPECTUS.

This Company has been formed to acquire 149A. 1R. 30P. of Mineral land containing gold-bearing reefs situate in the Thames District, in the Southern portion of the Coromandel Peninsula, New Zealand.

The properties are held under two licences, comprising the "Key of Komata," of 99A. 2R. 0P., and the other, the "Hibernica," of 49A. 3R. 30P., making together an area of 149A. 1R. 30P.

This property lies about 1,600 yards south and west of the Waitikauri G. M. Co.'s property, 450 yards south of the Komata Reefs Gold Mining Company, is bounded on the north and east by the Komata Reef Extended and the Komata Queen, on the south by the "Ingall Mine," and on the east by "The Alfred" and "Alfred Extended."

It will be noticed that in the reports on the Key of Komata and Hibernica, frequent references are made to the reefs traversing the adjacent claims and passing into these properties, consequently it has been considered advisable to give extracts from such published reports as assist in explaining the text and describing the district:—

Dr. August Scheidel, Ph.D., General Agent and Consulting Engineer to the New Zealand Mines Trust, Limited, reporting on January 25th, 1896, for the Waitikauri Gold Mining Company, Limited, whose property lies only about seventy chains north and east of Key of Komata and Hibernica, and which is reported to contain the same system of reefs as the Komata Reefs, the Komata Queen, Key of Komata, and Hibernica, states:—

"The geological formation of the properties is that of the Hauraki Goldfield generally. . . . The solidity and the undisturbed character of these distinguishes them favourably from the reefs of the more northern part of the Peninsula, and promises well for their continuance and permanency. The quartz, as far as known, is free, or almost so, from base admixtures; the gold is free, but mostly exceedingly fine, and chemical methods, such as the cyanide process, have to be applied to save a high percentage."

In the same series of Reports, Mr. Hubert Akers, Secretary to the same Company, furnishes some useful data regarding the value of ore obtained on this system of reefs by actual battery crushings:—

From both Sections up to 29th Feb., 1896.

Tons.	Yield per Ton.	Total Value.
9,203 ...	£5. 13s. 9d. ...	£52,378.

For Contracts, Reports, &c., see full Prospectus.

The Vendor has fixed the price to be paid for the Property at £60,000, payable as to £33,000 in Shares, and the balance, viz., £27,000, shall be partly in shares and partly in cash at the option of the Directors. This will leave £40,000 for working capital.

Prospectuses and Forms of Application may be obtained from the Bankers and Solicitors, and at the Offices of the Company.

PROSPECTUS.

THIS Corporation has been formed for the purpose of taking over the assets and liabilities of the West Australian (Gold District) Trading Syndicate, Limited.

The Syndicate, at the statutory meeting held on the 22nd day of June, 1896 (a full report of the proceedings at the said meeting is herewith enclosed), declared a dividend at the rate of 100 per cent. per annum.

At the time of the preparation of this Prospectus the Ordinary 5s. Shares, fully paid, in the Syndicate were quoted at £3 10s., and the £1 Founder's Shares, fully paid, were quoted at £35.

Western Australia with its immense area, equal to twenty-five times the area of Great Britain, with its extended seaboard, and great natural resources, has sprung suddenly into prominence on account of the phenomenal discoveries of gold in various parts of the colony. New auriferous districts are being continually proclaimed, and at the present time the population is increasing at the rate of 1,000 per week. This large industrial population has to be supplied with the necessaries of life and all the equipments requisite for their various callings. Food, drink, clothing, building materials, and implements of trade must be brought to the spot where the prospector and miner pursue their avocations, and the principal aim and object of the Syndicate has been to supply the best possible articles, and by so doing establish an enduring reputation in the Colony.

With this view all commodities sent out by the Syndicate have always borne its special brand and trade mark (which will be transferred to the Corporation), and the demand for machinery, hardware, iron, railway plant, mining tools, provisions, beer, wine, spirits, apparel and drapery, and in fact all the necessaries of a thriving colony, presents an inducement to the capitalist which cannot be equalled by any modern example, and it can be readily understood that a trading corporation, with commodious stores, a well organised system, experienced and reliable agents, and ample capital, has opportunities and advantages over the average trader. A large number of depots and agencies are already in full and lucrative operation, and it is intended to establish other agencies in all the principal ports and mining towns of the colony, and also to engage in the profitable business of carriers to all parts of the great Continent.

The Syndicate to be taken over by the Corporation has been acting in the double capacity of wholesale merchants and retail distributors, and will make a special feature of securing the sole agencies of well-known necessary consumable articles. In this respect it will follow on the lines so successfully pursued by the Syndicate, whose business this Corporation has acquired. It may be mentioned amongst the sole agencies thus acquired is that for the sale of Bass's beer, and other commodities of large and almost universal consumption.

The Government of Western Australia gives every encouragement to such an undertaking as this. The merchant and storekeeper are a necessity of the Colony; without their aid the advance into the interior and its consequent development is an impossibility, and as regards the inland trading it has been the practice of the Syndicate, as it will be of the Corporation, to establish depots at all outposts, and be ready at a moment's notice to push its wares by means of its own caravans and stock trains, to the scene of new discoveries.

The Corporation will also act as Bankers, Brokers, Agents, and Experts, and cultivate these several profitable departments of commercial enterprise.

The Colony of West Australia also has its own natural resources, which can be made use of to the advantage of the capitalist. Wool and Timber are commodities of themselves sufficient to engage the employment of numerous enterprises and enormous capital, from which profitable results will undoubtedly follow. The Jarrah-wood now so extensively used for road paving purposes in London and the provinces, is found in great abundance in situations most favourable for exportation. In this connection it may be mentioned that the Syndicate referred to has acquired an option, on very advantageous terms, of purchasing a Jarrah forest of upwards of 24,000 acres, thus providing a profitable return freight for the ships chartered outwards by the Corporation.

It is an important matter for an investor to remember that The West Australian (Gold District) Trading Corporation, Limited, will at all times be under the protection of the British Flag. There is no "native" difficulty. It must therefore be obvious to the most casual observer that this vast and rich country, with its rapidly increasing population, and trade, must offer opportunities to the trader with large capital such as cannot at present be obtained in any other part of the world.

The Corporation is in the fortunate position of having secured the sole concession for Western Australia of a discovery which, according to experiments made, should revolutionise the gold producing industry in every part of the globe. One of the greatest difficulties which miners have to deal with, is the crushing of the quartz, and the treatment of refractory ores. To deal with these formidable difficulties, powerful stamps have to be erected, costing many thousands of pounds; expensive steam engines have to be used to bring these massive implements into operation; and very large expense has to be incurred to carry these materials over tracks of difficult country, often in a temperature of 120 degrees, in waggons drawn by teams of bullocks or horses.

The process just alluded to will enable a miner to reduce the hardest quartz to the condition of fine sand, without slime. It drives off every vestige of sulphur and arsenic and breaks the ore into fragments along the line of particles of gold itself, which may sometimes be seen sparkling on the little fragments of quartz, or lying in a free state amongst the disintegrated ore. It has been tried on ores from South Africa, Western Australia, British Guiana, and India, with equal success.

The estimates of the cost of crushing quartz vary from 9s. (under the most favourable circumstances) to 30s. under the conditions ruling in parts of Western Australia; the average being, say 19s. By this system, called the "Ore Atomic Reduction Process," the quartz can be reduced to dust with simple apparatus, entailing but small outlay, and at a small cost per ton. A small royalty per ton would effect a great saving on all crushings to every company adopting the process, and at the same time yield a splendid return to the Corporation. The highest grades of ore will give greatly increased profits, and the lower grades (at present thrown away as useless), will yield a profitable return.

The Corporation has, through the West Australian (Gold District) Trading Syndicate, Limited, secured the rights of this remarkable invention for Western Australia, with full power to grant licences for the whole of the colony, or to form subsidiary companies. With an eye to the great possibilities of the future, a number of gentlemen of education have been instructed by specialists, in order to become expert exponents of the new process, and have already been despatched to West Australia.

The only Contract to which this Corporation is a party is dated the 27th day of July, 1896, and made between the West Australian (Gold District) Trading Syndicate, Limited, and Major-Generrl A. Tullock and Thomas William Mills, the liquidators, of the one part, and the West Australian (Gold District) Trading Corporation, of the other part.

The shares to be allotted to the members of the West Australian (Gold District) Trading Syndicate, in consideration of the acquisition by the Corporation of all the assets, rights and privileges belonging to the Syndicate, absorb 340,000 Ordinary Shares. There will thus remain a balance of 160,000 Ordinary Shares available for subscription. Of these shares 100,000 are now offered for subscription at one pound premium, which, with the proceeds of 500 Founders' Shares, will produce £200,500 further cash for working capital and reserve fund.

60,000 Ordinary Shares and over 2,000 Founder's Shares will still remain unissued, and will be available for the future purposes of the Company as and when required.

The Directors have satisfied themselves as to the validity of the Ore Atomic Reduction Patent, and are advised by J. Fletcher Moulton, Esq., Q.C., and W. R. Bousfield, Esq., Q.C., M.P., that the same can be maintained. An exhaustive search has been made for prior patents by Messrs. Fell & James, of 1, Queen Victoria Street, the well-known Patent Agents, who report that the invention has not been anticipated.

The following special features in the administration of the Corporation are worthy of note:—

1. The Corporation has not and will not pay any promotion money.
2. The Directors will receive no fees unless voted by the Shareholders in General Meeting.
3. There will be frequent Meetings of the Shareholders.
4. The distribution of dividends will be made as often as practicable.
5. There will be a fair distribution of Founder's Shares among the Subscribers for Ordinary Shares.
6. There are no waiver clauses, so that every Contract is disclosed.

Prospectuses and Forms of Application can be obtained at the offices of the Corporation or from the Bankers, Solicitors, Auditors and Brokers, or direct from the Offices of the Corporation.

Applications for Shares must be made on the forms accompanying the Prospectus, and handed to the Corporation's Bankers, together with cheque for the amount payable on application. Should no allotment be made, the deposit will be returned in full, and if the number of shares allotted is less than applied for, the balance of the deposit will be applied towards the amount payable on allotment.

ABRIDGED PROSPECTUS.

THIS company has been formed to acquire the valuable and extensive works and the well-known business now carried on by the New Howe Machine Company (Limited), at Bridgeton, Glasgow, as manufacturers of sewing machines and cycles and their several components.

The works, which are held in perpetual feu subject to an annual feu duty of £103 11s. 9d., are by far the largest owned by any cycle manufacturing company in Great Britain, having a capacity, meeting the requirements of the Board of Trade, for the accommodation of 5,399 workpeople.

The Howe Company has established local depôts in London,	Liverpool,	Hull,

Preston,	Norwich,	Nottingham,
Sunderland,	Dublin,	Macclesfield,

and out of 232 towns in Scotland, with populations of more than 4,500, is represented by agents in 220 of them, while the total number of agents in Great Britain and Ireland is nearly 3,000.

As will be seen by the subjoined certificates, the orders now on hand awaiting execution represent not fewer than 37,598 cycles and 11,500 sets of parts, from which it is computed a manufacturer's profit will be made by this company of not less than £100,000. The return from these orders, therefore, alone represents a very handsome dividend on the share capital, after providing for the interest on the debentures, and for the creation of a redemption fund. The managers estimate that the above orders, with those coming in in the usual course from provincial buyers and branches, will keep the works fully occupied for some years.

There are also 50,000 sewing machines provisionally ordered for the Continental trade alone, but the complete execution of these will necessitate an extension of the works and plant, should the cycle trade be fully maintained.

The works and heritable plant and fixtures have been valued by Mr. Thomas Hill, M.I.Mech.E., M.I.E.S., Consulting Engineer and Valuer, of Glasgow, at £210,218, and the plant, tools, stock, machinery, book debts (guaranteed), and effects by Mr. Sydney Lee, the Cycle Valuer and Expert, of London, at £111,321, representing, therefore, an aggregate value of £321,539, independently of goodwill. The certificates are as follows:

"Glasgow, 24th July, 1896.

"To the Directors of the Howe Cycle and Sewing Machine Company (Limited), London.

"Gentlemen,—I hereby certify that I have valued the buildings, chimneys, fixed and heritable plant, as a going concern, belonging to the New Howe Machine Company (Limited), Avenue-street, Bridgeton, Glasgow, as under-noted:

Heritable plant and fixtures	£34,092
Buildings and Chimneys	176,126
Total	£210,218

"(Signed) THOMAS HILL,
"Consulting Engineer, Licensed Auctioneer, and Valuator."

"9, Furnival-street, Holborn, E.C., London, July 24th, 1896.

"To the Directors of the Howe Cycle and Sewing Machine Company (Limited), London.

"Gentlemen—In accordance with your instructions, I have made a careful inspection of the plant, tools, and stock-in-trade of the Howe Works, Bridgeton, Glasgow, and in conformance with your wishes, exhaustive details of fixed and loose plant, machinery, tools, parts and fittings, manufactured and partly manufactured stock, office furniture, &c., have been taken by me for the purposes of valuation, and I enclose herewith lists of same.

"The business being an important going concern, the fair and reasonable value of such plant, &c., based upon the detailed valuations made by me, is, in my opinion, £96,321.

"This amount does not include the sum of £5,000, covering items of furniture, fittings, &c., at the various depôts in Glasgow, London, Liverpool, Sunderland, Hull, Nottingham, Norwich, Macclesfield, and Dublin; nor the sum of £10,000, being the amount of book debts, guaranteed by the vendors, which will be acquired by the company.

"With the addition of these items, the total would amount to £111,321.

"Having been asked to give my opinion respecting the works, I am able to state that they are by far the largest of any cycle manufacturing company in Great Britain, and are capable of accommodating between 5,000 and 6,000 workmen.

"There are no works, in my opinion, so admirably adapted and situated from every point of view, and eminently suitable for the purposes of cycle making, an essential feature being that skilled labour can be obtained in any quantity, while in Coventry and other manufacturing centres there is at present a dearth of men.

"I am, Gentlemen, yours obediently,
"(Signed) SYDNEY LEE."

"To the Directors of the Howe Cycle and Sewing Machine Company (Limited), London.

"We have examined the books of the New Howe Machine Company (Limited), of Glasgow, and certify that the orders now on hand waiting execution amount to 37,500 cycles, and 11,500 sets of cycle parts. (Signed)
"FINDLAY, KIDSTON, AND GOFF, Chartered Accountants.
"102, Hope-street, Glasgow, July 24, 1896."

"Athenæum-chambers, Temple-row, Birmingham.
"July 24, 1896.

"To the Directors of the Howe Cycle and Sewing Machine Company (Limited).

"Gentlemen—In accordance with your instructions we have made an independent examination of the present cost books of the New Howe Machine Company (Limited), Glasgow, and are satisfied, subject to allowances being made to cover depreciation and administration expenses, that the Company should realise a profit of upwards of £93,000—ninety-three thousand pounds—upon completion of the orders for 37,598—thirty-seven thousand five hundred and ninety-eight—cycles which are now on hand for future execution.—We are, Gentlemen, yours obediently, (Signed) A. R. LANCASTER, HACKETT, and Co.,
"Chartered Accountants."

It will be seen that £60,000 has been set aside for subscription as working capital—which is, of course, in addition to existing stocks, book debts, &c., included in the purchase. The directors are advised that an expenditure of not more than £5,000 on special tools and plant, and working double shifts, would command a weekly output of at least 1,000 cycles, besides castings, forgings, &c.

The consideration to be paid by the company for the extensive premises in Glasgow, the local depôts and agencies above-named, the trade marks, designs, and patent rights (if any), goodwill, stock-in-trade, plant, machinery, book debts (guaranteed), and everything appertaining to a going concern, has been fixed by the vendor at £350,000, payable in cash, or partly in cash and partly in shares, at the option of the directors.

Applications for shares and debentures must be made on the forms accompanying the prospectus and forwarded to the bankers or to the offices of the company, with the amount payable on application. Where no allotment is made, the deposit will be returned in full, and should the number of shares or debentures allotted be less than that applied for, the surplus will be applied to satisfy subsequent instalments.

Application will be made in due course for settlements and quotations on the Stock Exchange.

Prospectuses and forms of application may be obtained of the bankers, the solicitors, and the auditors, or at the offices of the company.

PROSPECTUS.

Owing to the retirement of Mr. George Thorpe, Senior, this Company has been formed to purchase as a going concern the well-known Wholesale and Retail Drapery Businesses of Messrs. Geo. Thorpe & Co., of Bradford, hitherto carried on under the style of "George Thorpe & Co." and "Thorpe Brothers & Co.," together with the valuable freehold premises, plant, machinery, fixtures, stock-in-trade, and book debts.

The original business was founded by Mr. Geo. Thorpe, Senior, upwards of 40 years ago, and from a small retail drapery establishment progressed to such an extent that it was found necessary to build the present handsome block of buildings, illustrations of which accompany the prospectus, to meet the requirements of the combined wholesale and retail businesses.

The accounts of the businesses have been investigated, on behalf of the Company, by the eminent accountants for the drapery and kindred trades, Messrs. Beecroft, Sons, & Nicholson, of London, Manchester, and Luton, and by Mr. James E. Wilson, Chartered Accountant (of Messrs. Dixon, Wilson, & Dixon, of Basinghall-street, London), whose joint certificate is as follows:—

12, Wood-street, Cheapside. London, E.C., 24th June, 1896.

To the Directors of THORPE BROTHERS & CO., LIMITED.

Gentlemen,—In accordance with your instructions we have investigated the accounts of Messrs. George Thorpe & Co. and Messrs. Thorpe Brothers & Co., of Bradford, Wholesale and Retail Drapers, Silk Mercers, Warehousemen, &c., and find that the sales, after deducting those in respect of departments discontinued, were:—

For the year ending January 31st, 1894	72,091	12	3
do. do. 1895	80,207	8	4
do. do. 1896	81,076	3	4

and those for the three months to April 30th, 1896, show an increase of £4,866. 5s. 6d. over the corresponding period of last year. If this increase continues, the sales for the current financial year will be £100,541. 5s. 4d.

We also find that the gross profits of the business have been increasing satisfactorily.

On sales of £100,541 per annum, taking the same ratio of gross profit as made in the last completed year, after deducting what we consider should be proper working expenses of the business, a reserve for bad debts, and the same amount for depreciation as has been written off last year, but not including interest on capital or moneys employed in the concern, there remains a balance of £6,511 which, added to the sum of £500 per annum received as rent for a small portion of the building let off, makes a total of £7,011 per annum. We understand the premises are freehold.

In our opinion the business does not appear to have been worked to the best and fullest advantage, and we believe that the volume of trade and profits could be considerably increased without any material additional expense.

Yours faithfully,

BEECROFT, SONS, & NICHOLSON.

JAMES E. WILSON, A.C.A.

It will be seen that the present profits from the business (without taking into consideration the further development of which it is capable) suffice to pay the interest on the Debentures, the dividend on the Preference Shares, and to leave a substantial balance as dividend on the Ordinary Shares.

The Directors believe that the recent increase in the business shown by the above certificate is in a large measure due to the judicious and energetic management of Messrs. F. H. Thorpe & B. Snow (who will continue their management as joint Managing Directors), and that with the additional facilities afforded by this Company (provided as it is with ample working capital), the volume of trade and profits can be considerably increased.

Messrs. F. H. Thorpe and B. Snow, having the same confidence, have agreed to act as Managing Directors, and to give their entire services at small salaries, relying for their adequate remuneration upon a percentage of the dividends payable on the Ordinary Shares after payment of the Debenture Interest and Cumulative Preference Dividend.

The following valuations show that the freehold property and other assets taken over by the Company (including additional working capital) fully secure the whole of the Preference Share Capital, in addition to the Debentures.

Messrs. W. G. Stansfield & Co., the well-known Auctioneers and Valuers, of Bradford and Manchester, have made the following report as to the value of the Freehold Land and Premises.

Bradford Sale Rooms, Forster-square, Bradford, June 22nd, 1896.

To the Directors of Thorpe Brothers & Co., Limited.

GENTLEMEN,—We have carefully surveyed the freehold premises belonging to Messrs. George Thorpe & Co., and Messrs. Thorpe Bros. & Co., trading as Merchants, Wholesale and Retail Drapers, and General Warehousemen, in Tyrrell-street, Ivegate, and Hustlergate, Bradford, and value the same at Seventy-four Thousand Five Hundred and Seventy-eight Pounds Twelve Shillings and Fourpence.

We may add that, in our opinion, there are no premises in Yorkshire better adapted for the trade, for which they were specially designed by Mr. T. C. Hope, Architect, Bradford, and built under the personal supervision of Mr. George Thorpe.

Among all the noble structures in the town there are none better built, or which surpass the above for elegance of design, elevation, and general outline, whilst the position is unique, commanding, as it does, extensive frontages to the busiest and best shopping thoroughfares in Bradford, and in our opinion there is a considerable prospective value resting in these premises which will develop as Bradford increases in population and makes commercial progress.

Yours faithfully,

W. G. STANSFIELD & CO.

The amount of the above valuation of the Freehold Premises by Messrs. W. G. STANSFIELD & CO. is	£74,578	12	4
Mr. RICHARD CROSS, of 1A, Wood-street, Cheapside, one of the leading Drapery Trade Valuers, has valued the firm's fixtures, fittings, machinery, plant, horses, vans, &c., as a going concern, at the sum of	9,173	0	0
To which must be added the valuation of stock and book-debts, and the subscription of additional Capital for working and general purposes, which the Vendor guarantees shall amount together to the sum of...	42,000	0	0
	£125,751	12	4

Thus the working capital of the Company provided by the above £42,000 amounts to more than one-third of the entire issue of Debentures and Preference Shares.

The Vendor, having the fullest confidence in the increased permanent success of the business, has consented to take payment for the goodwill and a part of the above assets in the Ordinary Shares of the Company fully-paid.

The businesses will be taken over as and from July 1st, 1896, the Vendor paying all liabilities and outgoings up to that date, and he further agrees to pay all the expenses of formation and flotation of the Company up to allotment except the costs and expenses of the Company's Solicitor and Capital duties and fees payable on its incorporation.

The Vendor, who is the promoter, has fixed the purchase-money at £108,000, payable as to £58,000 in cash, £25,000 in Debentures, and as to the balance £25,000 in fully-paid Ordinary Shares. The Stock and Book Debts will be taken over at a valuation, subject to a substantial discount in favour of this Company of such valuation.

The following Agreements have been entered into, viz.: 24th June, 1896, between the Vendor, Mr. George Thorpe, of the one part, and Mr. William Harcourt Bustard, as Trustee for the Company, of the other part; dated 24th July, 1896, between the Company of the one part, and Mr. Frederick Herbert Thorpe and Ben Snow of the other part, as to their appointment as Managing Directors.

The businesses will be taken over subject to and with the benefit of all existing contracts which are of the ordinary trade character, but including, as they do, numerous contracts with manufacturers' agents, and others, they cannot be specified. There are also contracts in connection with the acquisition of the businesses and premises, and as to the subscription of the capital and the promotion of the Company, to none of which the Company is a party. As all or some of these contracts may fall within Section 38 of the Companies Act, 1867, applicants for Shares will be deemed to have had notice and to have waived their rights (if any) to particulars thereof, whether under the said section or otherwise.

The Agreements above-mentioned, the Memorandum and Articles of Association, and the original Reports and Valuations above set forth can be seen at the offices of the Solicitors.

Application for a quotation and special settlement on the Stock Exchange will be made in due course for both Debentures and Preference Shares.

Applications for Shares and Debentures should be on the forms accompanying the Prospectus, and sent with the deposit to the Company's Bankers. In cases where no allotment is made the deposit will be returned in full, and where the amount allotted is less than that applied for the surplus will be credited in reduction of the amount payable on allotment.

Prospectuses and Forms of Application may be obtained from the Bankers and Brokers, and at the Offices of the Company.

London, July, 1896.

This Application Form may be used and should be filled up and forwarded with the amount payable on application to the Company's Bankers, The Bradford District Bank, Limited, Bradford, or to their London Agents, Messrs. Smith, Payne, & Smith, 1, Lombard-street, London, E.C.

PROSPECTUS.

This Company has been formed for the purpose of acquiring, carrying on, and considerably extending the business of Pianoforte Manufacturers now carried on by Thomas Edward Brinsmead & Sons, at Ferdinand-street, Camden Town, and Bartholomew Works, Bartholomew-rd., Kentish Town, London, N.W.

The business was established by Mr. Thomas Edward Brinsmead, who, for nearly 30 years, held an important position with Messrs. John Brinsmead & Sons, and who has since taken his two Sons, Mr. Edward George Stanley Brinsmead and Mr. Sydney Walter Brinsmead, into partnership. The business is solely conducted by these three gentlemen, and has so greatly increased that they find themselves unable to execute the large number of orders for their instruments at the Bartholomew-road factory, and have therefore acquired, on favourable terms, additional and larger premises in Ferdinand-street, Camden Town, N.W. (in the immediate vicinity of the principal Pianoforte manufactories), which are being fitted up with first-class plant and machinery in accordance with present day requirements. In order to carry out the necessary extension and thoroughly develop the business, it has been decided to convert the undertaking into a public Company, and to give the numerous customers and others an opportunity of participating in the profits.

The members of the firm are all practical men, each having been for many years engaged in the actual manufacture of pianos. Mr. Thomas Edward Brinsmead has for many years personally superintended the adjustment of the delicate parts of pianofortes, while Mr. Edward George Stanley Brinsmead has been mainly responsible for the extremely beautiful sounding-boards with which the firm's instruments are fitted.

BUILDINGS AND PLANT.

The new premises alone will be capable of turning out a minimum of 50 pianofortes weekly, and the orders in hand will keep the factory busy for many months to come. The firm manufactures largely for the trade as well as for private buyers, and these orders emanate from some of the best houses in the Kingdom. As an instance of the popularity of the firm's manufactures, it may be mentioned that during the past month orders have been received from various houses for over 800 Pianofortes.

The Ferdinand-street Works, which are situated in the centre of the pianoforte manufacturing district, contains three floors, and cover a superficial area of 5,500 square feet, while the total area of the yards for stacking the necessary timber used in the manufacture of Pianos, together with the buildings, amounts to 11,300 superficial feet. The plant and machinery include boiler by Marshall, 45-h.p. engine by Bellis, dynamo, motor, and complete electric installation, circular saws, shafting, and all the usual plant of a first-class pianoforte manufactory.

MANAGEMENT.

The Company will have the advantage of a practical Board of Directors, while the Messrs. Brinsmead have bound themselves to give their services to the Company for a term of years, and the whole of the present staff will be retained, thus ensuring the continuation of the present excellent workmanship which has made these Pianos so universally appreciated.

PROFITS.

It is a well-known fact that very large profits are made by all well-known pianoforte manufacturers, and since the introduction of the hire-purchase system, whereby pianos have been placed within reach of all classes, an enormous increase in trade has taken place.

It is the intention of the Directors, in addition to the home trade, to cultivate an extensive export business, and, owing to the excellent quality of the instruments which the firm manufactures, the Directors confidently anticipate a large increase; but on an output of only 50 pianos weekly, taking the profit at £7 each, which is below the average, a profit is shown of £18,200 per annum.

To pay 8 per cent. on £90,000 Ordinary Share Capital will require ...	£7,200
Leaving a balance of	£11,000 which would be sufficient, after placing one-third to Reserve Fund, and paying dividends on Deferred Shares, to increase the dividend on the Ordinary Shares to over 12 per cent. per annum.

The Vendor is so satisfied as to the expansion of the business with the additional Capital and new Works that he guarantees that the dividend shall not be less than 8 per cent. per annum for a minimum period of three years, and will lodge with Trustees on behalf of the Shareholders on or before the completion of the purchase, a sufficient amount in cash to secure the due payment thereof.

PRICE TO BE PAID FOR THE PROPERTY.

The price to be paid for the property, including the leasehold premises, plant, machinery, designs, stock, goodwill, and effects, has been fixed at £76,650, leaving £23,350 available for working capital. Messrs. Brinsmead will collect the book debts and discharge all liabilities. The Vendor will accept in part payment for the business the whole of the Deferred Shares, and also stipulates for the right to an allotment of one-third of the Ordinary Shares on the same terms as the allotment is made to the public, further agreeing to defray the whole of the expenses in connection with the incorporation and formation of the Company, including registration, printing, advertising, law costs, brokerage, &c., up to and including allotment. The Deferred Shares will not be entitled to any dividend until the Ordinary Shareholders have received 8 per cent. per annum on the amount for the time being paid-up on their Shares, after which the balance will be applied as to one-third to a reserve fund, one-third for additional dividends on the Ordinary Shares, and the remaining third to the Deferred Shares.

Application will be made in due course to the Committee of the Stock Exchange for a settlement and a quotation in the Official List.

CONTRACTS AND AGREEMENTS.

The following Agreements have been entered into:—

An Agreement dated the 1st day of July, 1896, between Thomas Edward Brinsmead, Edward George Stanley Brinsmead, and Sydney Walter Brinsmead of the one part, and Joseph Henry Davis of the other part.

An Agreement dated 20th day of July, 1896, between Thomas Edward Brinsmead of the one part, and this Company of the other part, whereby the Company secures the exclusive services of Mr. T. E. Brinsmead for a period of ten years from the date thereof.

An Agreement dated the 20th day of July, 1896, between Edward George Stanley Brinsmead of the one part, and this Company of the other part, whereby the Company secures the exclusive services of Mr. E. G. S. Brinsmead for a period of fifteen years from the date thereof.

An Agreement dated 1st July, 1896, between Henry William Alabone and Francis Richard Jordon of the one part, and Joseph Henry Davis of the other part.

An Agreement dated 2nd July, 1896, between Joseph Henry Davis of the one part, and Stephenson Wilson, as Trustee on behalf of the Company, of the other part.

An Agreement dated the 20th day of July, 1896, between Sydney Walter Brinsmead of the one part, and this Company of the other part, whereby the Company secures the services of Mr. S. W. Brinsmead for a period of fifteen years from the date thereof.

There are also the usual trade contracts and engagements, the benefits and obligations of which will be taken over by the Company. Certain arrangements have also been entered into with reference to the formation of the Company and for guaranteeing the subscription of a portion of the capital, to none of which the Company is a party. It is believed that such engagements and contracts do not come within the meaning of Section 38 of the Act of 1867; but, should they do so, applicants for Shares shall be deemed to have waived the insertion of the dates and names of parties to any such engagements or contracts, and to accept the above statements as a sufficient compliance with the aforesaid Section, and applications will be accepted subject to this provision.

Copies of the Memorandum and Articles of Association, and of the contract for sale, may be seen at the Offices of the Company's Solicitors.

Application for Shares should be made on the accompanying form, and forwarded to the Bankers, Messrs. Brown, Janson, & Co., 32, Abchurch-lane, London, E.C., with a remittance for the amount of the deposit.

Prospectuses and Forms of Application can be obtained at the Offices of the Company, from the Bankers, Brokers, and Solicitors to the Company.

This Form may be cut out and sent entire with cheque or cash for the amount payable on application to the Bankers, Messrs. Brown, Janson, & Co., 32, Abchurch-lane, London, E.C., or to the Secretary, at the Offices of the Company, 94, Cannon-street, London, E.C.

PROSPECTUS.

This Company is formed to take over and carry on the old-established business of Batchelar & Son, Furniture Removers, Cabinet Makers and Upholsterers, House Decorators, Sanitary Engineers, and Proprietors of Furniture Warehouses and Depositories at North End, Broad Green, Sumner-road and Duppas Hill, Croydon, and also at Beckenham and Bromley.

The business was established in the year 1834, by the grandfather of the present proprietor, and has since been carried on and extended until it has become the largest and best known business of its kind in the district. It is still increasing, and is capable of continued further development.

In consequence of the death of Mr. Thomas George Batchelar, the brother and partner of the vendor, whose capital has to be paid out, it has become necessary to introduce fresh capital into the business, and the Company has been incorporated solely for that purpose.

The Freeholds of the principal Warehouses and premises have been vested in the Trustees of the will of the late Thomas Batchelar, the father of the vendor, and it is desired to wind up the Trusts of his will. The opportunity is therefore being taken to acquire these properties for the Company.

The vendor, Mr. Frederick William Batchelar, who is the surviving partner in the firm and the sole promoter of the Company, will retain his active connection with the business, and has entered into an agreement to act as Managing Director for at least five years from the date of its incorporation. His interest will be large, and consist almost entirely of Ordinary Shares, which he has agreed to hold until the expiration of the said period of five years. The services of Mr. E. R. Simmons, who has been connected with the business for the last seventeen years, will also be retained.

The business will be taken over as from the 31st December last, from which date the profits will belong to the Company. The vendor, however, is to receive thereout interest on the amount of the purchase-money at the rate of £5 per cent. per annum, from the 1st January to the completion of the purchase, less the amount required to pay the rentals of the freehold properties which are to be acquired by the Company, from that date till the completion of the purchase of such properties.

The properties and effects acquired by the Company, exclusive of goodwill, consist of—

The freehold Premises, 41 to 47, North End, Sumner-road, and Duppas Hill, and the long leasehold depository at Broad Green, all in Croydon, as valued by Messrs. Debenham, Tewson, Farmer & Bridgewater, at	£38,675
The stock-in-trade at or under cost price	15,016
The cash at bankers and in hand, and book debts, less liabilities (guaranteed by the vendor)	3,599
The trade implements, fixtures, and effects at all the establishments, including 39 vans and carts and 20 horses, engines, machinery, and electric-lighting plant...	6,350
	£63,640

The purchase price to be paid by the Company for the properties, businesses, leases, plant, fixtures, book-debts, stock-in-trade, horses, vans, &c., has been fixed at £80,000, payable as to £20,000 in 20,000 Ordinary Shares of £1 each, credited as fully paid up, as to £50,000 in cash, and as to the balance of £10,000 in fully-paid Preference Shares, Debenture Stock, or Cash, at the option of the Company. The remainder of the proceeds of the present issue of Preference Shares and Debenture Stock, and of the Ordinary Shares subscribed by the Directors and their friends, £5,900, will be available as additional working capital.

Messrs. Debenham, Tewson, Farmer, & Bridgewater, who have valued the properties, report as follows:—

80, Cheapside, London, E.C., 19th June, 1896.

Dear Sirs,—In accordance with instructions, we have made a careful inspection of your properties at Croydon, comprising the extensive freehold shops, show rooms, auction sale room, fire proof depository, factories, private residence, stabling and forge at North End, the freehold depositories and dwelling houses at Duppas Hill and Sumner-road, also the long leasehold depository at Broad Green, and are of opinion that for the purposes of the business now carried on, and as a going concern, the value of the aforesaid properties is thirty-eight thousand six hundred and seventy-five pounds (£38,675). This is exclusive of the goodwill, stock, plant, vans, horses, &c.

Yours faithfully,
DEBENHAM, TEWSON, FARMER, & BRIDGEWATER.

Messrs. Batchelar & Son,
Croydon.

The books of the firm for the last three years have been investigated by Messrs. Cash, Stone, & Co., Chartered Accountants, of 90, Cannon-street, London, E.C. whose certificate is appended.

90, Cannon-street, London, E.C., 20th July, 1896.

To the Directors of Messrs. BATCHELAR & SON, LIMITED, Croydon.

Gentlemen,—We have examined the books of the business carried on under the style of Batchelar & Son, at Croydon, Beckenham, and Bromley, for the three years ending 31st December, 1895, and find that the profits have been as follows:—

For the year ending 31st December, 1893 ..	£4,161 4 0
" 31st December, 1894 ..	5,295 3 10
" 31st December, 1895 ..	5,084 5 11
Making a total for the three years of..	£14,540 13 9
Or an average annual profit amounting to..	£4,846 17 11

The above profits have in each case been arrived at after charging all the usual trade charges, and a sum sufficient in our opinion to make proper provision for bad and doubtful debts, and depreciation, but no charge has been made for: (a) Rent of premises now to be acquired by the Company. (b) Interest on loans, and partner's capital. (c) Income tax. (d) Services of Mr. F. W. Batchelar.

We are, Gentlemen, yours faithfully,
CASH, STONE, & CO., Chartered Accountants.

Taking the average net profit as certified above at the sum of	£4,846
And deducting therefrom the amount required for interest on £30,000 4½ per Cent Debenture Stock	£1,350
There would remain a balance available for Directors' remuneration and dividend of	£3,496
The amount required to pay the dividend on the Preference Shares is only.....	£1,375

The accounts will be made up annually to 31st December, and the Debenture interest will be paid half-yearly on the 1st January and the 1st July. The first dividend on the Preference Shares will be calculated from the dates fixed for the payment of the respective instalments up to December 31st.

The vendor will defray all the preliminary legal and other expenses connected with the formation of the Company up to the first allotment of Shares, including the transfers of the properties to the Company, stamps, and brokers' fees and charges. Except as appears by this Clause, no promotion money has been or will be paid, and no portion of the Capital has been or will be underwritten.

The contract for sale is dated 22nd day of July, 1896, and is made between Frederick William Batchelar, as vendor, of the one part, and William James Paxton, as trustee for the Company, of the other part. The following contracts have also been entered into by the vendor:—(1) A contract dated the 21st day of July, 1896, and made between Agnes Batchelar and Samuel Crowhurst of the one part, and the said Frederick William Batchelar of the other part, relating to the purchase of the Share of the late Thomas George Batchelar in the business; (2) A contract dated the 21st day of July, 1896, and made between Robert William Price and Robert Josiah Hinton of the one part and the said Frederick William Batchelar of the other part, for the purchase of the freehold premises in North End, Croydon; (3) A contract, dated the 21st day of July, 1896, and made between Alfred Bullock of the one part and the said Frederick William Batchelar of the other part, for the purchase of the freehold premises in Duppas Hill, Croydon. These contracts and the memorandum and articles of association, Messrs. Cash, Stone, & Co.'s certificate, Messrs. Debenham, Tewson, Farmer, & Bridgewater's valuation, and a draft of the Trust Deed, securing the Debenture Stock, may be inspected at the Office of the Solicitor.

The business will be taken over subject to all existing contracts. These are of the ordinary trade character, and cannot be more particularly specified. They do not refer in any way to the promotion of the Company, or the placing of its capital, but some of them may possibly fall technically under Section 38 of the Companies Act, 1867. Applicants for Shares will be deemed to have waived their right, if any, to further particulars or specification of such contracts.

Applications for Shares and Debenture Stock should be made on the forms accompanying the Prospectus, and be sent to the Company's Bankers, with a cheque for the amount payable on application.

Where no allotment is made the deposit will be refunded in full, and where the allotment is less than the amount applied for the balance of the deposit will be applied towards the instalment payable on allotment. The failure to pay any future instalments when due will render previous payments liable to forfeiture.

Prospectuses and forms of application can be obtained at the Offices, or from the Bankers, Brokers, or Solicitor.

North End, Croydon, July 24th, 1896.

The List of Applications will open to-day, Wednesday, the 29th day of July, and close on or before to-morrow, Thursday, the 30th day of July, 1896, at 4 p.m., for Town, and the following morning for the Country.

PROSPECTUS.

This Company has been formed for the purposes of (1) Acquiring, as from the 30th day of June last, carrying on and developing the business of a paper manufacturer and paper agent, for many years successfully carried on by the late Mr. Philip Cadell Peebles, under the title of A. M. Peebles & Son, at 153, Queen Victoria-street, in the City of London, and as Peebles & Son at the Whiteash and Rishton Paper Mills, in the county of Lancaster; (2) Acquiring the freehold paper mill, land and premises called Whiteash Mill, with the machinery and fixtures therein, and the long leasehold, mill and premises known as the Rishton Mill aforesaid, with the machinery and fixtures therein, and also certain freehold and leasehold land and premises and water rights used in connection with the said mills.

As is well known, the late Mr. Peebles carried on one of the largest, if not the largest and most successful, businesses of a paper manufacturer and paper agent in England, and his business is now being converted into a Company by his executors by reason of his death.

The Directors have, however, been fortunate enough to secure as Managing Director of the Company Mr. Howard Maxwell Peebles, a son of the late Mr. Philip Cadell Peebles, who for a long time prior to the death of his father was associated with him in the active management of the business, and since his death (in November last) has carried on the business on behalf of the executors.

The accounts of the business, which have been regularly audited by Messrs. W. S. Ogle & Co., chartered accountants, of 90, Cannon-street, show, as appears by the following certificate, after writing off upwards of £7,000 a year for depreciation, an average profit of upwards of £25,000 a year, the year ended the 31st December, 1895, having shown a profit of nearly £30,000.

The following is a copy of the certificate furnished to the Directors by Messrs. W. S. Ogle & Co.

"To Messrs. A. M. Peebles & Son, Limited.

"Gentlemen,

"For some years past we have audited the accounts of the Rishton and Whiteash Mills, belonging to the late Mr. P. C. Peebles, which, after charging depreciation, but without charging interest on capital, show profits as follows:—

	Depreciation. £	s.	d.		Profit after deducting Depreciation. £	s.	d.
For the year ending 31st December, 1891	6,039	4	3	..	17,500	19	11
" " " " 1892	6,882	13	3	..	13,023	12	11
" " " " 1893	7,289	17	9	..	9,601	0	9
" " " " 1894	7,600	6	11	..	15,442	14	10
" " " " 1895	7,950	10	1	..	20,671	18	5

Giving an average of £15,248 per annum.

"We have also for the last four years audited the books of the Firm kept at 153, Queen Victoria-street, which show profits, after providing for bad debts, but without charging interest on capital, as follows:—

For the year ending 31st December, 1892	10,815	15	6
" " " 1893	9,784	10	1
" " " 1894	10,010	16	5
" " " 1895	9,167	19	10

Giving on the whole business an average annual profit of £25,192.

"Yours faithfully,
"WILLIAM S. OGLE & CO.,
"Chartered Accountants.

"90, Cannon-street, E.C.
"24th July, 1896."

The mills, lands, and various properties with the machinery therein have been valued by Messrs. Fuller, Horsey, Sons and Cassell, and they have furnished to the Directors their report, of which the following is a copy:—

"To the Chairman and Directors of A. M. PEEBLES & SON, LIMITED,

"July 25th, 1896.

"Gentlemen,—In accordance with instructions we have attended at the premises known as The Whiteash and Rishton Paper Mills, and have made a careful survey and valuation of same.

"The Whiteash Mill is situate near Accrington, in the county of Lancaster, and occupies, together with the Brookside Mill site, a total area of about 25½ acres.

"The Rishton Mill is situate near Blackburn, in the same county, and has a ground area of 17 acres and 23 perches or thereabouts.

"The former Mill is freehold, and the latter is leasehold for unexpired terms of about 977 years.

"The plant and machinery, which throughout both mills is of modern design and in thorough working order, includes three paper-making machines, with the necessary washing, beating, and pounding engines, main and auxiliary driving engines and steam boilers, &c., &c.

"We are of opinion that the present fair value as a going concern of the above-mentioned freehold and long leasehold Paper Mills is the sum of One hundred and twenty-four thousand, six hundred and forty-nine pounds.

"These figures are inclusive of the leases, wayleaves, and grants which secure to the Whiteash Mill its exceptionally abundant supply of water, but are exclusive of any value for goodwill, stock, stores, and book-debts.

"We are, Gentlemen,
"Yours faithfully,
"FULLER, HORSEY, SONS, & CASSELL."

In addition the Company will take over the stock of paper and materials at the Mills which on the 30th of June last, according to the stock sheets, were of the value of £28,792 17s. 1d. and in London of the estimated value of £300, and they will also take the debts due to the firm (but not including cash at the bankers) which on that date stood in the books at the sum of £34,282 5s. 3d., and will have to discharge liabilities of the firm not exceeding £32,074. The Company in addition to the goodwill of the business freehold, leasehold properties, machinery and stock, will thus take the benefit of the difference between the value of the stock and materials and the liabilities before mentioned or £31,301 2s. 4d., as is shown by the foregoing figures.

The price to be paid by the Company for the purchase of the goodwill, properties and businesses, free from incumbrances except the rents and covenants reserved by and contained in the several leases and grants by which the properties are holden and the discharge of the liabilities before mentioned, has been fixed by the Vendors at the sum of £265,000, payable as to £30,000 by the allotment to them of Debenture Stock of that nominal amount, as to £20,000 by the allotment to them of 5,800 Preferred Shares in the Company, and as to £30,000 by the allotment to them of 6,000 Ordinary Shares in the Company, such shares to be allotted as fully paid-up, and as to the remainder in cash. The Vendors will pay all the expenses of and incidental to the formation and registration of the Company up to the first general allotment. The Directors propose to appropriate £25,000 out of the proceeds of the Debentures and Preference and Ordinary Shares for Working Capital and the further development of the business. The profits, as certified by Messrs. W. S. Ogle & Co. after providing for the interest on the

Debenture issue	£4,500
And on the Preference Shares	£5,000 and after setting aside an ample sum for reserve and providing for the Directors' remuneration, show a sum more than sufficient to pay 10 per cent. on the Ordinary Shares of the Company.
Total	£9,500

The following contract has been entered into, namely—A contract dated the 27th day of July, 1896, between Wilberforce Savery Pasmore James Mortimer Garrard, Howard Maxwell Peebles, and George John Maddick, executors of the will of the late Philip Cadell Peebles deceased, and the Company, being the contract for the acquisition by the Company of the above mentioned properties, and for the engagement of the said Howard Maxwell Peebles as Managing Director, and certain contracts have been entered into by the Vendors in the ordinary course of business for the supply of paper and for the purchase of materials for making paper, and with their travellers, superintendents, and agents, and agreements have been entered into with third parties as to the formation of the Company, and the subscription of capital and otherwise, to none of which the Company is a party, and as these contracts and agreements may constitute contracts under Section 38 of the Companies Act of 1867, applicants must be deemed to have notice of the contents of them, and will be required and will be deemed to have waived particulars and specifications of any such contracts, whether under Section 38 of the Companies Act, 1867, or otherwise, and subscriptions are invited and will be received on that condition only. It is intended to apply to the Committee of the Stock Exchange, London, for official quotations.

Copies of the Memorandum and Articles of Association and of the contract above set out, and of the deed which has been prepared to secure the Debenture Stock, can be inspected at the Offices of the Solicitors of the Company.

Applications for Shares and Debenture Stock must be made on the respective forms accompanying the Prospectus, and sent to the Company's Bankers, the BANK OF ENGLAND, who have been the Bankers of the Firm of A. M. Peebles & Son for the past 35 years, with the amount payable on application. If no allotment is made the deposit will be returned in full, and where the amount of Debenture Stock or the number of Shares (as the case may be) allotted is less than the amount or number applied for the balance will be applied towards the payment due on allotment.

Prospectuses with Forms of Application can be obtained at the Offices of the Company or at its Bankers, Brokers, or Solicitors.

Dated this 27th day of July, 1896.

Sea-sickness

Mr. LABOUCHERE, M.P., said in "TRUTH":—

"The man who discovers a perfect cure for sea-sickness will be one "of the greatest benefactors of the human race. At different times "many such discoveries have been announced, but somehow they "have not stood the test of practice. Being one of the worst of "sailors, I have tried most of the remedies as they have appeared, "and I can therefore make the last statement confidently. But at "last hope has dawned upon me. On two recent occasions when "crossing the Channel I have tried the remedy advertised under the "name of 'Yanatas.' On both occasions—and they were the first "on record—I got across without serious qualms. As the weather "was thoroughly bad on both passages, I feel justified on this, in "recommending fellow-sufferers to try 'Yanatas.' I cannot "answer for its effect on a long voyage, and it may not be equally "efficacious on all constitutions; but if it only enables the average "'bad sailor' to cross in peace from Dover to Calais, it will be to "many a priceless boon."

This competition must have been an unusually difficult one, I think. At all events, the answers received were exceptionally weak, and it is only after long consideration that it has been determined to strain a point and award the Prize, which will be given to TOUCAN for the suggestion "Vi-cycle."

"TRUTH" PUZZLE, No. 910.

As I hope to be able to publish a further selection of Lists, I will not at present award this Prize.

CONDENSED RULES.

All answers to the current Puzzle must be sent in on or before the morning of the Monday week following the date of that Puzzle's publication, to the PUZZLE EDITOR, TRUTH Buildings, Carteret-street, Queen Anne's-gate, London, S.W. The answers must be signed by a nom de plume of not more than twelve letters, and must not be sent on post-cards, nor by telegraph, nor by hand; whilst in the case of new competitors the real name and address must be forwarded with the first reply sent.

"TRUTH" PUZZLE, No. 914.

According to a contemporary, numerous suggestions have already been made as to the way in which the Sixtieth Anniversary of the Queen's reign should be marked. These suggestions include the following proposals:—

A commemoration bible. A sixpenny history of the reign. A portrait of the Queen by a first-rate artist. Gilding the dome of St. Paul's! The establishment of Imperial Penny Postage. The Queen's title to be "Empress of Britain." The beginning of Channel tunnels between Ireland and England, and Ireland and Scotland. The appointment of a Federal Council of the Empire. A children's bronze medal. A special coinage. A new annual Bank Holiday. An Imperial charitable fund. "Something" for the volunteers.

Thinking that the above proposals can be considerably improved on, it has been resolved to offer the usual prize of Two Guineas this week for

THE BEST ORIGINAL SUGGESTION AS TO THE WAY IN WHICH THE SIXTIETH ANNIVERSARY OF HER MAJESTY'S REIGN CAN BE MARKED.

All suggestions, which should be made as briefly as possible, must reach me by the morning of Monday, August 10, at the latest.

The answering of the main question depends upon the answers to these three. 4. The letter "H."—Jeff.

1. A universal system of coinage, weights, and measures. 2. Christianity in the churches, and the advisability of using them for public meetings, criticising their methods of raising money by bazaars, balls, concerts, &c.—J.O.N.

1. Suitable men's costumes for tropical weather in England. 2. Is football a dangerous pastime? 3. The best dress for lady cyclists. 4. Is cigarette smoking injurious to health? 5. Music-halls v. Theatres; and, last—but not least—The top hat.—East Anglia.

1. Are manners dying out amongst men? 2. Is the bicycling craze acting injuriously upon the different trades and industries?—Pansy.

1. Are English people polite? 2. Why don't people go to church? 3. Are music-halls demoralising? 4. Is cycling harmful? 5. Is lunacy on the increase? 6. Is education a failure?—Wandering Jew.

Are domestic servants as good as they used to be?—Almaviva.

Is bicycling, lawn-tennis, or archery, most conducive to matrimony in rural districts?—W. G. B.

1. The future of the horse. 2. The British farmer. 3. Western Australia or South Africa? 4. Should cycles be taxed? 5. Employment for spinsters.—Co.

That actions for breach of promise of marriage should be abolished.—Envoy.

1. Should our girls be brought up on the English, American, or French system? 2. Do men like English or American girls best? 3. Is the English, American, or French lady's bicycling costume the most appropriate? 4. What should be done with Rhodesia? 5. The Deceased Wife's Sister's Bill. 6. Could fashion not invent more suitable costumes for men to be worn in the warm weather?—Malua.

1. Will people get too fat for want of walking exercise when motor carriages become general? 2. Will cycling be beneficial on the whole to the rising generation? 3. Do people get sufficient sleep nowadays? 4. Why do not creditors receive more of a bankrupt's estate, and lawyers and accountants less? 5. Which is the happiest time of life? (The general idea is that childhood is the most enjoyable; my own experience contradicts this, so I believe does that of most thinking people.) 6. Is farming played out in England?—Zou-Zou.

As examinations are such a fearful bugbear to every profession, and not always a true test, is there not a better method of ascertaining whether the student has really mastered the subject or not?—Beginner.

Whether there would be fewer bachelors and old maids if the women proposed marriage instead of the men.—Nurse.

1. Did actors act better when "rogues and vagabonds" by statute law, than now they are "society" people (by courtesy)? 2. What is the reason why authors and publishers are enemies?—Alastor.

1. Is the sermon a waning influence? 2. Is gambling sapping the nation's morals? 3. Is eternal punishment an exploded dogma?—Wobbles.

The insertion of bogus advertisements of domestic servants in daily papers by registry office agents, resulting in a lot of correspondence which invariably comes to nothing.—Bath Chap.

1. What shall be done with husbands who have retired? 2. Which is the best hour to show a husband an overdrawn house account. 3. How can a husband tackle a wife on extravagant dress.—Penguin.

1. How to make Sunday a day of rational rest and recreation. 2. How to reduce street noises without having the "silence of the tomb" around you.—H. E. G.

1. Is it dignified for our clergy to ride the bike? 2. Shall our horses wear hats? 3. Why not motor boots and shoes for the million?—Das Ding.

Should women read the newspapers?—Kathleen.

1. Is the modern man losing flesh? 2. Is home life declining?—Oom Paul.

Is a domesticated husband an unmixed blessing? —Grannie.

As women are unrepresented in Parliament, should they not be exempt from direct taxation—income tax to wit?—Mrs Hampden.

1. Is poverty a crime? 2. Is philanthropy genuine? 3. Is true love a myth? 4. Is the Socialist mad? 5. Is wealth essential to happiness? 6. Does honesty pay?—Pigtail.

Over civilisation—its various evils tending to destroy peace and happiness, and to increase physical and mental disease.—Dilaram.

1. Is cycling conducive to physical and moral health? 2. Ought a man to be compelled to marry on attaining the age of twenty-five? 3. How ought we to dress on Sundays for church, &c.?—W. J. T.

1. Should not women as well as men remove their headgear in places of worship? 2. Do the sexes really love one another?—Arch. Gibbs.

1. The astonishing successes and unaccountable failures of candidates for the Oxford and Cambridge local exams., as indicated by the logic of many facts, and the subterranean murmurs of those who think they are "in the know" concerning the hidden mysteries of the proclaimed results—the details of which are not given, as with College of Preceptors. 2. The "debasing of the moral coinage" as displayed in the numerous secretly paid agents, who praise certain commodities—posing as friends giving friendly advice, while really receiving a commission when their sly words have been successful.—Lafouc.

1. Best rational costume for summer for policemen and postmen. 2. Why not have a Continental Sunday in England? 3. Abolition of tipping by guests at private houses. 4. Should not the full address of the sender and receiver be allowed in the charge for the 6d. telegram? 5. Should ladies and gentlemen be allowed to bathe together at the seaside? 6. Why not abolish the custom of sending wreaths to funerals, and give the money now spent in flowers to charities? 7. The advisability of all items in hotel menus being set out in English. 8. Prevention of overcrowding railway carriages with small parcels. 9. Overcrowding on Underground railway.

Woman in the railway carriage. How to protect her from lunatics and libertines.—Chelsea.

1. What sort of a wife and mother is the girl who spends most of her life out on a bicycle likely to make? 2. Should the use of motor cars become general, would this inevitably lead to the extinction of the horse, and consequent decay of horse racing and hunting? 3. Should Members of Parliament be paid? Would this step lead to the popularisation or the reverse of the House of Commons?—Beaumanoir.

1. My Hobby. 2. Where to spend a holiday. 3. How to save.—A. E. L.

Freemasonry versus Christianity as the required subject for papers in the silly season, as that topic has been lately much discussed in religious circles, especial weight having been given to Margiotta's revelations, published by Burns & Oates. I believe I am right in saying that, should the above topic be mooted in any paper soever, its editor and staff would be able to get a good long holiday, as the topic in question is of such a character as to ensure devotees of every sect in England madly rushing into print to air the doctrines of the sect they pertain to. Indeed, I venture to think that the letters that might (and would to a certainty) reach the editor of any paper would allow of his being provided with matter for at least ten years—that is, supposing, of course, he inserted all letters sent him.—Cable Tow.

CO-OPERATIVE HOUSEKEEPING.

So many complaints are made of the inefficiency of cooks, that it seems as if the above idea might be elaborated. For example, we see twenty-five houses in a terrace, and every morning twenty-five incapable maids of all work, or, perhaps, so-called "cooks," light twenty-five fires and send up twenty-five very indifferent breakfasts, when by co-operation one house of the twenty-five might be made into a kitchen, and really good chefs be employed who would send out well-cooked meals to the other twenty-four at a far smaller cost.—Blanche.

LADY ON WHEELS.

Is she usurping her position to the detriment of her sex? I would say in reply:—

Here's to the lady on wheels,
Happy no doubt she feels,
Sitting with form erect and with good grace,
A pattern to those who are doing the pace.
Which example if not followed it has been said
We shall soon have a race the shape of the Z.
Snibor

1. How can the indiscriminate giving of wedding presents be brought again within reasonable limits, and restricted to friends and relations? 2. In anticipation of the auto-car coming into vogue, what will become of the horses? 3. Are young children of to-day more precocious than the children of forty or fifty years ago?—Esperanza.

1. On the ethics and desirability of interviewing. 2. On the comparative advantages and disadvantages of living in a flat or a house to one's self. 3 The nineteenth century has witnessed marvellous discoveries in science and practical applications of them; what may be expected or predicted of the twentieth?—Excelsior.

1. The best way of keeping railway carriages cool in summer and warm in winter. 2. The best kind of education to make girls useful, womanly women. 3. The best way of expressing degrees of friendship in the termination of a letter, as yours truly, sincerely, faithfully.—Qu'Appelle.

The Deceased Wife's Sister has been discussed in and out of season, and some years ago the question "Is Marriage a Failure?" was the subject of a long and strong controversy in the D. T. Now, there is a closely related question which, so far as I know, has never been discussed in a public journal, and it is one which, if thrashed out in its moral, social, and legal bearings, could not fail to produce suitable matter for a silly season. I allude to the question, "Is it right for a man to marry his widow's niece?"—C. D. Dub.

1. Should women cycle, and if so, should they wear skirts or breeches? 2. If women continue to "develop" as they have done for the past decade, how many years will it take to have the respective positions hitherto occupied by the sexes completely reversed? 3. Would it be advisable to conduct experiments with the view of utilising the tides and other energies of the sea for the production of mechanical power?—Shamrock.

1. What is the best kind of treatment for reforming evil-disposed or deceitful boys? 2. Is an extension of British territory abroad, and consequent immigration thereto, of much advantage to the working man remaining in England, so long as an unlimited number of needy foreigners are allowed to land here without any restrictions, and supply their place in the labour market? 3. Should a civilised power like England, in making war against a newly-conquered people like the Matabele, who are making a brave stand, as the ancient Britons did, for what they consider their rights and their independence, burn their kraals and kidnap and take captive their women and children, as we are told Col. Plummer carried off some hundreds in a recent battle?—Rex.

1. A tax on cycles. 2. Municipal theatres and music-halls. 3. Ethic influence of the play. 4. The unemployed. 5. Reform of the Poor Law system. 6. Free education. 7. State socialism or collectivism. 8. The payment of members of the House of Commons. 9. One Anglican church. 10. Nationalisation of railways and waterways. 11. A new political party. 12. Gambling. 13. The motor carriage of the future. 14. Credit and Usury. 15. Speculation by Companies. 16. Stockbrokering. 17. The decline of ballad concerts.—Antiquary.

1. Are clergymen of all or any denominations helps or hindrances to the spread of true Christianity? 2. What are the essentials necessary for truly enjoying life? 3. Does civilisation increase individual happiness? 4. Can Socialism become a national characteristic? 5. Does the "stove-pipe" hat add to the respectability of the wearer? If so, why? 6. Should the female domestic servant be taught and allowed to practise cycling, dancing, pianoforte playing, and other innocent recreations? 7. Is cycling conducive to female health and elegance?—Immortal Will.

George Eliot, somehow, says that "the secrets of Freemasons, if they have any, do not seem to weigh very heavily on them." Have they any? Or is the "banquet" the attraction? A lady writer on theosophy has stated that the Freemasons are not likely to recover "the lost secret" until they admit women as members of the craft. And the question that I should propose is:—Are the ranks of Freemasonry likely to be invaded by the "new woman"? —Queensholme.

1. Is our spelling immoral? 2. Shall we ever have an aristocracy? 3. Is any tongue fit to be catholic? 4. Shall we ever have a free press? 5. Is a good conceit bad for us? 6. Is character ever knowable? 7. Is patriotism ever a vice? 8. Are popular proverbs misleading? 9. Is Parliament necessary? 10. Does reading make us shallow? 11. Are popular poets reliable? 12. How can we save the lapsed churches? 13. Do we ever really love the whole truth? 14. Is chemical medicine ever necessary? 15. Can science ever be irreligious? 16. Is heredity a nightmare? 17. Is pessimism ever poetic (artistic)? 18. Can humour become universal? 19. Is nature reliable? 20. Can genius be cultivated by code? 21. Is self-reliance a virtue? 22. Is money a luxury? 23. Is science overdone? 24. Which minority should rule? 25. Should prisons be abolished? 26. Is selfishness always useful? 27. Is individuality a vice? 28. Are we all Pagans? 29. Must poverty be perpetual? 30. Are the insane irresponsible?—Makmax.

1. The pros and cons of universal conscription for the Army and Navy. 2. The desirability of founding self-supporting agricultural and pastoral communistic retreats for occasional (not excluding permanent) retirement from a competitive world. 3. Open-air clubs for encouraging in the interests of health and good spirits the spending of the whole of life in the open-air, or with the barest shelter; with (inter alia) the restoration of the Roman amphitheatre form of building in lieu of existing churches, theatres, halls, &c. 4. Formation of missionary societies to teach the world the gospel of indifference to supernaturalism, which, itself the offspring of dreams, is the fruitful parent of the deadliest hatred, resulting in most of the war, cruelty, and rapine that has affected the world. —Nitram.

1. Deceased Wife's Sister Bill. Allow a man to marry his deceased wife's sister; we must allow a woman to marry her deceased husband's brother. "If they once broke through the table of affinity in this case, the whole table would soon go the wall" (Duke of Argyll's speech). "Better marry your grandmother and have done with it" (Sidney Smith). 2. British filibusters in Africa. Why not openly avow our mission to extirpate native races, seize their land, gold, diamonds, and cattle? Why cloak our crime by pretending to civilise and convert them? They are no more "rebels" to us than the Greeks who fought at Marathon under Miltiades, and at Thermopylæ under Leonidas, were rebels to Xerxes. Why does not the church protest? 3. Why should not cycling ladies wear "knickers?" They could pedal far more easily. As to propriety—having appropriated all man's garments, but one, why hesitate to take that? Man will say with Othello: "I am not valiant neither: but every pushing spinster gets my pants. Well, let it go all. Why should honour outlive honesty?" 4. Abolish side-saddles. Why should not ladies ride astraddle on horses as well as on bicycles? Their seat would thus be more secure; and they would sit square on the saddle, not leaning to the left as many now do.—J. McGrigor Allan.

1. Write a leading article for the newspapers, showing why the present Government use their large majority on every pressing occasion in the House of Commons instead of their brains (if they have any). 2. (Another article.) Also why the present Government is the most stupid, "addlepated" in existence since the year 1832, and why they will very soon "politically" hang themselves. —Theology.

SHORT SIGHT.—This form of defective vision is, no doubt, alarmingly increasing, but many kinds of defective vision are constantly mistaken for short sight merely because clearer vision is obtained by bringing an object closer to the eyes. If such are treated with ordinary short-sighted spectacles the mischief is greatly aggravated, and serious and permanent injury is done to the sight.

ENTRE NOUS.

OWING to my printers having a conscientious objection to working on Bank Holidays—an objection with which I fully sympathise—it has been impossible to deal in this week's Truth with any correspondence received since Saturday last, and with a good deal received prior to that date. I will ask both my correspondents and readers to kindly note this fact. All communications held over in consequence of the Bank Holiday will receive my best attention during the coming week.

It is utterly untrue that the Queen's health is causing anxiety at Court, and that her Majesty has been advised to hasten her departure from Osborne to Balmoral. These mendacious flimflams are now circulated every few weeks. As a matter of fact, the Queen is in the very best possible state of health, and during the last four months her Majesty has been better in all respects than for many years past.

Before the Queen leaves Osborne the Battenberg Memorial Chapel in Whippingham Church is to be "dedicated" by the Bishop of Winchester, and there will be an elaborate ceremony on the occasion, attended by the Queen, the Royal family, and the Court.

The papers announce that "the usual Semi-state banquets" at Osborne during the Cowes Regatta week will not be given this year, in consequence of the Royal family being in mourning. There have never been any such functions during the week, except when the German Emperor has happened to be at Cowes, and then two large dinners were given by the Queen in his honour in the Indian Room at Osborne. It seems rather hard that the officers and seamen of the Royal yachts should have been forbidden to take their customary part in the Cowes Regatta, and their vessels are not to be illuminated during the week, as has been usual.

Here is a valuable addition to the suggestions now being ventilated for the celebration of the Queen's "record" as a reigning Sovereign. It is that the railway should be extended from Ballater to Braemar and be opened by her Majesty. The gentleman who offers this suggestion writes me very strongly on the great need which exists for this line, and the blessing that it would be to the inhabitants of Braemar as well as to visitors who frequent the place. There will be no question, I imagine, as to the general utility of such a line, and the only objections to it would probably come from owners of deer forests, and crack-brained æsthetics who consider a locomotive an outrage on the beauties of nature. A victory of public interest and common sense over these obstructionists would certainly be a worthy event to commemorate the sixty-first year of the Queen's reign.

Apropos of Royal processions, who trains elderly gentlemen to walk backwards? The sight of them when engaged in retrograde progression recalls forcibly to mind the trained poodles of a circus, and is not pleasing. Whom does the lamentable spectacle gratify? Surely it is an outrage on the dignity of human nature and inconsistent with average sanity. To the Sovereign, the officials shuffling backwards in front of her must be a grotesque rather than a majestic sight. Why should they walk as nature has not meant them to? The subject is well worthy of a silly season discussion.

The Prince and Princess of Wales are to leave Cowes next week. H.R.H. goes direct to Homburg, and from the 26th until the 28th he is to be at Baden-Baden, when he will be the guest of the Prince of Fürstenburg at the Hôtel Stéphanie. The Princess will be conveyed in the Osborne (and also Princess Victoria and Prince and Princess Charles) to Copenhagen, and she is to stay in Denmark until the middle of October, and will then return to London for a week before going to Sandringham for the winter.

The Prince of Wales will probably be the guest of the Duke and Duchess of Sutherland, at Dunrobin Castle, about the end of September, after his visits to the Queen at Balmoral, and to the Duke and Duchess of Fife at Mar Lodge.

The Grand Duke and Grand Duchess Serge of Russia, who are now in Germany, are coming to England about the middle of September, and they will be the guests of the Queen at Balmoral for a week or ten days. The arrangements for the visit of the Emperor and Empress of Russia to England next summer will then be discussed by the Queen and the Grand Duke Serge.

Princess Beatrice will not spend the autumn at Balmoral, but her stay there is to be limited to three or four weeks, after which H.R.H. will go to Germany to pay some family visits. During the absence of Princess Beatrice the Queen will have the company of Princess Christian or Princess Louise. Princess Beatrice is still suffering from extreme depression of spirits, and it is thought that a prolonged stay at Balmoral would be very injurious to her.

The Duchess of York has been ordered to the Engadine for a month, as she derived much benefit from her last visit to that region in August, 1894. H.R.H. started yesterday for St. Moritz accompanied by the Duchess of Teck. The Duchess of York will go to Balmoral when she returns to England in September, and the Duchess of Teck is to proceed from the Engadine on a visit to the King and Queen of Würtemberg at Friedrichshafen, on the Lake of Constance, where she will be met by the Duke, who has gone to Germany for two months.

A tragic occurrence, which occurred at the recent visit of the Duke and Duchess of York to the Yorkshire Agricultural Show, has given rise to dire heartburnings in the bosoms of some of the City Fathers. By invitation of the Lord Mayor, the aldermen, including the ex-Mayor and several who had held the Chief Magistracy, assembled in carriages to meet the Duke and Duchess on their arrival, and drove in procession to the Show ground. Arrived at the Pavilion, the Royalties and other eminences proceeded to the feast there prepared for them; but when the turn of the humble aldermen came, they found the door closed against them, and had to go elsewhere and get what refreshment they choose to pay for. To exclude an alderman from anything in the shape of a feed is at all times a heartless and indefensible proceeding; but to bring a hungry man up to the door of the banquet and then shut the door in his face is rudeness, whether perpetrated at the expense of an alderman or anybody else. In this case the rudeness was accentuated by the fact that every one of the aldermen was a handsome contributor to the funds of the Show.

Nearly all the newspapers have described Prince and Princess Frederick of Schaumburg-Lippe as "the daughter and son-in-law of the Empress Frederick," with whom, as a matter of fact, they are in no way connected. Princess Frederick is the eldest daughter of the Crown Prince and Crown Princess of Denmark, and she was married at Copenhagen last May, her husband being a grand-nephew of the Queen of Denmark, and the eldest son of Prince William of Schaumburg-Lippe, who is one of the great territorial magnates of Bohemia. One of Prince Frederick's sisters is the Queen of Würtemberg, and another of them is married to the Duchess of Albany's brother, the Prince of Waldeck-Pyrmont.

The proposed marriage between the Hereditary Prince of Coburg and one of the twin daughters of the Grand Duchess Vera of Würtemberg (each of whom will have a fortune of twelve millions of marks) appears to have fallen through, and it is rumoured that Prince Alfred will shortly be betrothed to the Princess Feodore of Saxe-Meiningen, only child of the Hereditary Prince Bernard, while her mother is the Princess Charlotte of Prussia, eldest daughter of the Emperor Frederick. Princess Feodore was born at Potsdam, May 12, 1879, so she is four years and a half younger than Prince Alfred. The early marriage of this Prince is a great object to his parents, as he is by no means in strong health, and in the event of his death the Duke of Connaught would become next heir to the throne of Saxe-Coburg-Gotha, and to the large settled estates in the two Duchies in Upper Austria and in the Tyrol, which pass with the succession.

The Duke of Cambridge is to return from Homburg on the 31st, and during September he will pay some visits in Yorkshire and in Scotland. The Prince of Wales is to shoot with the Duke in October at Six-Mile Bottom near Newmarket.

The attention lately drawn to the failure of Lord Cadogan in fulfilling, up to the present time, the brilliant predictions regarding his Viceregal reign in Ireland led to a ludicrous announcement last week in what may be called the inspired Irish Viceregal Court organ. It was solemnly announced that there would be a brilliant "season" at the Viceregal Lodge during August. A London season might as well be announced for September. Dublin is a complete social desert in August. Only in the last week does it fill for the Horse Show, and then only for the week. An August season would be very much out of season so far as Irish society would be concerned. Parties of visitors at the Viceregal Lodge and one or two cricket matches would hardly constitute a "season."

Lord Cadogan will probably remain in London until the Land Bill leaves the House of Lords. Lord Ashbourne left Dublin this week for London. The position he occupies now with regard to the Irish Land Bill has some awkwardness for one who in the beginning of his career was a staunch landlord champion. The position now held by Mr. Carson was once his. Most of the Irish landlords have bitterly resented the way in which the sweets of office tempered the views of one, who was wont to be as ardent a champion of their rights as if he had been one of their number. Some years ago this feeling found expression, when the Kildare-street

Club would not accept as member a near relative—to whom there was no personal objection—of Lord Ashbourne's.

I recently alluded to the "Deer's Leap" which surrounds Deer Parks. The following is stated to be its origin and nature in a paper contributed in June to Notes and Queries:—

In mediæval times no one could convert his own land into a park without special licence. The park owner having obtained the licence, often introduced deer into it, and for that purpose left a low place in the fence called a Deer's Leap. A park with Deer Leaps was styled a free park, the right having been gained by prescription. The term "Deer's Leap," however, came to be used in another sense. In some ancient parks the boundary was not the actual hedge and external ditch, but an imaginary line about 15 ft. from the outer edge of the park ditch. Thus the extended boundary sometimes has been claimed for the whole circuit of the park, sometimes for only parts of it.

Nine years ago the London and North-Western Railway took a small portion of Lord Gerard's Lancashire estate, and he claimed £9,187 in respect to compensation for certain items, besides £360,000 for damage to the property, as the Company's operations might interfere with the coal workings. After a deal of correspondence and negotiation, the question of compensation came two years ago before Mr. Bosanquet, Q.C., as arbitrator, and there were prolonged sittings, with much evidence on both sides. The arbitrator has just issued his award, and he gives Lord Gerard £6,245. This being a less sum than the Company originally offered, Lord Gerard will have the satisfaction of paying all the costs he has incurred during the last nine years, which are estimated at £10,000.

I have had a great deal of correspondence with reference to the comparative prices of a seaside hotel in England and at Scheveningen, on which something was said in TRUTH a fortnight ago; and with all respect to the gentleman who sent me the original figures, I think there must have been some mistake about them. It may be remembered that he stated that a sum equivalent to £5. 16s. 8d. was quoted to him as an inclusive weekly charge for two persons occupying one of the best rooms n one of the best hotels in Scheveningen. I have now before me the tariffs of the only three hotels in Scheveningen which could come under that description. Taking in each case the cheapest price quoted for a second-floor bedroom the total charge per week (at "en pension" rates) works out in the lowest case at a pound a week more than the above figures, in the next at £2 more, and in the third at £4 more. If a better class of bedroom were taken, an addition of 10s. or 20s. per week, or more, must be made to these figures.

How the mistake arose it is not for me to say; but it is evident that there has been a mistake somewhere, as I fear my correspondent will find to his cost when he gets to Scheveningen. Looking at these tariffs all round, it seems to me that there is little or nothing to choose between the Scheveningen tariffs and those at the best English hotels, which is only what I have always heard. Any reader of TRUTH, therefore, who is meditating an excursion to Scheveningen on the strength of what he read in these columns the other day, will do well to reconsider his plans. I may add that a traveller, who stayed at both Scheveningen and Ostend last August, tells me that he was charged 10s. a day for a room only at the former place, and 30s. a day for the same accommodation at the latter.

There is another point which, in fairness to English hotel-keepers, ought to be considered, and that is that "boarding" terms imply in England a great deal more than they do on the Continent—more especially in Holland. The English hotel breakfast is a substantial meal, as compared with the Continental coffee and bread and butter. The English luncheon may not equal the French déjeuner; but it is fully equivalent to the corresponding meal in Holland. As regards the dinners, there may not be much to choose in point of quantity and quality; but the English hotel certainly has the advantage over Scheveningen and most similar places in the style in which it is served. Finally, the visitor who boards at an English hotel gets a fourth daily meal in the shape of afternoon tea (the most important meal of the day, I believe, to ladies), whereas abroad this will mean extras to the amount of perhaps 10s. a week. I have been comparing with the Scheveningen tariffs those of two first-class English sea-side hostelries—the Imperial at Torquay and the Royal Bath at Bournemouth—and the figures are by no means in favour of Holland, while there is not a doubt that the visitor will get more for his money at the English hotels. Add to all this that the Dutch hotel-keeper gets all the necessaries of life 20 or 25 per cent. cheaper than his English rivals, and you cannot fairly complain of English prices. No doubt it is possible to live more cheaply in many parts of France, Switzerland, and Germany than in the majority of English and Scotch hotels. But certainly not at fashionable French, Belgian, and Dutch watering-places.

By the way, I heard the other day of a case in which three ladies found themselves charged at a seaside hotel at the rate of sixpence a day each for their bicycles, or 10s. 6d. a week for the three. Possibly some one may write to tell me that this a perfectly fair and reasonable charge. It may, therefore, save trouble if I state at once that I regard this charge as extortion, and that no amount of argument to the contrary is at all likely to change my opinion.

With reference to a letter quoted by my correspondent "Marmaduke" last week, dealing with the affairs of Boodles' Club, I am asked to state that many of the statements of the writer respecting the affairs of the proprietors are incorrect, and that the late Miss Gayner was, under her brother's will, the sole proprietor of the club, her sisters having no interest in it.

A BEAUTIFUL HOTEL AT BOURNEMOUTH.—The "ROYAL BATH." "Hôtel de Luxe of the South." Sea frontage, 1,000 ft.; grounds, 5 acres. Due south. Only Hotel on East Cliff. Moderate fixed tariff.

The confidence with which people come to me for the redress of all kinds of grievances, large and small, is very flattering to a humble journalist, but also somewhat embarrassing. Here, for instance, is a lady at Corsham inviting me, in effect, to get certain slaughterhouses removed from the village street. It must be a disgusting state of things to have streams of blood running across the pavement when slaughtering is going on; and, no doubt, the sickening sights and sounds render these establishments, in their present public position, an intolerable nuisance to all except the small boys, who become demoralised by watching the butchers at their gory work. But what can I do beyond passing on the complaint to the local authorities? If a nuisance exists it is their duty to stop it, and if they won't do their duty the parties aggrieved should take the first opportunity of electing men who will.

An anonymous correspondent writes to me very strongly on the cruelty inflicted on cattle in transit between Tangiers and Gibraltar. He states, among other things, that it is the custom to sling the animals from lighters on to the steamer suspended by their horns, two beasts being slung in this way at a time, so that their horns constantly ram each other as they are lifted. It is not my custom to give publicity to anonymous communications, but as my correspondent supplements his statement by an illustration of the process, he is presumably describing what he has seen; and such an abominably cruel practice most undoubtedly calls for notice.

BICYCLE "SHOP."

(BY ONE WHO IS SICK OF IT.)

However our modes we may mar or may mend,
Of the talking of "shop" there, alas! is no end.
The soldier, the sportsman, are equally prone
To a fault which has now uncontrollable grown;
The artist, the author, the player of golf,
Alike furnish cause to the cynic to scoff;
But of all the annoying and pestilent crop,
The worst is the talker of bicycle "shop!"

On most kinds of "shop" that are rampant to-day
There are limits imposed in a qualified way;
But for bicycle "shop" no restraint can be found,
Like a sea overwhelming it surges around.
All ranks and all stations, both sexes alike,
Can only converse, it would seem, of the "bike;"
'Tis a flux universal which nothing can stop,
This ceaseless outpouring of bicycle "shop."

Whatever you do, go wherever you may,
At the dinner and dance, in the Park, at the play,
At the club, in the train, on the tram, on the 'bus,
The world and his wife but one topic discuss.
Yes, even the weather now takes second place,
One subject makes kin of the whole of our race;
The peer and the peasant, the fool and the fop,
All pour out their quota of bicycle "shop."

Society, turning aside from its scandals,
Is great on the rival attractions of "handles."
Our idle acquaintances, formed into camps,
Are sharply at odds about mud-guards and lamps;
The smartest of dames with excitement o'er-brims
As she prattles of "hubs," and enlarges on "rims;"
The meekest of damsels most naïvely lets drop,
Her mild contribution to bicycle "shop."

Old cronies now join in a rivalry keen
As to which of them boasts of the lightest machine;
Where Fashion its many attractions parades,
The prevalent babble's of "makers" and "grades."
The "masher" the maiden now subtly allures
By hints upon mounting, and "tips" about tours;
'Tis a crutch for the shy, for the bashful a prop,
This terrible talking of bicycle "shop."

To admit that one rides is enough to let loose
A ne'er-ending chorus of queries profuse;
Our opinion of spokes we are asked to assert,
And of what's the best cut for a bicycling skirt.
We are not let alone till diffusely we've dealt
With the hazards of "rat-traps," the merits of "felt;"
Even strangers may down on one heavily drop
With their merciless onslaught of bicycle "shop."

For the state of one's health not a friend now inquires,
The question of questions is "How are your tires?"
The fairest of lasses, in luxury reared,
Impressively queries, "How high are you geared?"
Folks, just introduced, not intending to meddle,
Yet earnestly ask us, "Oh, can you back-pedal?"
Nay, the man in the street, if in passing we stop,
Falls at once to the talking of bicycle "shop."

If a pause from the valse couples manage to snatch,
They converse on the latest and best "puncture patch;"
On the easiest saddle, the right sort of shoes,
And which is the gear-case 'tis safest to use.
And we hear, not without an incredulous smile,
Of wonderful "records" in riding a mile.
But, whatever the item may be that's atop,
It is always connected with bicycle "shop."

Then surely it need not be looked on as strange,
If already we own we are keen for a change;
If we frankly confess that our patience rebels
'Gainst this chatter on toe-clips and pouches and bells;
That a too strong demand on our temper it makes,
This endless discussion on pumps and on brakes;
That, in short, an extinguisher gladly we'd pop
On all who annoy us with bicycle "shop."

We most of us "wheel," and we do not gainsay
The fact that the cycle has come and will stay;
But this but supplies us with one reason more
For denouncing the nuisance we daily deplore.
Let us ride on the cycle as much as we will;
Let us add to our speed, and develop our skill;
But, by all that is sensible, do let us drop
This purposeless talking of bicycle "shop!"

I find that I have to apologise to the poet of the Massachusetts H.A.C., who recently stated in verse that "The thunder of our cannon reverbes along our shore." It has been pointed out to me that the verb to reverbe was used by no less a personage than Shakespeare, and is to be found in "King Lear," Act i., scene i. When I learnt this, I concluded that "reverbe" was one of the good old Elizabethan words which were exported by the Pilgrim Fathers, and been brought back to our shores by their descendants. Webster's Dictionary, however, disposes of this notion. Webster is, I suppose, an authority on American usage, and he pronounces "reverbe" to be "obsolete and rare." However, I cheerfully admit that a nineteenth-century poet has a licence to use words which are obsolete and rare, and really "reverbe" is a more terse and forcible expression than reverberate. I am sorry that, while he was about it, Shakespeare did not give us authority to "repude" and "objurge."

During last year 60,296 "items" were acquired by the Bodleian Library, of which upwards of 40,000 books and pamphlets came in under the Copyright Act. Some exceptionally valuable MSS. were purchased, and the payments in connection with the Library amounted to about £8,500.

The executive and members of the Covent Garden Theatrical Fund are, as I expected they would be, extremely angry that any one should dare to interfere with their comfortable nest egg. Sheltering themselves behind their very convenient little Act of Parliament passed when George III. was king, they proceed to fling stones at their necessitous neighbours. Living themselves on public charity, they indignantly want to know why they should be "robbed" for the benefit of the improvident actors and actresses, who have no right to leave the necessitous children behind them. That is good, is it not? Here is a fund founded to relieve the widows and children of actors trained at one patent theatre—Covent Garden—and when it is known and ascertained that Covent Garden has for years past been closed against actors and actresses, and that the capital, according to Act of Parliament, must fall to the last surviving member of the fund, these dogs in the manger bark out that they are being robbed in order to help the improvident actor.

But the facts of the matter are perfectly clear. The Covent Garden Fund is no doubt a fund established for the relief of indigent persons belonging to the Theatre Royal, Covent Garden, in Tragedy, Comedy, Opera, Drama, Farce, Spectacle, Extravaganza, Burlesque, or other stage play in the English language, who, after a certain number of seasons, shall be deemed to be a performer and shall be qualified to be elected a member of the Society. "No person, not a member of the Society, shall be qualified to participate in any of the benefit therein." Well and good. So says the convenient Act of Parliament, and the members of the Fund have a right to stick to their own as long as they can. But when it is proved that the Fund is a close borough, and that the capital will eventually fall to one lucky individual who outlives his companions, there is no harm in asking for an adjusting Act of Parliament to secure the capital for the widows and children of the whole dramatic profession. I never before heard it was a crime on the part of an actor who dies young to leave behind him penniless children.

So far as my experience guides me, I should say the average actor or actress is the most charitable person in existence. Out of whose pocket came the £2,000 recently collected for the Actors' Orphanage? Why, the bulk of it came, not from the public at all, but from the pockets of actors and actresses. It is said that there are no actors' orphans to be relieved, when, at the moment there are hundreds of applications for a portion of the money already collected, and they cannot all be provided for. It may be robbing Peter to pay Paul when it is asked to make the Covent Garden Fund general, and not particular. But in this case Peter is rich, and Paul is poor. Peter does not want the money, and Paul does. Voilà tout!

Curiously enough, after discussing this question recently, I took up the "Greville Memoirs," and came across this interesting passage making a direct allusion to the Covent Garden Theatrical Fund:—

> After the Old Bailey (where I went to hear the trial of the Hibner women for the murder of a parish apprentice, Francis Colepitts, by savage ill treatment), I went and dined at the Covent Garden Theatrical Fund Dinner!!! The Duke of Clarence could not come, so they put Lord Blessington into the chair, who made an ass of himself. Among other toasts he was to give, "The Memory of the Duke of York," who was founder of the institution. He prefaced this with a speech, but gave "The health, &c.," on which Fawcett, who sat opposite, called out in agony, "The memory, my lord!" He corrected himself, but in a minute after said again, "The Health." "The memory, my lord!" again roared Fawcett. It was supremely ridiculous. Francis Leveson sat on the right, Codrington on the left, and Lawless, the agitator, just opposite. He is a pale, thin, common looking little man, and has not at all the air of a patriot orator and agitator. . . .

This bears date April 13, 1829, still in George III.'s time.

I continue to receive a good deal of correspondence on the subject of lay versus clerical headmasters. One of the most interesting communications that have come to hand is from a headmaster who has had personal experience, as a pupil or master, of four different public schools. With this experience to guide him, this gentleman boldly asserts that the "real work of our public schools" is done, not by the house-masters and form-masters, as a correspondent recently contended in these columns, but by the sixth form. He goes on to say, however, that the sixth form is made by the headmaster, and by nobody else. The following passage from his letter will enlighten many who do not at present fully appreciate the niceties of our public-school system:—

> The sixth form take their tone simply and solely from the headmaster. If he is a strong man, as the present Archdeacon of Manchester was when he was Headmaster of Clifton, the school will run strongly and vigorously. The sixth at Clifton may have been a set of prigs; doubtless we were. I am afraid we regarded the assistant-masters with a tolerant condescension. But we ran that school, and we stood no nonsense. I can swear that during the two years I was in the School House there I never heard a single word of moral filth; and that is due, as I tell you, to the spirit so energetically diffused by Wilson.
> It is only too true that the average public-school headmaster is a fool, but it is not being a parson that makes him one. It is generally due to his having been selected for the billet solely for possessing a brilliant degree, whereas this very fact is almost certain to remove him miles and miles from anything like sympathy with, or the understanding of boys. . . .

This estimate of the average public-school headmaster is one which I have long held, and I am glad to have it confirmed by a public-school headmaster. I remain of opinion, however, that the number of these fools might be considerably reduced, if competition for their billets were perfectly open among all members of the schoolmastering profession. The restriction of headmasterships to clergymen not only narrows down the choice in those cases in which a cleric is insisted upon by the Governing Body, but also for posts which are not thus limited. Clerical headmasters naturally believe that a cleric alone ought to be a headmaster; and they manifest this belief by either refusing to give testimonials to their own lay assistants when competing for headmasterships, or by giving very much more favourable ones to clerical assistants. I hear statements to this effect from all sides; and one master in a public school goes so far as to say that there is not a lay assistant-master in any school governed by a clerical head who has the remotest chance of ever obtaining a headmastership anywhere, for the simple reason that his chief will take good care not to give him a satisfactory testimonial. It is not to be wondered at, that while the majority of the profession, including many of its ablest members, are thus either handicapped or excluded from competition, the average headmaster of a public school should be a fool.

A tutor who recently took up a youngster to Eton and stayed with him three days at one of the leading local hotels, sends me the hotel bill, with some severe remarks on that document. I should be disposed to say myself that a charge of £4. 17s. for exactly three days' accommodation is decidedly stiff, especially seeing that the visitors did not sleep in the hotel, but were "boarded out" in a room in a private house. What, however, I would point out in connection with this bill, is that it is a perfectly easy thing to obtain private lodgings in Eton without employing an hotel-keeper as a middleman; and at those times when Eton hotels are packed to overflowing, I fancy that visitors to the town will find such accommodation at least as comfortable and very much cheaper.

The sort of pleasantry which amuses the members of the Tottenham School Board in their intervals of piling up the rates received vivid exemplification at the final meeting before the recess, when various epithets, of a pronounced uncomplimentary character, were freely bandied about between two of them. "Cur," "cad," and "Hull bully" were some of the expressions which found favour with these popular educators, to whom I would in all humility suggest that the recess could not be more profitably employed than in taking one or two very much-needed lessons in manners.

A monstrous example of clerical intolerance and tyranny—if not, indeed, of something worse—is afforded by the case of Miss Pottle, head mistress of St. Matthew's Church Schools, Ponder's End, Middlesex. It is a case, too, which may be usefully borne in mind when the Government make their next attempt to strengthen the parson's control over the so-called Voluntary schools, which are almost entirely carried on at the expense of the State. Miss Pottle recently applied for a post under the Enfield School Board, whereupon the Rev. Martin Sharpe, Vicar of St. Matthew's, called upon her to tender her resignation. "It is simply a matter of religion," he told her. "I cannot dream of your staying here. After applying for a Board School, you cannot be fit to teach religion in a Church school." Miss Pottle, who had been at St. Matthew's for twelve years, and earned the highest testimonials for her work, refused to resign on any such preposterous ground. The Rev. Prebendary Hodson then waited upon her, and intimated that if she did not tender her resignation, the Vicar would bring a charge of falsifying the school registers against her. She still refused, and after she had been given notice of dismissal, the Government Inspector was called in to investigate the charge as to the registers. He reports that the registers have certainly been altered, but he proceeds:—"I consider these alterations have been made recently to justify a statement against the mistress," and he goes on to give his reasons for coming to this conclusion. By whom, then, were the registers altered, if not by Miss Pottle? This is a matter which ought to be cleared up, and I am glad to learn that the National Union of Teachers is determined that it shall be thoroughly sifted. Meanwhile, as showing the attitude and disposition of the school managers towards Miss Pottle, it may be mentioned that, notwithstanding her acquittal by the Inspector, the charge against her has not been withdrawn, and the notice of dismissal still remains in force.

Much indignation has been excited among the unbeneficed clergy by the singularly unbecoming form in which the Bishops of Gloucester and Bristol and Oxford thought fit to discuss the grievances of curates during the recent session of Convocation. These prelates were so lucky as never to be curates, but that piece of good fortune is very far from being an excuse for their offensive arrogance of demeanour. Bishop Ellicott doubted the "supposed grievances" of curates, being himself "not a man of any grievances at all." Considering that this "Father in God" is in his seventy-eighth year, he was curiously unfortunate in his cool reference to those "elderly persons" who, after a certain age, find considerable difficulty in getting employment. Bishop Stubbs had the effrontery to assert that "the assistant curates show much want of acquaintance with their rights and position. It would be valuable that they should be informed of what they really are." It is revolting to find such an utter want of sympathy displayed by exorbitantly paid dignitaries towards the hard-working and miserably remunerated curate.

Sir Thomas Acland has presented the Rev. C. P. Whitaker, Rector of Highbury and formerly Diocesan Inspector of Schools, to the important living of Broad Clyst, near Exeter, which has become vacant by the resignation of his brother, the Rev. Sub-Dean Acland, who has been vicar since 1845. The living is worth about £550 a year, with residence. The rectory of Highbury (about £350 a year, with residence) has been given by Sir Thomas Acland to the Rev. G. L. Dickinson, who has been curate of Broad Clyst for the last five years.

The late Archdeacon Cooper, who was one of the most popular and most highly esteemed ecclesiastics in the North of England, took high honours at Cambridge, and he was for more than twenty years one of the most active and prominent of the University "dons." He was an intimate and trusted friend of Dr. Whewell, his chief at Trinity College. Archdeacon Cooper left Cambridge when he accepted the college living of Kendal, which he held for thirty-seven years, and he was much beloved and respected by his parishioners of all classes. The Archdeacon was a learned, hospitable, and courteous clergyman of an old-fashioned type, and very charitable.

The following document, sent to me from Switzerland, seems open to a good deal of criticism. In the first place, it looks as if the S.P.G. were allowing themselves to be used as an advertising medium by the proprietor of the hotel in question. In the next place, there are complaints that the church in question has been built on a site where it is of very little use to English visitors to the district, and that a much more suitable site had been placed at the disposal of the S.P.G. Finally, exception may well be taken to the erection of a costly permanent church in a place where worship is only carried on for four months in the year, unless, at any rate, the money for the purpose had been obtained beforehand. To incur a debt for such a church, with the result that appeals of this kind have to be issued to liquidate it, does not seem the right way to go to work. In many cases, foreign hotel keepers provide a room gratis for a Church of England service, and I believe that almost invariably they feed and lodge the Pastor who is sent to perform the service gratis. This they do, on strictly commercial grounds, because many English people only remain over Sundays at places where they can attend the services of their Church. If the proprietor of the Hôtel Axenstein advanced £640 to build a church in connection with his hotel, this is because he hoped to make interest and profit on the investment. There is no more reason why he should be recouped by individual subscriptions than that his guests should subscribe to pay for the building of the hotel:—

SOCIETY FOR THE PROPAGATION OF THE GOSPEL IN FOREIGN PARTS.

THE ENGLISH CHURCH AT AXENSTEIN.

The proprietor of the Hotel Axenstein gave to the S.P.G. the site of the English church, All Saints', Axenstein.

He also—in addition to a liberal contribution in money towards the cost of the erection of the church—advanced sixteen thousand francs (bearing interest) for the remainder of the cost of the church.

For the liquidation of this debt (i.e., £640) an appeal is made to the English visitors. It is only by their gifts that the debt and the interest can be paid, and it is hoped that the response to this appeal may be such that the burden on the chaplaincy for the interest and principal may soon cease.

Subscriptions and donations for the liquidation of the debt &c., &c.

With reference to the appeal to charity by the Vicar of Llanganten, Breconshire, Mr. John Lloyd sends me the following. If his view of the facts is correct, it strengthens my suggestion that the ecclesiastical authorities are the parties most to blame for the Vicar's appeal. It would be interesting to know whether this was what the Bishop had in his mind when he referred to the "intolerable scandal" of such an appeal. It would also be interesting to know what sort of a congregation this vicar has, and what reason there is for him to be occupying his present post at all:—

When I see "vicar" appended to a clergyman's name I always try to find out where the "great tithes" go to. These were in this parish commuted at £148 a year, and the Ecclesiastical Commissioners are entitled to take the whole of them "for the suspended prebend of Llandarog, Llanganten, and Llangynog." Taking one-fourth off for the present low average, that would leave about £110 net, which, added to £49 a year derived from the rent of 60 acres of glebe, ought to make the vicar's income over £150 a year at the present time. Probably the Ecclesiastical Commissioners' keep "the suspended prebend" alive with some part of the £148, and rob the parish for the purpose. If so, the vicar's strongly-worded appeal should be first directed to the Church authorities in Whitehall-place, to whom the parish pay a large tribute. I observe that the present vicar has managed to live somehow at Llanganten since 1877.

When penning the remarks in last week's TRUTH upon Church Bells and the case of the Kilburn Sisters, I had not seen the article upon the subject in the current number of that paper, in which reference was made to the TRUTH inquiry and report. I have since had an opportunity of reading that article, and there are one or two observations which I should certainly like to make upon it. The exigencies of Bank Holiday week, however, prevent my going into this question at any length at the present moment, and I must, therefore, postpone what I have to say until a future occasion.

The Army Manœuvres come round year after year without the slightest attempt being made to reduce the expense thereby entailed upon officers; and every year brings its fresh crop of outcries against this grievance. In part, I believe, this expense might be materially reduced by a more economical scale of living among officers in manœuvre camps; but in a great measure it is due to causes beyond regimental control, and for which the War Office must be held responsible. There can be no question, for instance, that officers ought to be supplied with wooden floors to their tents, but an officer writing to me on the subject complains that these things have to be privately obtained through a contractor. The Government contribution towards mess tents, furniture, and cooking arrangements is also so inadequate as to involve a further heavy expenditure before officers can get the most indispensable conveniences. My correspondent states that during the manœuvres the most ordinary fare cannot be obtained under a charge of 7s. 6d. a day per head, and that when the manœuvres are at any distance from a town, the charge often rises to £1 a head. "It is an acknowledged fact throughout the Army," writes this gentleman, "that a spell of two months at manœuvres costs an officer at least £50 in extra expenses." This state of things is not only unjust in itself, but it all helps towards the undesirable result of excluding all but rich men from commissions in the Army. The officer I have just quoted remarks that the expectations that were formed when purchase was abolished, as to the future in store for men of limited means, have been entirely falsified; and as to the truth of this I suppose there can be no doubt.

On the question of tent-flooring, I hear that in consequence of Militia battalions being sent for summer training to Aldershot this year, the tent-floors were taken from the Regulars for the benefit of the Militiamen. In addition to this, the soldier, when manœuvring, is forbidden to cut a trench round his tent for drainage purposes, and the consequences would have been disastrous in any but a very dry season, such as we have luckily had. Are we really to understand that if one or two extra battalions are sent into camp at Aldershot, there are no tent floors in store for their accommodation?

The arrangement by which Colonel Johnston takes command of the 101st Regimental District in succession to Colonel Barnard, while Colonel Kempster, D.S.O., succeeds to the command of the 1st Munster Fusiliers, is a characteristic piece of War Office jobbery, apparently prompted solely for the benefit of the second of these officers. Colonel Kempster, though a gallant and distinguished officer, has put in an irreducible minimum of service with his regiment, and had the very smallest claim to the command of it. He has served in the Royal Canadians, from which he exchanged, after he had obtained the rank of Captain, into the Munsters. He was with Sir Charles Warren in Bechuanaland; and for nearly ten years past has been serving in the Egyptian Army. While second in command of his own regiment, he was sent to Ashanti on extra-regimental employment, and by rights should then have been removed from the regiment. The majors of the Munsters are all very junior men, and there was no reason to create a vacancy while so many men senior to Colonel Kempster, but less favoured by interest and fortune, are being forced to leave the Service on account of age.

Writing from Colchester about a case in which the junior sergeant of a regiment was promoted over the heads of all those above him, some of them having held the rank for six or seven years, a military correspondent asks whether I will inform him if this is a common occurrence in the Service. Oh, yes! quite common. In this instance it is suggested that the ground for promotion was the athletic prowess of the lucky N.C.O. That, too, is by no means uncommon.

From the last return of crime in the Army it would seem that the percentage of courts-martial in Cavalry regiments ranges between 1·1 per cent. and 12·7, the average being 4·7. The 4th Hussars' percentage is 10·2, or more than double the average. In an article in one of the Service journals the other day occurred the remark: "Generally speaking, the men prove good soldiers if the officers are gentlemen." Very true, very true!

I had a communication the other day from a man who had served in the Chitral Relief Force, had been discharged time-expired, had returned home, and had been in England three months without having received the batta to which all who served in that force are entitled. Is not this a monumental instance of official dilatoriness? The total amount due to this man is about Rs. 24, and for this paltry sum he is still making unavailing applications, some twelve months after the services in respect of which it was awarded were at an end.

Among the correspondence which, owing to the Bank Holiday, I am compelled to defer dealing with this week, are many communications from Army men on the subject of the Commander-in-Chief's remarkable observations on Short Service, in his evidence before the Royal Commission on the Military and Civil Expenditure of India. It is not surprising that these observations have caused much unfavourable comment, and I can assure my various correspondents that what they have to say on the subject will not be lost sight of.

Recently a battalion at Lucknow were lectured on parade on the gross impropriety of failing to salute officers in garrison towns when out walking, and they were told that they ought to have no difficulty in recognising officers. I should greatly like to know from the author of this proposition what are the outward visible signs by which officers in plain clothes are to be distinguished from civilians. One unfortunate Tommy, who writes to me on the subject, tells me that in India the only course for a soldier who is anxious not to omit to salute an officer in the street, is to salute every one he meets. "I defy any one," he says, "to tell an officer from a civilian out here. The civilians put on such a swagger, and imitate the military so, that some of them look more like officers than the officers themselves." Perhaps this is what makes the officers so sensitive on the subject of being saluted.

A very bold innovation has been introduced by Colonel Dooner, commanding the 87th Regimental District, in connection with enlistment into the Militia under his command. Taking advantage of the fact that a man can purchase his discharge from the Militia at the price of £1 at the end of his first seven weeks' service, Colonel Dooner has introduced a system, the effect of which is that these seven weeks are virtually probationary, and at the end of them a man has it in his power to go or remain in the Service, according to the impression he has formed during two months' practical experience of military life. The Colonel invites all his recruits to leave their pay undrawn to the amount of at least 3s. 6d. per week, so that at the end of six weeks they have in their possession the £1 requisite to obtain their discharge, and can leave the Service simply by forfeiting what is due to them; while, on the other hand, a man who elects to stay in the Service draws at the end of his time in pay and bounty something like £1. 15s., and goes home proportionately impressed with the advantages of the military calling. I hear that this system is working uncommonly well, and has increased the number of recruits, as well as the number and spirit of those who ultimately elect to join. It is only natural that these results should follow. Many more men would enlist, were it not that they feel uncertain as to how they will like military life when they come to try it. On the other hand, many enlist thoughtlessly, and regret doing so after a few weeks' service; and it is far better that such men should go at once than remain in a Service which they have no liking for, and to which they are not likely to do credit.

It is a standing mystery in Army circles what becomes of rations, &c., drawn, but not consumed, when a regiment is moving, or a Militia battalion is going home after its training. For instance, on the last day of the training of a certain Welsh battalion, the men were all out of camp before 9 a.m. All they got before they left was a sandwich apiece. They were charged with the usual amount of groceries for that day, and I understand that the full meat rations were also drawn. Circumstances like these are continually being brought under my notice; and in the interests of all parties, I should like to know what becomes of the money, or the money's worth, charged on such occasions.

An artilleryman, complaining the other day of the trumpery little minutiæ which are insisted upon at kit inspection, told me, among other things, that the men had to show with their kit "pipe-clayed pull-throughs." Is it a customary thing to pipe-clay a "pull-through"? I never had occasion to clean a carbine myself, so that I speak with all deference to expert opinion, but I should have thought that a "pull-through" would be much better fitted for its purpose without pipe-clay on it than with. If that is so, there can be no object in requiring the article to be pipe-clayed, unless it be to make work for the men.

In connection with the Compensation Allowance grievance in India, the Times of India recently published a very strong article, calling attention to the case of the servants of the Indian railways. It appears from this that the Directors of some of the guaranteed railways decided, very properly, to make their servants an allowance analogous to the Government Exchange Compensation Allowance. When, however, this matter came before the Government Examiners of Accounts, these functionaries insisted upon setting up the same pettifogging conditions which the Government has adopted in dealing with its own servants. The result is, among other things, that all the absurdities and injustice incurred by the distinction between domiciled and non-domiciled Anglo-Indians have been introduced into the railway service. Surely the Government might have satisfied itself with creating these distinctions among its own servants without interposing between the railway Directors and their employees.

The tissue of absurdities and inconsistencies in which the Indian Government has involved itself by introducing the question of domicile into the Exchange Compensation Regulations is admirably illustrated by the following case. Three brothers, sons of an officer who was formerly in the service of the East India Company, and subsequently of the Crown, are now employed one under the Government of Bombay, another in Burma, and the third in a post directly under the Indian Government. The two first-named have both been allowed exchange compensation by their respective Governments; but the third brother, whose position places him immediately at the mercy of the Financial Department of the Government, has been denied this allowance. There seems to be no doubt that in point of law the third brother, like the other two, has an English domicile. He has not a relative in India except the two brothers above-mentioned, who are officially admitted to be domiciled Englishmen; he intends to return to England on his retirement, and he has just the same occasion to remit money to this country as any other servant of the Government similarly circumstanced. The refusal of the exchange compensation allowance in this case, and in a dozen more like it, is one of the most gross abuses of justice ever perpetrated by a Government upon its servants.

Reference was made in TRUTH a few months back to the fact that the Colonial Secretary had relaxed the Regulations of 1870 respecting the importation of Indian coolies into Trinidad, so as to allow of the importation of 1,500 coolies during the present season, instead of the 151 which would have been the limit had the ordinance been observed. By a recent Port of Spain paper, however, I see that this indulgence has been still further extended, and that a total of 3,000 coolies are now to be imported. This further extension of the limit has, I understand, been granted on a request which was drawn up at a secret meeting of the interested planters, and forwarded to the Colonial Office through the Governor, without the official knowledge of the Legislative Council. It is difficult to understand why, in any case, Mr. Chamberlain should have authorised this enormous increase of the coolie traffic. But his action would be still more difficult to understand, if he knew the circumstances under which the request to him was drawn up. Did he know them?

What a difference there is between paying money to the Inland Revenue Department and getting it out of them! On April 13 a gentleman who had a claim for a refund of something like £18 income tax in respect of life insurance premiums, received the following letter from Somerset House:—

> The Secretary of the Inland Revenue begs to enclose the returned premium receipts, and to state that a money-order for the amount of income tax repayable will be issued and sent as soon as possible.

Note the words "as soon as possible." Up to a week ago the promised money-order had not been sent. The shortest possible time, therefore, that it takes to obtain and send a money-order from Somerset House to an address in the West End is something like ten weeks, and an unknown period beyond. Sucking blood out of a stone is nothing to the process of extracting over-paid income tax from Somerset House.

The lot of an Assistant-County Surveyor in Ireland does not appear to be a happy one. His maximum salary as at present fixed by law is £80 a year, out of which he has to keep a horse and vehicle, and provide all his own travelling expenses, while inspecting from 300 to 500 miles of contract roads each year, superintending new works, and attending at Sessions and Assizes. There is no provision for his superannuation, and promotion through seniority or otherwise is barred for him. Under these circumstances I am not surprised that he wishes me to call attention to his evil plight. Unfortunately nothing but an Act of Parliament will supply a remedy, and this he has sought persistently year by year since 1875 without success. Some one has always blocked the Bill which would relieve him. This represents the present position of affairs, and I would suggest that for once even the exigencies of party politics should not be allowed to perpetuate so long-standing an injustice.

British prudishness is a byword on the Continent, but our German friends do not seem free from blame in this particular. A well-known harp-maker in South Kensington decorates his stationery with a picture of a little Egyptian figure, bearing a harp as constructed in the year 000 B.C. He sends to his German correspondents, for the purpose of facilitating their replies, an addressed envelope bearing this device; but he finds that when the envelope is posted in Germany, the German Post Office return it to the sender, on the ground that it is immoral. The Duke of Norfolk will kindly note this fact. A little of this solicitude for public morals might well be cultivated by our own Post Office.

In this connection I may mention that several ships in the Channel Squadron have just been inundated with copies of a certain obscene quack pamphlet—a most offensive publication, which has been freely circulated by post for years and years past. People, particularly those connected with the Universities and public schools, are incessantly complaining to me about this publication, and hundreds of people must be annoyed and insulted every day by the receipt of the thing. Here is a case in which a Post Office which refused to carry the matter on the ground that it is "immoral" would earn the approval of all.

A tradesman at Newton Abbot sends me a leaflet issued by some degraded creature carrying on business at Plymouth under the name of "Phillips," and styling himself an "Australian herbalist." It appears that this thing has been scattered broadcast by hand in shops where young men and women are employed; and my correspondent expresses a regret that nothing can be done to stop such proceedings. I am glad to inform him that he is mistaken. So far as I can see, the distribution of these circulars comes within the terms of the Indecent Advertisements Act, and anybody who chooses to take the matter up can have this "Phillips" properly punished.

Apropos of what I said last week about a certain class of newspaper advertisements, a gentleman calls my attention to some filthy literature of this kind published in papers avowedly intended for boys. I suggest to him that he should call the attention of the Home Secretary, or some other member of the Government, to these filthy and pernicious productions. It is now a criminal offence to post advertisements of this character in the streets, or to distribute them by hand; yet they may be published with impunity in any newspaper, even a paper intended for the reading of mere children. A more idiotic state of the law could not be imagined, and it is the duty of the Government to see that it is amended.

St. Martin's-le-Grand certainly seems to be in hot water all round just now. On the top of the growing outcry of the English press, the New York Herald of July 21 published an article upon the shortcomings of the American mail service. It appears that from Saturday, June 11, to Saturday, June 18, no English mails were delivered in the United States. Two steamers from English ports arrived during that time, but no letters were carried "except the few specially addressed, which the Post Office authorities are good enough to allow to be put on board the German ships at Southampton"

(I am quoting the New York Herald). It is also mentioned that, while the whole of the letters sent by the American liner St. Paul, which left Southampton on Saturday, June 11, were delivered in New York on the following Saturday, those which left Liverpool by the Umbria were not delivered until two days later, i.e., the Monday week following the date of sailing. After summarising all the shortcomings of the mail service, the New York Herald asks, "Could there be a greater scandal"? If it knew our Post Office better it would admit that there can. The mail service is bad enough, no doubt, but there are many Post Office scandals to beat that.

In respect to what was said in TRUTH the other day about the Portsmouth mail-drivers, I understand that the London drivers get on an average 25s. a week and additional pay for Sunday work and overtime. Their hours average twelve a day, and they have no stable work whatever to do. On the other hand, for their 18s. a week the Portsmouth men are working fourteen and fifteen hours a day, without extra pay for Sundays, and without any proper time for meals, owing to their having to perform all necessary stable work as well as driving. The London men also seem to have substantial advantages as regards uniforms. As I have stated before, the whole system of sub-contracting is bad, and ought to be abolished. But as long as it is maintained, it is at least the duty of the Postmaster-General to see that the men employed by contractors are properly paid, and on one uniform scale. I do not know what the terms of the present contract at Portsmouth may be, but, when the time arrives for renewing it, it will be the duty of the Post Office to prevent a repetition of anything like the treatment of these mail-drivers during the last few months.

The Telegraph Chronicle reports that at Belfast one man has lately been in charge of the instrument room on Saturday nights in place of two, as heretofore. In case of exigency, he is to be assisted by the delivery telegraphist, and a messenger is to be placed in charge of the public counter, including the cash and all telegrams. It is to this cheeseparing, penny-wise sort of policy that the shortcomings of the service are more than anything else due. It will be specially interesting to the Belfast public to know that anyprivate telegrams they may despatch on Saturday night may be studied by the messenger boy who happens to be in charge of the office.

The following circular, addressed by the Local Government Board to the Clerks of the Local Authorities in the East End, indicates a pretty state of things. Here is the Government Department which ought to be taking steps to deliver East London from these perpetually recurring water famines going out of its way to help the Water Company through its difficulties, by putting pressure upon Local Authorities to reduce their consumption for necessary public purposes:—

Local Government Board, Whitehall, S.W.,
July 21, 1896.

SIR,—I am directed by the Local Government Board to state that, as the Authority are no doubt aware, the East London Water Company, in consequence of the long-continued drought, have found it necessary to discontinue the water supply between the hours of 9 p.m. and 6 a.m. The Board have informed the Company that they consider that they should as far as possible discontinue the supply of water for street watering so long as the present drought continues, and the Board trust that the Local Authority will concur in the adoption of this course.—I am, Sir, your obedient servant,

S. B. PROVIS, Assistant Secretary.

Here is another little notice, issued by the Company itself, which ought to help to bring home to West-Enders the state of things that has lately prevailed in the East End:—

Notice is hereby given that, owing to the excessive use of water for garden and similar purposes (not included in "domestic supply"), the Directors have found it necessary to strictly prohibit garden hose, sprinklers, and similar apparatus being so employed in the district of this Company. Arrangements can, however, be made by agreement for service through a meter, where not already existing.

So that, in the whole district supplied by the East London Water Company, no householder may fix any apparatus for watering his garden, unless he is prepared to pay the cost of having a meter erected. What would be said if this were attempted, say, at Hampstead or Putney, or in any other wealthy suburban district where gardens are kept on a large scale? There is no other great city in the world where such an occurrence as the failure of the water supply in the East End would have been allowed to occur for two years in succession; and the only reason why it occurs in London is because Londoners have not the sense and spirit to insist on these great municipal services being taken out of the hands of private corporations and placed under public control. I suppose we shall see a change some day, but it will not occur until London is wiser than to return to Parliament seven Tory members for every Radical.

Even, however, where water is under municipal control, it is necessary that the controlling authority should possess the normal human allowance of brains. This is shown by what has just happened at Enniscorthy. A water famine prevailing there is partly accounted for by the unexampled drought, and partly by the extraordinary action of the Town Commissioners who control the water supply. Enniscorthy, it seems, has two reservoirs from which the inhabitants are supplied with water. In both of them the water had recently fallen to a very low point. Accordingly, the brilliant idea occurred to the Commissioners that the occasion was an opportune one to clean out one of the reservoirs; so, after warning the inhabitants by means of the town-crier, these gentlemen proceeded to cut off the supply and to drain away such water as remained in it. Now the inhabitants are praying, not so much for rain, as for a judgment upon the heads of the men who could perpetrate so ridiculous and extravagant a blunder.

Public bodies must not be so fatuously hasty in initiating legal proceedings, the expenses of which the ratepayers have to defray. At Exmouth Petty Sessions the Budleigh-Salterton Urban Council prosecuted a highly respectable tradesman in that village for an alleged waste of service water. The defendant was fined half-a-crown, but as the magistrates considered that such a trifling case need not have been brought before them they remitted the costs, the result being that the Budleigh-Salterton ratepayers will have to pay £1. 12s. 6d., and they will probably consider that the local authorities would have acted more wisely if they had contented themselves with cautioning the offender in the first instance, instead of rushing headlong into legal proceedings, which have proved profitable only to the attorney employed, who happened to be their own clerk!

In Truth of April 23 reference was made to an inquest on a pauper, who had died at West Ham Workhouse from septic peritonitis and with various bodily injuries, including a fractured jaw, after a struggle with four attendants on returning to the House after a day's leave. The jury returned an incomprehensible verdict, accepting the denials of the officials concerned, in the face of the medical evidence as to the deceased man's injuries and direct evidence given by a pauper inmate as to the violence which had been used by the attendants. In regard to this case, I now hear that another pauper inmate, who was in a position to give important evidence, was officially warned of the consequences of doing so, and it would seem that the mere attempt of this inmate to offer himself as a witness has been followed by unpleasant consequences to him. It is impossible for a private individual, even the Editor of a newspaper, to sift out allegations of this kind as to occurrences which have taken place within the four walls of a workhouse. But I would strongly suggest to the Local Government Board that it is their duty to do so. Has any official inquiry been held since the inquest above mentioned? If not, why not?

What I feel I am justified in describing as the great toffee question has produced a passing breeze at a meeting of the Fylde Board of Guardians. It arose out of a desire of a lady guardian to treat the inmates of the workhouse to seed-loaves and cakes on the occasion of her birthday. A number of the male guardians looked askance at this proposal to provide paupers with cakes, even without ale. One of them feared that the attraction to outsiders to come into the house would, as a consequence, prove irresistible. Then, in course of the debate on the matter, it appeared that some of the lady guardians were in the habit of solacing aged paupers with toffee. The Board straightway resolved that whatever was brought into the workhouse was to be submitted to the master, whereupon the lady guardians retired, declaring that they would "put toffee into the old people's mouths, whatever the Board might say." Toffee for aged paupers is evidently in Bumble's eyes an unheard-of atrocity.

Some valuable new light is thrown upon the petty sessions crime of "sleeping out," by a letter on the subject that I have received from a barrister. This gentleman points out, that under the Act which creates the offence, magistrates have no jurisdiction to inflict a penalty for the bare offence of sleeping out. In order to give them jurisdiction, it must be shown that the culprit, in addition to sleeping out, is guilty of "not having any visible means of subsistence," and "not giving a good account of himself." I take it that any man who is not actuated by criminal intention can "give a good account of himself" within the meaning of the Act, and if in addition to that he has enough coppers in his pocket to buy himself a meal, he is clearly not "without visible means of subsistence."

On this view of the law, you could not have a better example of the truism that in this country there is one law for the rich and another for the poor. So long as a man has money in his pocket he may sleep in the open air during the hot weather to his heart's content; but if his pocket is empty this luxury is denied to him. What nonsense, then, are the arguments with which I have often been favoured about the danger to property from men striking matches while sleeping in sheds or under hay-stacks! It is not a question of a man's having matches in his pockets, but money. If I have sixpence in my pocket I may sleep in any shed or under any rick in the kingdom, enjoy my pipe before "turning in," and strike, if I please, a whole box of matches for that purpose.

There is another interesting point in connection with "sleeping out." Between what hours in the twenty-four does it become a criminal offence to take a snooze in the open air? I am induced to ask this question by a gentleman who suggests that, while no one can have any reasonable ground for objecting to his fellow creatures sleeping about the highways and by-ways at night, there are very substantial objections to their doing so during the day time. My correspondent points specially to the condition of St. James's Park at mid-day, which, he justly observes, resembles a battle-field after a terrible carnage rather than a place of public recreation. I am a Democrat. I like to see the public using the parks for their own convenience and pleasure, so long as they do not interfere with the convenience and pleasure of others. I also quite approve of the custom of taking a siesta in the open air. But it does seem to me a monstrous inconsistency that the London parks, and other open spaces in towns, should be literally black with sleeping forms during the greater part of the day, while a poor homeless wretch who lies down to sleep at night under a hedge in a country lane is haled before the "beaks," and packed off to gaol.

An application has been made to the West Hartlepool magistrates for a licence to sell refreshments on the racecourse during the meeting. Such licences are nearly always granted as a matter of course, but the West Hartlepool magistrates refused it. It seems that of six "justices" who were on the bench, five are teetotallers publicly pledged to suppress the liquor trade, and three of these magistrates attended, although they were not upon the rota for the day.

A little scene which took place at the Aberdare Police-court illustrates one advantage at least of the stipendiary magistrate over the "Great Unpaid." In the absence of the Stipendiary, the Bench was occupied by sundry J.P.s, including a Mr. Thomas and a Mr. Rhys. Mr. Rhys is Chairman of the District Council. Certain charges of wasting water were down for hearing. In one of these cases Mr. Rhys said that he would take no part in the decision, but upon a fine of 10s. and costs being awarded by the Chairman and the other magistrates, Mr. Rhys lost his temper, and commenced to attack the Chairman in the most violent and unseemly manner, asking Mr. Thomas "Why are you sitting in my chair?" and other impertinences of the same kind, the truth being that Mr. Thomas had taken the chair at the request of Mr. Rhys himself. In the end the worthy Rhys called upon Mr. Thomas to "come out of that chair," which the latter at once did, and Mr. Rhys then proceeded to remand the remaining cases for a week, the motive of this step presumably being to obtain a tribunal less inclined to show mercy towards the crime of wasting water. One advantage of a stipendiary magistrate is that he is independent of the local interests and prepossessions which seem to have prompted the unseemly behaviour in this instance, and it is to be hoped that the Aberdare Stipendiary will soon be in his place again.

Mr. Sheil's magisterial eccentricities are notorious, but they have never been illustrated more conspicuously than in a cruelty case last week at the South-Western Police-court. A carman was charged with cruelty to his horse, and a lady gave evidence against the man. After she had stated that she saw the prisoner thumping the animal in the stomach and kicking its shins, the following dialogue ensued:—

Mr. Sheil: Were there any marks of the kicking?
Witness: No.
Mr. Sheil: Oh, it is no use having a woman as witness in this kind of case. What is cruelty to a woman is probably not cruelty at all.

The best comment on this utterance is the magistrate's own decision; for, after putting some more questions to the witness, Mr. Sheil fined the prisoner 10s., thereby distinctly repudiating his own doctrine that a woman's evidence is of no use in a cruelty case. But it is a monstrous thing that a lady, who undertakes the trouble and inconvenience of appearing as a witness in a case of this kind, should also have to submit to be insulted by the Bench.

Sir David Evans last week administered another warning to those citizens who on public grounds presume to criticise the police in the execution of their duty. Mr. R. H. Frost, a City gentleman of irreproachable character, saw a constable larking with some girls about ten o'clock in the evening, and made some observation to him. In the usual course, he was taken into custody, and charged with being drunk and disorderly and obstructing the police. Although he gave his address, he was detained at the station. He asked several times to be taken before a doctor, and offered to pay the expenses, but the request was peremptorily refused, and he was detained till released on bail at five o'clock the next morning. This is bad enough; but the atrocious thing is that on being brought before the magistrate next morning, he was promptly fined 10s. and costs, on the unsupported evidence of the constable, without an inquiry as to his character, and in spite of the allegations he made against the police. It is a monstrous thing that any respectable gentleman should be liable to have a police-court conviction publicly recorded against him under such circumstances; but there is little likelihood that such things will cease to happen until a Metropolitan magistrate has been run in on a trumped-up charge of this kind and kept for a night in the cells as drunk and disorderly.

At Mildenhall, in Suffolk, bills have been posted offering a reward of £10 for evidence leading to the conviction of any keepers who have killed dogs by means of poison. In the meantime, it has been shown that some of the dogs in the neighbourhood have been poisoned through partaking of Battle's Vermin Killer, which was put down by others, not keepers, with a view to destroy rats. This Vermin Killer contained 23 per cent. of strychnine, and ought to be scheduled as a poison. Any one can buy it for 3d., without being called upon to sign when purchasing it. As regards keepers, they ought under no circumstances to be permitted to place poison in woods or coverts, unless surrounded by a wall or a paling, which would prevent all incursions of dogs. If they do, they should be sent to prison—and their masters too, if they knew and winked at what was being done.

A rick-fire at Harberton, in Devonshire, has just given the local police and magisterial authorities an opportunity of displaying their crass incompetence in dealing with juvenile offenders. A child nine years of age had attempted to burn out a wasps' nest in a hedge; the hedge caught fire, and the fire extended to the rick—at least, this is the boy's story, and his own statement was the only evidence against him. Accordingly a warrant was procured, the child was arrested as he was leaving school, and was taken in custody to Totnes, where he was locked up in the cells for nearly twenty-four hours. He was brought before the magistrates on the day following his arrest, and convicted of arson, for which he was sentenced to be birched. The absurdity of employing all the machinery of the law in such a case as this was never more clearly demonstrated. It is merely folly to convict a child of nine for "unlawfully, maliciously, and feloniously" setting fire to the rick, but it is absolute cruelty to drag him away from home and incarcerate him alone in a prison cell.

The two cases from the West Riding Police-court at Pontefract which adorn my Legal Pillory this week afford a striking object-lesson in Justices' justice. If a miner occupies his leisure time and expends his spare energies in knocking over a policeman and jumping upon him, he is let off with the modest penalty of twenty shillings; but if he finds a recreation more to his taste in knocking over a few rabbits, he is straightway committed to gaol for three months. The list below contains other examples of the unbending rigour with which offences against the Game Laws, in common with acts of vagrancy and petty larcenies, are punished; while it will be seen that on the other hand the magistracy are ever lenient towards defendants convicted of cowardly and brutal assaults, or heartless ill-treatment of little children, or gross cruelty to dumb animals:—

West Riding Police-court, Pontefract. Edward Carney, miner, charged with assaulting a policeman. The officer was taking a prisoner to the lock-up when defendant interfered, struck him in the eye with a stick, knocked him down, and jumped on him. Fined 20s. and costs.

Yarmouth Police-court. Before Messrs. R. Martins, J. W. de Caux, W. Barnard, T. Saul, and W. H. Palmer. Jarvis Blois, shoemaker, charged with ill-treating his four children, aged 8, 6, 4, and 2 years. He was tramping the country with them, and the youngsters had walked 72½ miles in six days. Discharged with a severe caution.

Paisley Police-court. Before Bailie Wilson. Thomas M'Phillips pleaded guilty to assaulting a woman by striking her repeatedly on the head and face and kicking her on the body. The couple cohabited and prisoner expected the woman to work to keep him. He thrashed her because she did not give him the whole of a day's earnings. Fined £1.

Paisley Police-court. Before Bailie Fisher. Archie M'Laughlan, charged with cruelty to a horse. The man went into the stable at midnight and severely beat the horse with a rake, a three-pronged fork, and a wooden rack-pin. Fined 21s.

Malton Police-court. John Tasker, charged with cruelty to a young bull. One of the animal's legs had been broken, and defendant was driving the beast along the road on three legs when he was stopped. Fined £1. 5s., including costs.

Burton-on-Trent Police-court. John Radford, convicted on three charges of assault. He went home drunk and severely thrashed his wife. Next he made his way to a recreation ground, and without any provocation "set upon" a boy named Wilkinson, beating him unmercifully and rendering him partially unconscious. Finally he assaulted a policeman. Fined £5. 7s., including costs.

West Riding Police-court, Pontefract. Frank Stubbs, James Spencer, Arthur Child, and Jesse Renshaw, miners, charged with poaching. Three months each.

Yarmouth Police-court. Before the same Bench. Albert Coulsey, charged with absenting himself from the workhouse, without performing his allotted task. He was admitted on the Saturday, and went out on the Monday without giving notice. Twenty-one days' hard labour.

Hawick Sheriff-court. Before Sheriff Substitute Speirs. James Riddle charged under the Poaching Prevention Act with being found in possession of three rabbits and a net. Fined £3.

Chichester Police-court. Before Alderman Caffin and Mr. E. M. Street. Barney Moore, charged with sleeping out in a field. Ten days.

Cupar Sheriff-court. Before Sheriff Henderson. William Smith and Hugh Tinineny, charged with trespassing in pursuit of rabbits at night. Fined £4 each, or thirty days' imprisonment in default.

Bradwardine Police-court, Hay. Before Rev. Henry Drew, Messrs. T. T. Lawden and H. Phillips, Dr. Giles and Dr. Trumper. William Probert and William Kisley, labourers, charged with trespassing in pursuit of game. Probert fined £2. 4s. 4d., and Kisley £2. 14s. 4d.

Devonport Police-court. Before Messrs. G. T. Rolston, H. Williams, and G. Breeze. Mary Townsend, a young married woman, convicted of stealing a basket, value 9d. Twenty-one days.

Spittlegate (Grantham) Police-court. Before Mr. W. Hornsby. John William Collins and Charles Skelly, two youths, charged with sleeping out. Seven days each.

SAVOY HOTEL, Savoy Restaurant, London. Large reception-rooms for fashionable reunions. Orchestra plays daily during dinner and opera supper.

Cerne Abbas Petty Sessions. Before Lord Digby, Messrs. H. H. Palairet, R. E. Saunders, E. Barkworth, G. H. Digby, and Colonel Digby. Vernon Soutt, farm bailiff, charged with cruelty to seventeen pigs by causing them to be improperly conveyed. The pigs, five large ones and twelve small, were all crowded into a waggon 7 ft. 6 in. by 3 ft. 5 in., the small pigs being put on top of the large ones. One of the latter died. Fined 20s. and costs.

Grimsby Police-court. Before the Mayor, Messrs. W. Jackson, E. Bannister, J. M. Dennis, H. Mudd, W. B. Louth, and W. S. Letten. Joseph Edwin Pullen, charged with cruelty to a dog. Because the dog would not follow him, defendant thrashed it and cut its throat in three places. A policeman said the animal was in such a condition that it had to be drowned. Fined 42s. including costs.

Church Stretton Petty Sessions. Before Messrs. J. Hill, W. S. Buddicom, A. Wood Acton, and Lyde Benson. William Bayliss, a gamekeeper, charged with an unprovoked assault upon W. Johnson. Johnson had a black eye, his lip was cut through, a tooth was broken, and he was badly bruised. Fined £1 and 7s. 6d. costs.

Blackburn Police-court. Before Messrs. E. Cooper, R. Leeming, and H. Higson. Wm. Henry Hannon, convicted of assaulting his wife. A police officer said he saw defendant kicking the woman, and he refused to desist when witness spoke to him. Defendant had been many times previously before the Court. Fined 20s. and costs.

Swainsthorpe Petty Sessions. Before Messrs. J. Cairns, M. C. Boileau, J. H. Gurney, G. Taylor, H. P. Green, Sir F. Bateman, Sir C. Harvey, and Rev. C. Fellowes. Walter Douglas and James Alden, charged under the Poaching Prevention Act with being found in possession of four rabbits. Fined £5. 12s. 6d. each, and Douglas committed for six weeks in default of payment.

Wigan County Police-court. Peter Baxter and Michael Knockton, charged with poaching on Lord Gerard's estate. One month each.

Chelmsford County Petty Sessions. Before Mr. T. Kemble and other magistrates. John Edwards, charged with stealing a pair of boots. One month.

Stony Stratford Petty Sessions. Before Mr. A. G. Thorold and Rev. G. E. Willes. Joseph Higgs, apprehended in consequence of his strange behaviour, was charged with disorderly conduct. A doctor said he was shamming. One month in default of payment of £1. 13s. 4d. fine and costs.

Epping Police-court. Before Major Tait, Messrs. W. S. C. Marsh, W. Patchett, W. Smith, and R. Herring. Walter Bass, charged with trespassing in search of game. He had been previously convicted. Fined 40s. and costs.

Langport Police-court. Before Messrs. V. Stuckey, F. W. Pinney, C. L. Eastlake, and E. W. Valentine. Francis Harwood, farm labourer, charged with stealing a gallon of cider, the property of his employer. One month.

An edifying exhibition of Petty Session methods was given at the Weymouth Borough Court the other day. A negro "evangelist" called Higgins was prosecuted by the police for causing an obstruction by preaching on the beach. Higgins is a well-known character in many parts of the country, and seems to have come into collision with the police in Hyde Park, and at Brighton, Hastings, and other places. It is pretty clear that he had committed the alleged offence at Weymouth, and that he had no right to preach on the beach without permission. Instead, however, of contenting themselves with hearing evidence on the charge before them, the Weymouth magistrates deliberately set themselves to hear the evidence of the police as to the various convictions of the prisoner in other places. Their own clerk appears to have pointed out to them the irregularity which they were committing; but he was only rebuked by the Chairman, Sir Richard Howard.

There was a strong popular feeling in favour of Higgins, and as he protested against the irregularity of taking evidence respecting his previous convictions, the crowd in court cheered him again and again. One of the magistrates on the Bench also protested, amid the cheers of the public in court, and the case went on in the most disgraceful uproar and confusion. In the end the prisoner was fined 10s. and costs, which he declined to pay. He resisted the police when they attempted to remove him, and, being a very powerful man, had a rough-and-tumble fight with six constables before he was carried out of court, the people cheering and hooting all the time, and the place being for the time more like a bear-garden than a Court of Justice. Finally, one of the magistrates and one of the witnesses posted themselves at the door as the public departed, and held their hats to make a collection for the prisoner. The requisite amount was speedily obtained, one of the magistrates giving half a sovereign, and the collectors then returned into court, paid the money, and obtained Higgins's release, amid a scene of indescribable tumult and excitement. This scene is the more discreditable to the magistrates who provoked it by their irregular conduct, because the Chairman, Sir Richard Howard, is himself a solicitor, and Town Clerk to the borough. Seeing that the prosecution was undertaken by the police, who are themselves under the control of the Watch Committee of the Town Council, it is not clear what business the Town Clerk had to take the chair at all.

I see that the indefatigable begging-letter writer, Sir Charles Coote, Bart., is still at his old game, and from the old address, "5, Summer Hill-parade, Dublin." He is now supplementing his own appeal with a letter purporting to be written by the Rev. R. P. Carroll, curate of St. Thomas's Church, Dublin, who testifies that he "has been acquainted with Sir Charles Coote for the past couple of years or so," that he "has every reason to believe him (Sir C. Coote) to be an honourable gentleman," and that he "recommends his case very urgently to the kind consideration of any who would be in a position to give him substantial assistance." I do not know who the Rev. R. P. Carroll may be, but he is, at the best, a very foolish person in giving such a testimonial to this shady baronet, on the strength of a two years' casual acquaintanceship. Sir Charles Coote, as I have already explained in TRUTH, has no better claim on the benevolent than any beggar in the street who is reduced to poverty by his own fault. Some people seem to think that, because he is a baronet, he is entitled to alms where an ordinary beggar would certainly not get them, and on this, no doubt, he himself trades. But it is surprising to see from copies of letters which he circulates—among them being communications from Lord Scarsdale, Lord Robartes, Sir Gilbert King, and many others—that so many people who ought to know better still encourage his whining appeals.

Another and far more undeserving mendicant, of whose activity I have just received fresh evidence, is the Reverend Edward Henville, the disreputable Rector of Chipping-Warden, near Banbury. Henville, too, has found a new sponsor in the person of the Rev. Charles Heaven, Vicar of Horley, in the same neighbourhood, to whom he refers for evidence that his case is a deserving one. This Henville, as readers of TRUTH are aware, has long been a scandal to the Church, and a source of continual trouble and annoyance to the Bishops. Anybody who assists to perpetuate such a gross scandal is doing the Church a very bad service; and some explanation seems to be due from the Rev. Charles Heaven as to his position in relation with this man. It is certain that any one who refers to the Bishop of the Diocese will not hear anything that will encourage him to give money to Henville, and it is a strange thing that a neighbouring incumbent, who ought to be familiar with all the facts of the case, should be prepared to give him a recommendation in direct opposition to the opinion of the Bishop.

From a letter sent on to me, I see that the notorious and unprincipled scamp, Ernest Day, of 439, Old Kent-road, has gone into the deepest of deep mourning. This is in pursuance of the fiction that he has recently come into a very valuable family portrait "through the death of a relative." People who fall victims to this swindler really deserve very little sympathy, for, in the first place, it is evident that they do not read TRUTH, and, in the next, Day's communications often carry on their face pretty clear indications of their character. In the letter I have before me it is evident that the date and the name of the lady whose portrait Day seeks to dispose of have been filled up at a different time from that at which the rest of the letter was written, this proving that this letter is really a circular form, which Day keeps by him, and fills up with the necessary particulars as occasion may require.

Since Isaac Gordon, or whatever his name may be, invented the polychromatic circular, the whole herd of usurers are sending out their pernicious effusions got up in this style. Samples of these works of art are sent to me by an hotel proprietor at Eastbourne, where one of them had been addressed to the manager and another to the manageress. Next to the practice, which I commented on last week, of tempting a married woman to obtain a loan without the knowledge of her husband, there can be nothing more pernicious than the offering of these temptations to employees who hold responsible positions, and enjoy comfortable salaries, which ought to prevent them having any legitimate reasons for getting into debt.

The mild Hindoo is going ahead indeed. I have before me a sample of a money-lender's circular, written in the best Baboo English, issued by Messrs. Buldeo Prasad and Balgobind Bajpai, "Bankers," of Allahabad. Messrs. Prasad & Bajpai "beg to notify that they have re-opened a branch of money-lending shop for the facility of family men of middle means, who sometimes are in need of small loans and cannot get from Banks at the time of their need. They have, therefore, to enable the public for the compliance of their need, opened a firm opposite to the Colvin's Dispensary." The sort of "facility of family men of middle means" offered by these two worthies, throws into the shade anything given by the money-lending fraternity at home. Here are the terms exactly as printed in the circular :—

Over and above	Rs. 50	up to	100	Rs. 10	a month.
,, ,,	100	,,	300	Rs. 25	,,
,, ,,	300	,,	500	Rs. 30	,,

Messrs. Prasad & Bajpai remark in regard to this "that the object of the firm by framing these easy terms is to meet the requirements of persons of limited means." The terms are not any too clearly expressed; but, so far as I can make them out, a "family man of middle means" who did business with this firm would speedily come to the end of his resources and find his family in the workhouse.

Some edifying specimens of chartered accountants' certificates were given in the issue of the Accountant for July 18. They should be studied by all—and it is to be feared they are many—who have not yet learned the untrustworthy, and often misleading, character of such documents. The ugly feature of the matter is that there is no room for doubt that in many cases these certificates are intended to mislead. While they state nothing but the truth, they often keep back the whole truth, and they occasionally state even the modicum of truth they convey in such a manner as to prevent the unwary from grasping its real significance. When such things are done in a document designed to bring in cash from the public, or to afford information to shareholders, the chartered accountant who signs the certificate is simply a party to a fraud; and it is high time that the Institute of Chartered Accountants dealt vigorously with this growing scandal.

No small amount of fluttering has been caused in the social dovecotes of Lincoln by the following interesting announcement in a newspaper paragraph concerning the newly-appointed electrical engineer to the Lincoln Town Council :—

> He is about 30 years of age, tall and good-looking, and is the nephew of a lord.

Electrical engineers are fairly plentiful nowadays, but it is not every one who, besides being young, tall, and good-looking, is also the nephew of a lord, and I understand that many worthy people in Lincoln are delighted at the excellent taste and judgment the Corporation have shown in securing an official with such a rare combination of attractive qualities. It is only fair to add, however, that the gentleman in question does not appear to owe his selection in any way to the fact that he is his uncle's nephew; indeed, two municipalities were in eager competition for his services.

An exceedingly pharasaical form of Sabbatarianism has made its appearance in the Lake district. The Furness Railway Company having inaugurated a series of Sunday excursions to Ambleside, the Urban District Council of this eminently respectable abiding-place of lodging-house keepers promptly decided to memorialise it upon the subject. The Council, according to this document, "feel it their duty to strongly deprecate such an innovation—an innovation which, without the excuse of necessity, destroys the quiet of Sunday, and deprives a number of persons of their weekly rest, and which is most distasteful to the majority of the inhabitants, and highly prejudicial to the best interests of the neighbourhood." These people cannot even plead a religious fanaticism as an excuse. Their action is the mere outcome of a priggishness which cannot tolerate the person of an excursionist between the wind and their respectability.

Some comment was made in Truth a few weeks ago upon a speech of Sir Gerard Smith, the Governor of Western Australia, which I think it is my duty to modify on further information as to the facts. The truth seems to be that the speech in question was made to an audience of about twenty people in a tent, on the occasion of an inspection of a vine-growing district by a Committee of the Bureau of Agriculture; and that the report which found its way into one of the local papers, and on which my comment was founded, was chiefly the product of journalistic imagination, and bore no relation whatever to the Governor's remarks. At this distance of time it seems hardly worth while to say more on the subject, or I should be disposed to tender some advice to one of my West Australian contemporaries on the duties of a newspaper in reporting the speeches of public men.

A member of the Anglo-Indian Passengers' League begins a letter to me with the sentence: "Wanted, a member for Anglo-India." He goes on to contend that, while there are plenty of Members of Parliament ready to represent the needs and wishes of the gentle Hindoo, the Anglo-Indian community, apart from its official section, has the greatest difficulty in making its voice heard in the House of Commons. If this be the case, I should be disposed to say that the official voice does its best to make up for the want of vocal power in the rest of the community. However, from what I know of honourable members, I feel sure that it is only necessary for the above want to be made known for it to be at once supplied. If those who need their services go to work in the right way, there is no lack of ambitious private M.P.'s ready to constitute themselves the representatives of any conceivable cause in want of a Parliamentary advocate.

A J.P. for Gloucestershire, who tells me that he is, always has been, and always will be a Radical, assures me that an injustice has been done to Sir William Marling in attributing the ejection of a tenant on Sir William's Woolaston estate to political motives. In proof of this my correspondent appeals to the fact that there are several Radical farmers on the estate, and that one tenant recently opposed Sir William and one of his sons at a Parish Council election, and has never had any cause to regret it. I am bound to say that the original allegation reached me from a source which I had every reason to believe to be trustworthy; but when a Radical writes to such effect as the above, and expresses the opinion that the tenant in question has only himself to thank for his enforced departure, it is clear that the suggestion of political animus cannot be supported. If so, it is unnecessary to inquire further into the reasons for the tenant's departure. They are a private matter between Sir William Marling and the tenant, and not a matter of public interest.

It is a strange thing that in all the tinkering at the Irish Land Laws during the last fifteen years no attempt has been made to deal with the scandal of lawyers' costs. What this amounts to may be judged from the following facts. About 1884 a mortgagee instructed a firm of Dublin solicitors to take steps to sell certain holdings to the tenants, having come to the conclusion that this was the only way of realising anything out of his security. Year after year went by without anything being effected, and the mortgagee then entered into negotiations with the tenants himself, and eventually arranged a sale. The first bill of costs that he received from his solicitors for their share in the negotiations amounted to about £800. The client then had the papers handed over to another firm, upon which the same solicitors sent in another bill for about £88. In all, this transaction has cost the mortgagee between £900 and £1,000, and has taken just ten years to carry out, and for all practical purposes might as well have been conducted by the client himself as by the lawyers. Both in England and Ireland it strikes me that the worst feature in the Land Laws is the land lawyers.

If the recommendation of the Select Committee of the House of Commons appointed to report on the most eligible sites available for the erection of Government offices should be ultimately adopted, the War Office will, after all these years, find itself located opposite the Horse Guards. It is proposed to acquire for this purpose all rights in the property lying between Whitehall on the west, Whitehall-place on the north, Whitehall-court on the east, and Whitehall-yard on the south. Few will probably be found to object to an arrangement which will not only do away with the inconvenient block of private houses at present constituting the office of the War Minister in Pall Mall, but, by bringing the same in close proximity to the Admiralty and India Office, will utilise the vacant site of Carrington House, and prove an important factor in decorating the approach to the Houses of Parliament from the direction of Trafalgar-square.

I see no particular reason why a smoking-room should be provided in the Westminster Palace, to which the members of the House of Commons and of the Lords will both have access. But if the Lords like to provide such a room out of their portion of the Palace there can be no objection. What is really wanted by the M.P.s is a larger smoking-room than they now have. The House is much like a club. Give it half a dozen smoking-rooms and only one will be frequented, and, most unquestionably, the present smoking-room is often overcrowded. Of course, there is the question of space to be considered in providing a large room. It has been suggested that the yard which is surrounded by the cloak corridor, should be covered over. But to this the Whips object, for they fear that if their sheep could slip downstairs on the plea of going to smoke they would slip away home when no longer under the vigilant eye of their shepherds. This might be met by raising the yard, or a portion of the yard, to the level of the first floor, and thus providing a large room. This would not interfere with the light, for the yard is already surrounded on the first floor by a sort of corridor divided into rooms with nothing above it, so that light for these rooms might be obtained by means of skylights. Below, the portion of the yard towards the entrance to the cloak room would remain open and thus ventilation would be secured. The back part of this "cloak" corridor might be lighted by means of electricity, for no one ever goes there except to hang his coat on a hook.

On the whole, I think that I am more interested in the planet Mars than in this planet. We, the creatures of a day, are an insignificant dot in the universe, and I have always wondered what takes place elsewhere. I have therefore read with the greatest interest the outcome of the recent investigations into what goes on in Mars. It would seem that the planet is now in a condition to which the Earth must come. It is struggling against the gradual disappearance of water on its surface and in its atmosphere. There is no weather there, for there is no rain and there are no winds. Dew in winter is deposited on its poles in the form of snow. The rest of the planet consists of deserts with very slight elevations. The inhabitants have met this state of things by a gigantic system of irrigation. What we call canals are irrigated districts about thirty miles wide, with a canal running through them, from which water is distributed. Here and there there are large oases of irrigation, and these oases are connected with each other by means of the canals. When the snows of the poles melt, the melted water is distributed over the planet, and thus crops are produced. The inhabitants store up food and water for that part of the year when there is neither water nor vegetation. So rarefied is the atmosphere, that one of these inhabitants can work at one-twentieth the exertion that it costs us, or, in other words, perform with the same expenditure of strength twenty times the task.

It does seem a cruel thing that what sort of beings the Marsian irrigators may be should never be to us anything beyond a hypothesis. They may have—and they probably have—senses and forms very different to all that we, reasoning by analogy from the creatures on our planet, can imagine. Do they exceed us in intelligence? Have they found means to use the forces of nature in a way not dreamt of by us? There, as here, are there some overburdened with wealth, and others in misery and want? Do they, like us, massacre each other, and deem this the most glorious occupation in which beings endowed with reason can be engaged? Do they have kings, and grovel before them? Do they over-eat and over-drink themselves? Is there the vaguest resemblance in their thoughts and habits to ours?

The Times has distinguished itself since the Transvaal raid took place by the most unblushing advocacy of the raiders, and by equally unblushing denunciation of President Kruger. Who its correspondents in South Africa have been has not been made public, but the information that it received from them has been so faulty that in almost every instance it has been disproved by subsequent information. The paper is still true to its strange loves, and it now states that the gentlemen who have been sent to prison have been "increasingly recognised as free from all taint of sordid or dishonourable motive;" whilst, as it finds that it cannot hinder the inquiry into everything connected with the Company, it asserts that "public opinion demands, and will probably demand with increasing force, that the inquiry now decreed shall have regard much more to Imperial interests and the means of safeguarding them than to any useless stirring up of dying scandals, or any vindictive exposure of mistakes made by men who, after all, have done a great work for the Empire." According to this wondrous organ, "at the Cape public opinion is gradually changing in favour of Mr. Rhodes."

As a matter of fact, the evidence before the jury on the Jameson trial was confined to the legal point whether the defendants had violated the Foreign Enlistment Act, and the question of motive was not considered. This, however, will of course be gone into by the Parliamentary Committee, and the Committee will have to consider whether Mr. Rhodes and Mr. Beit aided and abetted in preparing the raid in order to benefit the Empire, or in order to benefit financially the Company of which they were the chief shareholders. The former may have been the case, but the fact that the Times asserts that it was so does not precisely prove it; nor does the suggestion that there is "no use in stirring up dying scandals" look as though the Times had very great confidence in the ability of its clients to prove their innocence.

As for public opinion, its attitude, I should say, is this: it wants to be put in possession of facts, for it recognises that, for one reason or another, it has not been able to obtain this knowledge from the usual sources of information; and until it has these facts it suspends its judgment. That public opinion in regard to Mr. Rhodes is gradually changing at the Cape would be more correctly stated were it said that the Press there, which is in the hands of Mr. Rhodes, is carrying on a campaign in order to change it. In pleading for "dying scandals" not to be raked up, the Times is indeed pleading for its own relations with the raiders not to be investigated, as an explanation will be needed as to the mode in which it obtained the "women and children" letter that appeared in its columns the day after the raid.

What is the precise legal meaning of "culpable negligence"? As a condition of granting a Charter in South Africa to "our well-beloved" Rhodes and Beit and Maguire, the Queen insisted upon "our well-beloved" Fife, Abercorn, Grey, and Farquhar being made co-owners of the Charter, and being placed on the Board of the Company which was to be the outcome of the Charter. It appears that £61,000 of the Company's money was expended for purposes of revolution in Johannesburg, and that further moneys were spent in expenses connected with the Jameson raid. The London Directors plead that they knew nothing of this until after the raid. Would not this amount to culpable negligence? "We were not," is their defence, "knaves, we were only fools." But what astounding fools! When half the City knew that a raid was about to take place, when the Company's money was being expended, and the Company's forces being collected for the raid, these innocents knew absolutely nothing of what was occurring!

However, the Parliamentary Committee which it is decided to appoint in regard to the Chartered Company will have, by the terms of the reference, the amplest power to go to the bottom of everything connected with the proceedings of the Company in South Africa, whilst the inquiry will also embrace its finance at home. We shall, therefore, get at last to the bed-rock of fact, and be dependent for information neither upon the imaginative efforts of the Rhodesian Press in South Africa, nor upon the communiqués of that exceedingly astute lawyer, Mr. Hawksley, to the Press at home. As all concerned will be allowed to appear by counsel before the Committee, any explanations that any of them may have to submit, in reply to what may seem to be a primâ-facie case against them, will be fairly put forward. All this must be most gratifying to the Company, for no sooner was the news of the raid conveyed to England, than its directors expressed themselves exceedingly anxious that such an investigation should take place. I have done my utmost to urge the legitimate character of this desire, and I trust that the Company will appreciate my disinterested efforts.

Mr. Chamberlain is to be congratulated upon his determination that the investigation shall be a full one; and all the more should he be congratulated, as there can be little doubt that many persons of influence were inclined to burke the inquiry, and thus deprive the Company and those connected with it of all opportunity of publicly showing their innocence of anything more than an excess of patriotism.

I am glad that Dr. Jameson and his brethren in misfortune are to be treated as first-class misdemeanants. I signed with pleasure the petition begging for this mitigation of their sentence. They were condemned under the Foreign Enlistment Act, and consequently—whatever may have been their motives, whether patriotic or selfish—they are imprisoned as political prisoners. Such prisoners are treated in no other country as ordinary delinquents. I was against Irish Nationalists being treated in this fashion, and I am consistent. I trust that the Conservatives who signed the petition will be equally consistent, and, if ever there are again Irishmen condemned to prison for political offences, that they will join in a petition to mitigate the hardship of their imprisonment.

SCRUTATOR.

COMMON SENSE AND COLLECTIVISM.

We have during the last week been privileged to have amongst us an International Socialist Congress. As advocated by many of the delegates to this Congress, Socialism would suppress the capitalist and replace him by the collective action of the State in every phase of existence.

It is not likely that the entire world will be converted to this creed; indeed, the Congress itself is showing that there are insuperable differences of opinion amongst Socialists themselves when they leave theory and come to fact. Let us suppose that these idealists were to apply their scheme to one country — say the British Isles. How would they set about it? The first step would be to clear the ground by confiscating all property belonging to the individual. But, as a matter of fact, a vast amount of property belonging to individuals in the British Isles could not be confiscated. It is in bonds, which have been issued abroad, and the interest on which is paid abroad. These could not be touched. Their owners would betake themselves elsewhere, if called upon to surrender them as a condition of existence here. All this vast capital, with its annual interest, would consequently cease to be expended amongst us. But, apart from this source of taxable revenue, there would be many, by no means capitalists, at home who would not agree to the confiscation of their property. Take the Irish tenants. Would they surrender their tenant right? Take artisans, many of whom have bought their houses. Would they give them up? Many, too, have secured a provision by an investment in Friendly Societies. Would they agree to forego this provision? So again with manufacturers and shopkeepers. They have plant, stock, and working capital. Would they surrender them? What seems to be forgotten is that, in a general confiscation of capital, not only large capitalists would be affected, but many men with small means, who have acquired these means by individual labour and thrift. And yet State Socialism in its full acceptation necessarily involves the collectivism of all property. Even if this clean sweep were made, how would it be possible to prevent future accumulations in the hands of individuals? This could only be done by refusing to recognise any individual rights in property; and does any one suppose that the English, Scotch, and Irish, with their innate and racial views in regard to the incidence of property, would ever consent to this?

But let us assume that these difficulties are got over, and that no individual remained possessed of property. How would the State obtain that amount of capital involved in cost of raw material and wages fund? It could not borrow, for its credit would have disappeared, and all capital that could be withdrawn from the country would have left it. This new difficulty having been overcome, labour would be divided amongst all, the estimate being that each individual would work about two hours per diem, and that for this he would receive a fair living wage. This would cut us out of all the foreign markets by increasing the cost of the manufactured article, as by this reduction of hours, the rate of wages per hour would be quadrupled. For whom, then, should we manufacture? In apportioning the labour to each individual, who, too, would decide in which branch of industry each person would be employed? One branch might be deemed more attractive than another; but it is obvious that in each branch only a certain number could find employment. How, moreover, should we deal with the many who would scamp work, and prefer to live on others rather than to do themselves one honest hour's work? Then comes the difficulty as to who would be superintendents. All would wish to be, for to see that others work is more agreeable than to work. Of course, all who felt that their superior intelligence entitled them to additional profit would betake themselves to countries where this profit could be obtained, whilst others with some love of individuality, and not satisfied to be mere pawns moved by others, would leave the country. It seems, therefore, to me that the practical result of the "reform" would be to leave us without capital, without intelligent workers, and without a market for our goods.

But where the State is everything and the individual nothing, the danger would have to be faced of the entire social fabric being overturned in some revolution against this flat level. Human nature would not be changed. Ambitions would still exist, the desire for individual aggrandisement would not be a thing of the past. The grinding despotism of a theory would soon be replaced by that of a few men, or of one man. Admitting that such a scheme of perfection were possible, the whole world would become a prison house, in which a dreary uniformity would reign. Patriotism and individual aspirations would be merged in a universal collectivism, in which each would fulfil his allotted task, like some little wheel in a machine, contented with the knowledge that he is aiding in moving the machine, like a donkey drawing water, and receiving in return provender and a stable. Can any one conversant with human nature believe that this would last?

Socialism as conceived by its apostles is only one degree more unpractical than Anarchism. Anarchists would do away with all law and all government, on the assumption that, if their scheme were to prevail, all would become so wise and so good that law and government would become unnecessary. For the State to do nothing as the Anarchists suggest, and for it to do everything as the Socialists suggest, are the two extreme poles between which common sense is to be found.

That common-sense tells us that competition must ever exist alike between nations and between individuals of a nation. If neither nation nor individual can be bettered by individual energy, all energy would soon disappear, just as a limb disappears in a species when unused. The entire human race would deteriorate. As theory, Socialism is all very well; but beyond theory it is an absurdity. I once had a public discussion with a well-known Socialist. I imagine that he honestly believed in his theories, but he was like an eel. I never could pin him to anything definite. He always fell back on generalities. When I urged this or that difficulty of detail, he replied that these things concerned others. He seemed to consider that he had performed his mission by elaborating from his moral consciousness a scheme of social regeneration, and that it was for some one else to overcome all difficulties in its path; not realising that nothing is more easy than to invent a plan by which the world might be bettered, and nothing more difficult than to make a practical one, because mankind is what it is, and not what theorists would have it be. How a thing can be done has to be shown, before the thing is worth considering as a practical suggestion. Theorists are often most well-meaning persons, but if the world's progress were left to them, it would very soon stand still. It is not, however, surprising that men to whom life is one long sordid struggle for mere existence should be caught by a creed which would substitute for this struggle a sort of lotus-eating existence, in which the State would take upon itself their well-being, and should not trouble themselves about its feasibility, provided this be asserted sufficiently often, and with a sufficient air of dogmatic conviction.

The harm that is done by the advocacy of unpractical theories of this sort is, that they alienate opinion from that practical socialism which is not only possible but desirable. Although the State cannot do everything, it can care much more than it does for the welfare of all. In many things collectivism is possible. By Trades Unionism workers have collectively benefited without losing their individuality or their independence. There has, too, of late been much sound social legislation, and every day the obligations of the State towards the community are more fully recognised.

Just as the individual should be able to move independently in the orbit of his Union, so should the Union remain independent of external control. Where its functions end, there should those of the State commence. When I hear of any proposal for State interference, I ask myself three questions:—(1) Would it be beneficial to the community? (2) Can the desired end be effected without the action of the State? (3) Can it be effected by the State? If useful, and if only the State can give practical effect to it, then, and then alone, I am for State interference.

The State has a perfect right to regulate the conditions of labour, and to give effect to its regulations by legislative enactment. This in many ways it has already done. It might go a good deal further in this direction. There might be a law limiting the hours of employment in a week. As regards the wage, this, I think, should be left to the various Trades Unions. I have never been able to agree to the view that the State is bound to find employment for all at the current wage, for the very plain reason that this would be impossible. But the State should recognise that it should do something more for starving men than half starve them; it should see to the welfare of children and provide pensions for the aged. If working men would make it their business to look to these and other such matters, at the same time banding together in unions, and still each retaining his individuality, they would do far more to conduce to their well being, than by listening to the frothy oratory of men who dangle before them an Elysium which never can be realised, and by regarding them as social benefactors.

I take it that very few of those who even call themselves Socialists are for the Socialism of the leaders of the International Congress. They are for social legislation, but not for the suppression of all private property, and for the State undertaking to be the one employer of labour, and the one distributor of the results of labour. In no part of Great Britain has this creed many adherents. In not one of our colonies has it taken root. Capital is not the natural opponent of labour, for without capital there would be very little labour. Its distribution, however, may leave much to be desired, and I am all for the public revenue being raised from those who are best able to bear the burden. The best way to do this would, I believe, be largely to increase the death dues. But even here there is a natural limit to what can be done, for if these dues were raised above a certain point, we should have all large capitalists betaking themselves outside of our jurisdiction, with their goods and chattels. The distribution of capital is one thing; but the fact remains that the greater the amount of capital possessed by a nation, the greater is its prosperity, and, in the term capital, credit must be included. The lower the terms of interest on which capital can be obtained, the larger is the share in the results of the union of capital and labour that comes to the latter. That capital for industrial undertakings can now be obtained on far lower terms than a few years ago is due to accumulations having increased, and this must be to the advantage of the workers, for the gross return on what is produced by capital and labour is, and ever will be, dependent, not on the will of the producers, but on skill and energy in the world's markets.

THE GHOST GIVES UP LEIGH SAMPSON.

As might have been expected, the man Leigh (or Levi) Sampson has returned no answer to the invitation addressed to him in TRUTH of July 16. It will be remembered that this was an invitation to Sampson to prove that he can paint a picture, by coming round to TRUTH office and performing the feat before my eyes. I issued this invitation in consequence of its having been represented to me, by people who have known him for years, that Sampson is a fraud and a humbug who has been for years trading on the benevolence or the ignorance of the public, by representing himself as a young artist in difficulties, and by this representation selling, as his own, work which in reality he had paid other men to do for him. I never seriously supposed that artists would have come to me and stated that they had regularly worked for Sampson for years, or that respectable picture-dealers would assert that they had known this man for years as a brother-dealer, unless there was very good ground for these assertions. I thought, however, that Sampson ought to have a chance of showing that he has some right to call himself an artist, before deciding that the account of himself, on which he has been so long trading, is nothing more than a pack of lies. Well, he has had the opportunity, and he has not chosen to avail himself of it; and I have no doubt whatever that those who have worked for him are well within the truth when they state, as they do, that he is quite incapable of producing anything which could be seriously offered for sale as a work of art. The man is clearly an out-and-out cheat and impostor.

He is a clever rascal, however, and the history of his various successful attempts to impose upon people, including my humble self, is decidedly amusing. I have already described how he humbugged me. Let me now give the cases of a few of my fellow-victims. I may say at the outset that my authority for most of the facts is the artist who has played the part of Sampson's "ghost" for many years past, and whom we will call "Mr. F." The first victim on the list is the late Lord Derby. In 1890 Sampson brought to Mr. F. three photographic views of Nice, which he had purchased in London, and gave him an order for three oil paintings 36 inches by 24, to be executed from these photographs. He also commissioned Mr. F. to go down to Holwood, Lord Derby's seat, and make a picture of the house the same size. All these pictures were sold to Lord Derby by Sampson, and Mr. F. received £10 apiece for them. What Lord Derby gave for them, and by what means Sampson obtained the order, I cannot say; but it is a highly significant fact that as early as this Sampson was using the trick, which he has had recourse to again lately, of representing that he was about to go to Australia to take up some appointment there. On the strength of this statement, he obtained from Lord Derby, as chairman of a watch company, an order for a watch; but in this instance the biter himself got bitten, for on presenting the order, which he supposed to be a free one, he found that he had to pay £2. 10s. for the watch. He endeavoured to turn this bad bargain to account by selling the watch to Mr. F., and that is how that gentleman came to know the history of the article.

The next victim is no other than that astute and wide-awake gentleman, Sir Edward Clarke. I congratulate myself on being deceived by Sampson in such distinguished company. In 1891 Sampson happened to be enjoying himself on his ill-gotten gains at Hastings, when he noticed Sir Edward Clarke entering one of the leading hotels. Although on pleasure he was bent, Sampson had a frugal mind. He at once made inquiries at the hotel, and having found that Sir E. Clarke was a frequent visitor at Hastings, and fond of the town, he purchased a photograph and went off to Mr. F. with an order for a water-colour picture of Hastings. This picture he took to Sir Edward Clarke, and ultimately succeeded in disposing of it for £12. £2 out of the £12 he paid to the artist who painted the picture.

About a year later Sampson obtained by some means a commission from Lord Howe to paint his country seat and the church at Penn. He then commissioned Mr. F. to go down to Penn and paint two pictures in oils, for which he paid £10 each. Lord Howe, I believe, paid £45 apiece for the pictures, and wrote a kind letter expressing his satisfaction with the work, and inviting Sampson to come down and have some shooting in the following September.

The next victim is no less a personage than H.R.H. the Duke of Coburg. It seems that Sampson commissioned Mr. F. to go down and make three water-colour paintings of the house and grounds of Eastwell Park, Sampson apparently having himself obtained a commission from Mr. Campbell, then the owner of the property. When the pictures were finished, Mr. Campbell found some slight fault with them, and Sampson took them away to be altered. Instead of altering them, he took them straight to H.R.H. the Duke of Edinburgh, as he then was. He succeeded in getting at the Duke, who was so impressed with the pictures of his late residence that he bought all three of them. As to the exact price paid I am not quite sure, but it seems to have been either £170 for the three pictures, or something more. Having brought off this coup, Sampson went back to Mr. Campbell to tell him that the Duke of Edinburgh had seen the pictures and purchased them. Mr. Campbell, probably not a little impressed by this fact, insisted that he must have three replicas, and Sampson commissioned M. F. to paint them. Mr. Campbell bought these three pictures for £150. Mr. F. got £10 apiece for them. Sampson, therefore, netted upwards of £250 over the Eastwell Park job.

One of the more recent victims is Sir George Newnes. In March, 1895, Sampson commissioned Mr. F. to make a picture of Sir George Newnes's house at Wimbledon. Mr. F. went down and made a sketch, and in due course completed the picture. I may here remark that Mr. F. seems to be a very rapid worker, for he states that he finished the picture the day after he took the sketch. Sampson, according to his own account, then went down to Sir George Newnes, and tried to persuade that gentleman that he had at some previous time given him a commission to paint a picture. Sir George did not remember the circumstance, but ultimately, by throwing in another small picture, Sampson succeeded in persuading him to take the two for 40 gs. In this instance Mr. F. stood out for higher payment, and got one half of this amount out of Sampson.

Another transaction shows the success of Sampson's impudent trick of sending out his pictures "on appro.," with an appeal to sympathy for the necessities of a poor artist. Two Suffolk landscapes, painted by Mr. F., were sent in this way to Major Kitchener, at Cairo. The carriage, as usual, was not paid. Major Kitchener wrote back to say that he did not want the pictures, but that the officers of the mess rather liked them, and had bought them at Sampson's price, £25. He accordingly enclosed a cheque for £23. 18s., after deducting the 22s. which he had had to pay for the carriage of the pictures. On another occasion Sampson was being dunned by a solicitor for the rent of the house he then occupied at Brixton. To this solicitor Sampson wrote a pitiful tale of his having been in a hospital for six months, and being consequently destitute, and at the same time he sent the solicitor a couple of pictures, and begged him to buy them. The tender-hearted solicitor bought the pictures, and sent Sampson a cheque for a balance of £5 after the rent had been paid. The pictures in this instance were not painted by Mr. F., but by another artist, but Mr. F. gives the story as told by Sampson himself. It seems that one day when Mr. F. was in Sampson's company in London, this very same solicitor appeared upon the scene. Sampson beat a hasty retreat, and subsequently told Mr. F. this story, in explanation of his desire to avoid the solicitor.

It may be remembered that Leigh Sampson first came prominently before the public in connection with the betrothal of the late Duke of Clarence. He took advantage of the public interest in that occurrence to send out a fancy picture in black and white of the young Prince making his proposal; and loud outcries were made by people in various parts of the country, who found themselves called upon to pay the carriage of this picture, and to pack up and return it, if they were not disposed to patronise Mr. Leigh Sampson. It would seem that this is only one example of Sampson's adroitness in utilising passing events for his own business purposes. On the death of the late Mr. Matthew Arnold, Sampson sent down Mr. F. to make him no less than six drawings of Laneham Church, where Matthew Arnold is buried. Within about a week of the funeral Sampson succeeded in disposing of the whole of these six pictures among Mr. Arnold's friends and relatives, at various prices, ranging from twelve to fifteen guineas. Mr. F.'s price for the drawings was £2 apiece.

In order to bring the record up to date, here is a delicious letter written by Sampson to a gentleman a few weeks ago in the character of "Donald Sampson." It may be remembered that his latest dodge is to approach Welsh patrons under the name of "Lloyd Sampson," and Scotchmen under the name of "Donald," and I take it that his more familiar name of "Leigh" has only been assumed for the benefit of those Englishmen who might have a prejudice against the name of Levi, which is, I believe, the only name that Sampson has any right to be known by. The gentleman to whom this letter was written had been moved by Sampson's appeal to pay him £6 for a picture which he had sent "on appro." Before responding to the appeal, the gentleman invited Sampson to refer him to any Scotchman who knew his circumstances. Sampson refused to give a reference, on the lofty ground that he was not asking for charity, and suggested, instead, that the purchaser, if he entertained any doubt that he was getting value for his money, should take the opinion of an expert upon it. This the gentleman has since done, and the valuer prices the picture at £3—exactly half what Sampson got for it. This letter is written by the ingenuous "Donald" in forwarding his receipt for the money:—

May 7, 1896.
28, Glebe-road, Bromley Heath.

My Dear Sir,—I am very grateful for your kindness, and in thanking you for the cheque, beg to apologise for trouble occasioned.

I am quite sure, Dear Sir, if you ever wish to realise upon the drawing it will be found to fetch quite, if not more than, the £5. 10s. I asked you.

Nay—if by God's help and hard work I make a name, it may fetch ten times the sum, and this is one of the most disgraceful traits of the artistic luck.

A man grows his hair, and paints hideous monstrosities. A hundred idiotic journalists rave, a thousand dealers rush to buy, and the public, which knows more of kail soup than "poetic" art, are also all eager to purchase—and the man's fame is won.

It is harder for the painter with a conscience, and although you may think I am trying to deceive you, Sir, yet nevertheless I have somewhere about me the remnants of such an article, bequeathed to me by my rude but sturdy Scottish forbears.

Of all the successful rogues there is no rogue like the fashionable one, and if my hair would but grow long enough, I could be a great man to-morrow, but like the convicts I must e'en be short cropped and honest—and yet, Dear Sir, always your grateful and obedient servant,

Donald Sampson.

Whatever may be thought of Sampson's power with the brush or pencil, there can be no question as to his ability with the pen, and I almost look upon him as a good journalist spoilt. Nothing written by him that I have yet come across is finer in its way than this letter. It was a little indiscreet of Sampson perhaps to introduce the allusion to the convict and his crop; but it may be evidence that he has, as he declares, the remnants of a conscience "somewhere about him." At any rate, it shows that his thoughts took a very appropriate direction as he penned this tissue of impudent humbug. The short crop may come yet.

These are only samples from a very large mass of anecdotes illustrative of Sampson's modus operandi. Without prolonging the list, they will be sufficient to show the kind of trade which this man has been carrying on for the last six years. As regards Mr. F.'s share in the transactions, it is not necessary for me to say much. He does not appear, so far as I can see, to be at all proud of them; but he pleads that an artist who sells pictures to a dealer is in no way responsible for the way in which the dealer does his business, and that, in the present state of art in this country, an artist is too much at the mercy of dealers to be able to quarrel with his bread and butter. The person, however, with whom the public are concerned is, not the struggling artist whose necessities compelled him to deal with Sampson, but the dealer himself, who has assumed the character of the struggling artist for the purpose of imposing on the public. This man seems to be one of the cleverest and most unscrupulous swindlers whom it has ever been my lot to introduce to the public notice. The whole pretence under which he has traded is a fraud. By means of various false representations he has palmed off at handsome prices as his own laborious work slight sketches which another man has dashed off for him in a few hours at express speed, and which, from the manner of their production, cannot possibly be worth, in most cases, more than a small fraction of the money paid for them. Finally, he has not hesitated to cheat the very men on whose work he has been living, paying them in cheques which have been dishonoured, and bills which he has failed to meet. At the present moment he is badly wanted by the holders of one dishonoured bill, and has avoided the service of the writ, which has been taken out against him, by departing from his last abode and leaving no address. If any of the numerous gentlemen who have been imposed upon by him would set the law in motion against him, they would be doing a public service. But whether that happens or not, I trust that the account which I have now given will put a stop to his operations in the future.

SOCIALISM, CIGARETTES, AND LIFEBOATS.

In the course of the comments that have appeared in TRUTH upon the management of the National Lifeboat Institution, reference has more than once been made to the fact that those who have the audacity to criticise this immaculate concern are invariably answered by personalities or misrepresentation. A fresh instance of this has just been furnished in the columns of the Yorkshire Post, which on July 27 devoted a lengthy article to the recent discussion in TRUTH on the question of the payment of lifeboat men for the salvage of property. This article is of considerable interest, not so much on account of the intrinsic importance of the opinions of the Yorkshire Post, as because the Editor of that journal is closely identified with the present management of the Institution, and has taken a prominent personal part in the controversy that has arisen in the North of England over the transference of the headquarters of the Lifeboat Saturday movement to London. If I understand the position aright, the Editor of the Yorkshire Post has succeeded to the position from which Mr. Macara, of Manchester, was recently ousted, and in that capacity he has been personally concerned in fixing Mr. Macara, rather than the present Executive, with the responsibility for the comparative failure of the Lifeboat Saturday Collection in 1895. The utterances, therefore, of his paper have a certain official character about them which entitles them to more notice than they might otherwise receive.

The principal points in the Yorkshire Post's rejoinder seem to be these:—That I am a "Socialistic philosopher;" that I am a "tool in the hands of the Secretary of Lloyd's;" that I am "a journalistic Don Quixote;" that I have entered upon "a campaign of calumny against the lifeboat crews;" that I smoke cigarettes; and that I grudge a lifeboat hero a remuneration which would not keep me in cigarettes for a month. This will show the style of controversy by which the present position and arrangements of the National Lifeboat Institution are defended. As regards my being a "Socialistic philosopher," Mr. Palmer would do well to tell that to the—Socialists. As regards my being "a tool in the hands of the Secretary of Lloyd's," the fact is that I happened to hear of the controversy between Lloyd's and the Lifeboat Institution on the question of salvage, and that I took the liberty of considering that the controversy turned on certain facts of great public importance, and gave them publicity accordingly. With regard to my cigarettes and the remuneration of the lifeboat men, the truth simply is that I have taken up the ground that lifeboat men ought to be properly and adequately paid for all the services they perform, and not left to make anything they can for themselves out of the dangers and difficulties of ships in distress by the use of the National Institution's boats and appliances. A grosser misrepresentation was never used for controversial purposes than Mr. Palmer's suggestion that I have calumniated the lifeboat crews. "To the Editor of TRUTH," says this gentleman, "belongs the distinction of having struck at the Institution by defaming the crews;" and he goes on to quote a passage in which I said that "the lifeboat heroism of which we hear so much rests exclusively upon a cash basis, and if the heroes are not paid their price the heroes will not be forthcoming." When Mr. Palmer quoted these words from TRUTH, he knew very well, for he must have had the article before him, that they were only a fair and literal inference from the allegation of the Secretary of the Lifeboat Institution in the letter which immediately preceded them. In that letter the Secretary distinctly stated that if the present salvage arrangements were interfered with, "the men on some parts of the coast would refuse to man the lifeboats." That statement justifies my words up to the hilt, and, if there is any calumny in the case, the men have been calumniated by the Secretary of the Institution, and by nobody else. Is this statement of Mr. Dibdin's true, or is it not? I would advise Mr. Palmer to settle that question with Mr. Dibdin before he informs his readers that the lifeboat crews have been calumniated by the Editor of TRUTH. No less unwarrantable is the suggestion that I object to a lifeboat man earning in a year as much as would keep me in cigarettes for a month. In my first article on this subject I was careful to say that "the labourer is worthy of his hire, and if the calling is an exceptionally dangerous one the hire must be in proportion." To this I added that salvage services to property at sea must be paid for by shipowners on the legal scale by whomsoever they are rendered. In using such language I thought that I had sufficiently guarded myself against even the possibility of being represented as one who expects lifeboat men to risk their lives and render invaluable services without adequate reward. But the truth would seem to be that in dealing with this Lifeboat Institution and its Press apologists, it is impossible by any means to guard against having one's words garbled and one's argument misrepresented.

PRINCE OF WALES HOTEL, HARROGATE.—Finest position, facing the Stray. Redecorated and sumptuously refurnished. New management. Excellent stabling. Electric light throughout.

One question and one only, is raised by the recent articles in TRUTH on this matter of property salvage, viz., whether it is a desirable arrangement that men should be induced to "volunteer" to save life by the prospect of being able to earn a big sum of money for themselves now and then by saving property. That question the Editor of the Yorkshire Post does not attempt to deal with, and he shows his inability to deal with it by trailing a red-herring across the scent, and fixing upon me contentions which I have never raised. Mr. Dibdin, the Secretary of the Institution, was at any rate more honest. Without entering into the question whether the present arrangement is desirable, the Secretary boldly contended that it is the only one possible, and that if you do not allow the men property-salvage you will not get them to undertake life-salvage. In my humble judgment, this contention, even if well-founded, is a confession of failure on the part of the Institution. As pointed out in my first article—though neither Mr. Dibdin nor Mr. Palmer has thought it prudent to notice the argument—the saving of life and property from the perils of the sea is precisely analogous to the saving of life and property from fire on land; and there is no reason why men should not be found to man a lifeboat on the same terms as they can be found to man a fire-engine. There are as many heroes in the fire brigades as there are in the lifeboat service, and they are obtained without offering them prizes for property-salvage. This salvage-prize system is, in my humble judgment, unfair to the men as a class, exposes them to most undesirable temptations, and is by no means to the interest of shipowners. I may be (unconsciously) a Socialist philosopher, and I may be a cigarette-smoker, but my impression is that these views have nothing to do with either Socialism or cigarettes, and that when the facts are clearly understood similar views to mine will be held by many who regard both cigarettes and Socialism with aversion. In that belief I have done, and shall continue to do, my best to make the facts known.

NOTES FROM PARIS.

HIGH LIFE ABOVE STAIRS.

I WAS visiting, the week of the Royal wedding, a rich and invalided English lady. A hired companion was reading to her the names of the foreign Royalties and their attendants, who were guests at Buckingham Palace and Marlborough House. I begged of the reader not to stop on my account. When she had done, the invalided lady, who prides herself on being a true Englishwoman, said, "The names of those ladies and gentlemen-in-waiting are so euphonious that it really gives me pleasure to hear them. They strike the ear agreeably and set my fancy going. It is quite amusing to evoke in imagination beings of high birth and situation, whose appearance answers to the names." Poor lady, I thought—is that all you know of Courts, even although you are a brewer's widow? I had not the cruelty to attempt to rid her of her harmless illusions. But I could have repeated a conversation I had just had with a maid-of-honour to a northern Queen, which would have set all her fancies flying. The maid-of-honour is wealthy in her ownright, has a time-out-of-mind pedigree, and is daughter of an eminent statesman. Not satisfied with these advantages, she thought how nice it would be to enter not merely the charmed circle of the Court, but the impenetralia (to the ordinary mortals) of the Royal Family. The Queen to whom she owed social allegiance, learning of her wish or weakness, deigned to gratify it.

Royalty would take it ill indeed if weariness of the place led to retirement. The unfortunate maid-of-honour's waits last for nine months, a good many of which are spent moving about from one German spring to another. She is given £80 a year, out of which she has to keep her maid. This keep includes the price of demi-pension in the Palace, and wages. Though the Queen leads, for her station, a quiet life, there are a good many State pageants and public drives in open carriages. This involves a good deal of expensive dressing. Etiquette does not ordain that her Majesty should be consulted about the toilettes, but les convenances do. The maid-of-honour should be handsomely, but not too handsomely, dressed. Her belongings should be subordinate to that of her Royal mistress. Her unvarying manner should be one of even cheerfulness. A betrayal of tedium would be thought bad form. Nervous headaches must be concealed. One does not speak until spoken to. The subjects of conversation are limited, because so many subjects would be unsafe if repeated. Thus that kind of scandal which goes in at one ear and out at the other is tabooed. But serious fault may be found if leading questions are asked. Young members of the Royal Family are held in by staid attendants, though dying to vent the animal spirits natural to their age. They sometimes, bursting out, shake with laughter at the slightest provocation, and sometimes at no provocation. Visits of other Royalties delight them, for these guests can be as jolly as they please and start subjects of conversation. A Prince of European repute for his indefatigability in fighting against the tedium of Court life, is nicknamed by his Royal nephews and nieces "Uncle What-next." The reason is that when one form of amusement is exhausted at a house where he is a guest, he is sure to ask "What next? What next?" The fair Princess his wife can play for a whole evening with a toy puzzle, and with non-Royal companions thinks this the safest pastime. But with kindred Royalties she throws off all restraint and fait chanter le piano, throwing into the instrument all the feeling she has had to keep to herself, unless in her Sunday visits to the kennel. There is scarcely a Royal personage in Europe who does not doat on dogs. They can be themselves with their dogs, and familiar without fear of breeding contempt.

As to the "good" that can be done at Courts, the disappointed maid-of-honour says it is as mechanical and conventional as everything else. She gives the fullest credit for good intentions. But the desk of the King's or Queen's Secretary is like the Pool of Siloam before the angel touched it. All the ills to which flesh is liable are represented there. In sad letters, some true and some false, morbid and vain persons delight to reveal their uneasy consciousness to Heads of States and their consorts. This mania is worse in Protestant than in Catholic countries. In the latter, praying before Calvaries, making stations of the Cross in churches, going on pilgrimages, and confiding to spiritual directors, serve to draw the morbidness away from the Crowned Head. It is impossible to waste-paper-basket all the appeals for help and recognition of unsuccessful talent. When there is a letter showing the sense of a permanent grievance it is sent to the police, and precautions to protect the Royal person are multiplied.

The pests of the small Courts are the importance attached to etiquette, and the thin-skinnedness and jealousy of the courtiers. Great pests of all Courts, but chiefly of the greater, are the hosts of fussy people, humbugs of all kinds, and projectors who want to secure Royal patronage as a means to advertisement. They are much more likely to get it than the deserving, because their instinct tells them how to make their approach. Queens are now pestered all over Europe with individuals who imagine money is to be made in getting up unions to secure artistic and literary employment for women. The poor weak things would go to the wall if they were not brought into droves. The larger the drove the greater the number of subscriptions, and the better for the drover. The Empress Frederick is ready to help feminine unions, but for handicrafts requiring trained skill and talent, and not to get poor scribbling or painting shot into the market. The Queens of Sweden and of Denmark are of the same mind. But the Queen of Sweden likes to patronise authoresses on the side of religion and good morals. The Empress of Russia feels her way. My maid-of-honour tells me that the Prince of Wales's daughters are credited in northern Courts with shrewdness and insight into the motives of fussy philanthropists.

The most pleasant Court for maids-of-honour is that of St. Petersburg. The Countess G. was there on a visit, and wondered whether there were limits to the liberties of the courtiers. One sex is as free as the other. The ladies smoke, skate, dance, take sentimental drives in the long day-like summer nights, flirt with grand dukes, or with no matter whom, throw themselves into love, diplomatic, palace, and even political intrigues. The latter may lead to Siberia. But the gambling spirit is strong in them: danger gives zest to enterprise, and forbidden fruit is sweetest.

The late M. Spuller was in many respects an exemplary statesman. He showed openly that wealth and chic were not needed to command respect. The honest, excellent, plodding Spuller lived, when out of office, on a fifth floor in the unfashionable Rue Favart. His household consisted of an elderly bonne—his laundress when he was young and poor. He often saved candle-light by writing at a table in the Café Restaurant of the Grand U. There he had his lunch. He dined out too often for his health not to suffer. There is no surer slow poisoner than the chef who furnishes dinners at from twenty francs a head to private houses on company days. Spuller had one great defect. He did not see that courage is the whole battle. He was apt to despair, and to make up his mind to be a martyr. In the early and difficult years of the Republic, he used to write disheartening letters of endless length to Gambetta, who spoke of them as hannetonage allemande. Spuller could be a bore. He was a heavy, diffuse writer, but sound, solid, and well informed. I never knew him, when Minister of Public Instruction, to pay attention to any songstress or danseuse. The friends he then made among high members of his staff led to his books selling well later. They were ordered in thousands to serve as prizes in Government schools. The State might have gone farther and fared worse in search of Republican literature. Spuller's admiration of and friendship for the late Lord Lytton were due probably to that law in virtue of which we are apt to like most those who resemble us least. He kept in a special portfolio a letter from Lord Lytton expressing his deep sorrow at Spuller having to retire from the Ministry of Foreign Affairs. "I regard that letter," he said to me, "comme un titre." Spuller was a bulky person until he lost his health, when he became a skeleton covered by a yellow skin a world too wide for his bones. He had a suspicious-looking eye. The expression, as he seemed to scan one's face, was deceptive. It was inherited from generations of forefathers whose trade was to fell cattle. They looked the ox well in the eyes before smiting its forehead.

LETTER FROM THE LINKMAN.

THE school of Dr. Fashion, dear Lady Betty, has broken up for the holidays.

During the last term an incident occurred which created much excitement in the school and attracted considerable attention outside of it. Young Jameson with several companions went out of bounds and broke into the orchard of Farmer Kruger. The farmer, having been informed that they were trespassing, hurried to the orchard with several of his men, and, upon their arrival, Jameson and his followers threw stones. The boys were, however, captured, and Farmer Kruger, acting with much self-restraint, delivered them over to the school authorities to be punished according to the regulations of that establishment.

From the first Dr. Fashion has regarded the affair as not being so serious as some consider it to be, and there are those who think that as most of the boys are well connected, and their relations have influence and money, he has not punished them so severely as he might have done had they been of less importance. Then, in talking the matter over, Dr. Fashion openly declared that to try to steal fruit from the neighbours showed that the boys possessed the fine British spirit, and therefore an offence of this kind should not be punished very severely. Besides, Farmer Kruger has never shown that he is well-disposed towards the school. It has also been asserted that Jameson and his companions had been ordered to steal the fruit by two boys who were bigger than they are—to wit, Cecil Rhodes, who holds a position of trust in the school, and his particular friend, Beit, the son of a very rich German financier. It is obvious, however, that if Jameson and his followers had succeeded in stealing the fruit they would have kept some of the apples for themselves.

However, the authorities thoroughly investigated the matter and punished the boys, and Dr. Fashion has modified the punishment to suit his own views.

But the Board School children in the district assert that if they had done the same things that Jameson and his companions did they would have been treated as common thieves and perhaps even as murderers. That young Jameson and his followers are well educated, have been brought up in comparative luxury, and have other advantages, they argue, should have made their offence more serious than had it been committed by ill-bred, half-educated lads to whom fruit is a delicacy which they could not hope to obtain unless they stole it. Moreover, though it is true that a child who has been brought up in the enjoyment of every comfort is more sensitive than is one who has been brought up roughly, the former has not the temptations that the latter has, and has far better means of knowing what is right and what is wrong. Therefore, though the one may feel the punishment more, the seriousness of the offence which he commits is considerably greater.

Breaking into orchards, trying to steal apples, and then fighting for liberty are acts which the Board School children naturally approve of, and they look upon those who do these things as heroes. What annoys them in this particular instance is that Jameson and his companions tried to excuse themselves by saying that they went into the orchard not to steal the apples belonging to Farmer Kruger, but because they heard some little girls crying in it, and they wished to rescue them from whatever danger they were in. This pretence has been proved to be wholly untrue, and the Board School children think that it was therefore unworthy of British boys to try to shelter themselves in that way from the consequences of their conduct.

However, Dr. Fashion, it is well known, is a great respecter of persons. It is the sons of the rich and of those who have position who fill his school, whilst those of the poor and of the labouring class—or of the belabouring class, as some call it—he would not have there, however much they might strive to be admitted.

But it is a bad precedent to set up. The Board School children with this example before them will no longer believe that attempted theft and taking life are such terrible crimes as the clergymen of the district are always telling them that they are. Many of them will now maintain that the gravity of these acts depends considerably upon where they are committed and upon who commits them. As there are about a thousand common boys to every one well-bred boy, if any large quantity of the former become convinced of this, life and property throughout the district will be in serious danger.

* * * * *

Another point in this case deserves to be considered. It is supposed that young Jameson and his companions were ordered to break into the orchard by the two bigger boys, Cecil Rhodes and Beit, and it is assumed that for this reason they are not being punished so severely as they would have been had they committed the offence upon their own account. When, however, those who are opposed to the views of Dr. Fashion in this matter urge that Rhodes and Beit should be punished, the worthy doctor objects that it would be very difficult to prove that they had really given the order. But if there is proof enough of it for young Jameson and the others to have their punishments considerably modified, there must necessarily be sufficient proof to establish the guilt of Rhodes and Beit.

The following extract from "Sketches," by "Mark Twain," may be appropriately quoted here:—

"There are some natures which never grow large enough to speak out, and say a bad act is a bad act, until they have ascertained the nationality or the politics of the man who did it. And they are not really scarce, either. Cain is branded as a murderer so heartily and unanimously in America only because he was never an American citizen, and was neither a Democrat nor a Republican. The Fiji Islander's abuse of Cain ceased very suddenly when the white man casually mentioned that Cain was a Fiji Islander.

"The next remark of the savage, after an awkward pause was, 'Well, what did Abel come fooling around there for?'"

Another observation to which attention may be recalled in connection with the recent proceedings occurs in a letter written by Lord Chesterfield to his son, dated New Year's Day, 1753:—

"There is a strange but never-failing relation between honest madmen and skilful knaves; and whenever one meets with collected numbers of the former, one may be very sure that they are secretly directed by the latter."

An especially curious accident occurred to a cyclist close to Wilton-place last week. He was riding an old-fashioned cycle with one very high wheel in front and one very small wheel at the back. As he was coming down the hill from Hyde Park Corner there was a victoria in front of him. Upon reaching Wilton-place a policeman suddenly stopped the traffic, and as there was no other course open to the cyclist he was compelled to run his machine into the back of the carriage. In an instant he was shot over the hood, and clutching at whatever he could reach to break his fall, he found himself the next moment with his arms round the neck of the lady who was in the victoria, and both he and her struggling together on the floor of the carriage. It would be difficult to describe the astonishment of the good woman, who, from an attitude of dignity, thus unexpectedly and suddenly found herself scrambling with a stranger upon the floor of her own victoria. The accident was witnessed by several people, and it must be admitted that much amusement was caused by it as soon as it was ascertained that neither the man nor the woman had suffered any injury.

The Guards' Club is to undergo this month its biennial process of redecoration. During the three weeks that the members will be unable to use their club-house they will receive the hospitality of the New Club in Grafton-street, as they did in 1894. The prosperity and the popularity that have attended the New Club prove that the estimate which was made of that institution in these columns from the commencement of its career was not over-rated. As the New Club is managed upon right principles, and complies with the altered requirements of the present generation, it is bound to prosper, even though upon every side older and more pretentious institutions of the kind are tottering.

The proprietors of the Piccadilly Club have made another departure in the right direction, which in time will have to be adopted by every other club. There has existed until now a hard-and-fast rule that club subscriptions must be paid upon the first of every year. This is inconvenient in many ways. To begin with, if a candidate is elected in July, after being a member for half a year, he is called upon to pay another full subscription. That is unjust. Again, the New Year is the time when most people are compelled to make payments in many directions. The new regulation framed by the proprietors of the Piccadilly Club and passed by the Committee, provides that "The subscriptions of all members elected after August 1, 1896, become due on the anniversary of their election." By this means every candidate elected obtains his full year in return for his first subscription. As regards the management of the club, this rule will do away with the overcrowding of work at the end of the year when the Secretary has to send out a large number of reminders to the members, and as to answer many letters dealing with the matter. The reminders will now be sent out gradually, and will almost imperceptibly increase the daily duties of the Secretary and of those who work in his office. If this system is found to work admirably in insurance offices, turely it must succeed also in clubs. How long will it be, however, before the committees of the old-fashioned clubs will condescend to learn the lesson?—Believe me to be very truly yours, MARMADUKE.

SPORTING NOTES.

A FORTNIGHT ago I expressed the opinion that in spite of the bad running of Ramapo in the July Handicap at Newmarket, this horse would nevertheless win a T.Y.C. Handicap before long. "He must not be discarded by backers on the strength of his defeat last week, as he might take it into his head to astonish them by a display of his best form some day when the British public have plunged upon something else." The correctness of my views respecting him was proved conclusively at Goodwood, for the horse was backed in right earnest for the Stewards' Cup, and he would assuredly have won that race if he had been ridden by a competent jockey. The eccentricities of Ramapo's American rider had a tragical issue, for they not merely cost that horse the race, but his infernal antics entirely destroyed the chance of Kilcock. With a clear course the finish would have remained between this pair. The defeat of Ramapo was regretted by his backers only, and his victory would have been most unpopular. It would be interesting to learn how the horse's owner and trainer can reconcile his excellent running at Goodwood with his ignominious exhibition at Newmarket. He may have a temper, which makes him untrustworthy, but this would appear to be coupled with the wit to know when the stable money is on all right, as it certainly was at Goodwood.

The Duke of Westminster ran nothing at Goodwood on the first day in consequence of Lord Macclesfield's death, and the absence of his horses made a considerable difference in several of the events. Lord Rosebery would not start Chelandry for the Richmond Stakes, as she had a penalty of 12 lb., so he depended upon Trawler, by Trayles out of Seabreeze, who ran badly, and the filly would have won in spite of her extra weight. Chillingham won for Lord Durham by a head from the Prince of Wales' Oakdene, but neither colt is anything of a flyer. The Prince of Wales' Sweepstakes (value £2,800) and the Rous Memorial Stakes resulted in accordance with my predictions, Velasquez winning the former and Bluewater the latter. There was a very strong belief that Goletta would defeat Lord Rosebery's colt, and she was generally tipped from Newmarket, but when it came to racing she had no chance with him, for he defeated her in a common canter. Velasquez will run next at Doncaster for the Champagne Stakes, after which he is to be reserved for the Middle Park Plate, while Chelandry will run for the £3,000 Stake at Kempton Park, which Sir Visto won two years ago. Chelandry has incurred a penalty of 10 lb., but a breeding allowance reduces this to 5 lb. Bluewater is a very smart filly, and she has come on wonderfully since her unsuccessful début at Sandown Park in June, when Canonbury gave her 15 lb. and a beating. Lowly, who ran so well for the Rous Memorial, is rapidly improving, and she will win plenty of races for Lord Cadogan. Bluewater ought to win the Astley Stakes at Lewes on Friday if she runs, and there would be no object in keeping her at home, this being her last engagement as a two-year-old, except the £1,000 race at Derby next month. This filly will be invaluable at Kingsclere as a trial animal for the other two-year-olds. Orelio, the brother to Ormonde, will no doubt be galloped with her before he makes his début in the Middle Park Plate.

The collapse of Pride left the Goodwood Cup at the mercy of Count Schomberg, but I must again express a hope that the conditions as to penalties and allowances will be revised before next year. It would be a wise step, moreover, to reduce the distance of this race to two miles.

Regret, of course, won the Sussex Stakes, and I suppose he will next be seen out at York, where he is engaged in the Great Yorkshire Stakes. Of course, the distance (one mile and three-quarters) is too far for him, but then there is nothing in the list that could make him gallop. Regret is in the mile race (value £500) at the Sandown Park Meeting next month. This will be a most interesting contest if the Duke of Westminster's colt is opposed by Canterbury Pilgrim. If Regret is seen at Doncaster, he will run for the Doncaster Stakes on the Friday, and not for the St. Leger, supposing that Persimmon and St. Frusquin go on all right.

I have several times warned my speculative readers to look out for Raconteur whenever he came to be started for a T.Y.C. race. Mr. McCalmont's horse carried off the Singleton Plate on Thursday, and how his price came to be 10 to 1 I cannot understand. This is Raconteur's first success since he won the Middle Park Plate. He cost the gullish herd many thousands last year over the Two Thousand and the Derby, but for neither event did I ever fancy him at all.

There is practically no betting on the Leger, for which event Helm is understood to be the great public fancy for a place. I hear that she is to run at York for the Yorkshire Oaks. If the favourites keep well, I should fancy that the Duke of Westminster will scratch Helm for the Leger, in order that she may come fresh to the post for the Park Hill Stakes, as in that race she will meet Canterbury Pilgrim, having 4 lb. the best of the weights. It is a pity that Thais is not entered, as if she was engaged in the Doncaster event the result of that race would clearly show which is the best filly of the year.

The Panglosses of the sporting papers have, as a matter of course, described the Derby entries for 1898 as being in every respect most satisfactory, but this roseate view will certainly not be shared by any one who looks carefully through the list. There are 282 entries, as compared with 297 for next year, while for this year there were 280. These figures are all satisfactory enough, but when the entry comes to be examined it will be found that there are nearly fifty American and French yearlings in the list, so that if the race had depended upon home patronage only there would have been a vast decline in the number of subscribers. The fact is that owners do not enter their yearlings for the Derby so generously as of old. The event exists mainly upon its old prestige, and the value of the race should be increased, and its miserably mean pecuniary conditions revised. There is no catch to an owner in being allowed to "get out" for £5 in January next, for this is too early a date to be able to form an estimate as to the racing prospects of more than one yearling out of every twenty. The value of the Derby ought to be raised to £10,000, and a more attractive arrangement of the subscription should be devised. Sir Tatton Sykes and Mr. Platt are the largest subscribers, each having entered seven animals, which will be offered for sale at Doncaster next month. The Sledmere lot includes a brother to Buckingham, whose own sister realised 2,200 guineas last year; and there is a colt by Galopin out of Heresy, whose half-sister, by St. Simon, then fetched 3,800 guineas. Mr. de Rothschild has five entries, including Isabinda, own sister to St. Frusquin; and Douy, half-brother, by Donovan, to Galeazzo, whose sire was the defunct Wisdom. The Duke of Westminster has six, including St. Maur, half-brother, by Orme, to La Sagesse; Ameer, by Orme out of Quetta; and Shapfell, half-brother, by Kendal, to Orme. Of the Duke of Devonshire's six, one is a half-brother, by Ayrshire, to Marvel. Mr. McCalmont also has six, and so has Sir Blundell Maple. Of Lord Rosebery's five, one is an own sister to Ladas, and another is a colt by Donovan out of Seabreeze. The Prince of Wales has two entries, both being colts bred at Sandringham, and one is a son of Orme and Marguerite. Lord Durham also has two, one being a colt by Sheen out of Primrose Day, while the other is by Common out of Alibech, the dam of Son o' Mine. M. Ephrussi has two, one being a half-brother, by War Dance, to Alicante, who is named Margaux. Of Mr. Fairie's pair, one is Speedaway, who is a half-brother, by Galopin, to Speedwell. Of the other "public" breeders Mr. Hoole has five entries, and Lord Scarborough and Mr. Taylor Sharpe have four each. Sir J. Miller's lot of three includes a colt by Galopin out of Thebais, and a half-sister, by St. Simon, to Sainfoin. Mr. Perkins has only one entry, a colt by Bend Or out of Jenny Howlet, and Mr. Houldsworth's solitary nomination is a colt by St. Simon out of Sunrise. Mr. Pilkington enters Southerness, who is half-brother, by Chittabob, to Glencally. Of the Duke of Portland's five, one is Savoir Vivre, half-brother, by Donovan, to Amiable. Mr. Russel's colt, The Virginian, is half-brother to Whittier, by Ayrshire. Lord Derby has entered nothing, but Lord Stanley has two nominations. Lord Dunraven has a colt by Galopin out of L'Abbesse de Jouarre. Lord Zetland's only entry is Red King, half-brother, by Royal Hampton, to Keelson. The principal new names in the Derby list are Lord Warwick, Mr. Woolf Joel, and Mr. H. L. Raphael.

There are 243 entries for the Oaks, as against 232 for next year, and 201 for the present year. The Prince of Wales has two nominations, one being a half-sister, by Surefoot, to Persimmon. Lord Alington is represented by Furze, by Common out of Fuse. Mr. D. Baird has Grasse, by Macheath out of Antibes, and Simylla, by St. Simon out of Palm Flower. Of the Duke of Devonshire's four one is half-sister, by Donovan, to Minstrel. Mr. Luscombe has a half-sister to Marco, by Sheen. Sir J. B. Maple has six entries, one being Nun Nicer, by Common out of Priestess. Mr. Platt has four entries, two being daughters of St. Simon. Of the Duke of Portland's four one is Elizabeth Hardwicke, half-sister, by Orme, to Donovan. If this filly does not race there is nothing in running blood. Another of the Welbeck lot is a filly by Satiety out of Rattlewings, a mare which represents one of the late Lord Falmouth's most successful strains of blood. Lord Rosebery has three, one being the sister to Ladas and another is Mauchline, a felicitously named daughter of Ayrshire and Corstorphine. Mr. Rose has a filly by Bonavista out of Penitent, dam of Ravensbury. Mr. de Rothschild has five, including Isabinda and Ayah, half-sister, by Ayrshire, to Utica. The Duke of Westminster has entered four fillies, including Lowood, by St. Serf out of Rydal; Orpah, by Orme out of Ruth (dam of Tarporley); Wheatley, by Orme out of Shotover; and Console, own sister to Conroy. Of Lord Zetland's pair one is St. Veronica, by St. Simon out of Verdigris.

A paragraph has appeared in a weekly paper which states that the Duke of Richmond and Gordon makes £8,000 a year out of the gate-money at Goodwood Races. Such idiotic nonsense must be the invention of some moon-calf who has never been at Goodwood, and who has not taken the slightest trouble to verify this ridiculous fiction. There is no gate-money of any sort or kind at Goodwood, nor any of the devices for fleecing the public which are now so common at race meetings. If Goodwood Races were conducted with an eye to profit, the course would have been enclosed long ago, and the Lawn would have been covered with a stand fitted up with boxes and stalls, as at Ascot. A very large revenue could easily be derived from the Goodwood meeting, if it were managed on the system which prevails at Ascot and Epsom, where the annual profits are simply prodigious.

It is all nonsense and rubbish for some sporting writers to prescribe increased added money as the proper specific to restore the popularity of the Goodwood Stakes and the Goodwood Cup. These races are no more failures than are the long-distance events at Ascot and other meetings. The added money of the Gold Cup has been increased from £500 to £3,000, and yet there are seldom more than three or four starters, while every one knows that the Vase and the Alexandra Plate are ghastly failures as a rule. The fact is that very few indeed of the present breed of racehorses really can stay a Cup course, and owners and trainers prefer to devote themselves to mile races and T.Y.C. scrambles. Under these circumstances, increasing the added money of the long-distance races is a fatuity which reminds one of Milton's country gentleman who raised his park wall in order to keep the crows out of his domain.

Next week the annual series of Yorkshire meetings begin with Redcar. The Redcar Stakes of £600, which has eighty-two entries, is the principal two-year-old race, and Chillingham, winner of the Richmond Stakes at Goodwood, is entered, but he will scarcely be able to give 13 lb. to maidens if there is anything smart among the dark lot. The Great National Breeders' Foal Stakes of £600 has sixty-seven three-year-olds entered, and Lord Zetland may bring out his dark colt, Red Rag, half-brother, by Prism, to Keelson for this event, and if he has any pretensions to be at all in form he ought to win easily.

There will be some good sport at Kempton Park. The £800 two-year-old race may fall to Ardeshir. The principal event in the programme is the £1,500 three-year-old stake, the entry including Labrador and Galeazzo. I shall predict the success of Mr. L. de Rothschild's colt, although he has a penalty of 14 lb., but he is really a very much better animal than most people think. Being in the same stable with St. Frusquin it is a case of une lune bien pâle.

Mr. Heywood-Lonsdale, who combines the functions of a master of hounds with those of a governor of a grammar school, is of opinion that too much attention is paid to athletics. He is an old Oxford oar, and he is reported to have said that too much attention was devoted to sport at Oxford. This was probably a slip on the reporter's part. At the same time, it helps to explain away the little defeats that Cambridge has been suffering from, and many a Cambridge undergraduate will hope these words will not fall on barren soil. A little less attention to rowing at Oxford and a little more on the Cam would do admirably.

The Metropolitan Regatta, where there was no picnicking or band and hardly the pleasure of a cocoanut shy at Hammersmith, but only stern racing, attracted few spectators. Thames had the events pretty well to themselves, and in the sculls young Guinness altogether upset Henley form by beating Beaumont, who does not seem to care about tidal waters. At the same time the Metropolitan is not the only regatta that suffers from want of spectators. At Molesey there was not nearly the crowd there was last year, and even at Henley the crowd down the course was not so thick as it has been. In fact, the boatmen are complaining bitterly of the lack of patronage, and although I cannot speak from experience, rumour says that the tariff to the boating man is becoming more moderate. The bicycle craze is the cause of all this woe, and the riverside men bless the machine accordingly. At Maidenhead a strong Orkney Cottage crew won the Challenge Cup for fours outright. At Fieldhead, Lehmann has a good eight in training for Goring.

The Australians have not been beaten by a county team, and it does not seem likely that they will be. Whatever opinion the public formed at first, there is but one view of their talents now, and that is that they are not far short of the best team that has come over. When Abel made the first century an Englishman has made against them, Surrey looked secure from defeat, and when the Australians started they did not look like winning. But then the Surrey fielding almost made one weep. Gregory ought to have been caught in the slips at ten. Then he hit a five, and got four from an overthrow, thanks to Leveson-Gower, who soon after let a drive off Read's lobs pass him. This was the sort of mis-fielding that went on. Hill's innings was very pretty, and, considering his strength on the leg side, it was remarkable that the fielders were not shifted. It is curious how good left-handed batsmen are on that side. Killick, of Sussex, and Thornton, Middlesex, are almost as deadly with their leg strokes. Kelly, the wicket-keeper, is also a decidedly sound bat, whose merits are scarcely sufficiently appreciated. Both from that match and against Yorkshire it is clear that Hayward has played himself into form again. But it was scarcely anticipated after the fine start made by him and Abel that the Colonials would win. However, Jones and McKibbin had matters all their own way, and a genuine rot set in that only a Key or a Lohmann could stop, and they were not playing. It was very satisfactory to find Hearne again in form, and taking wickets cheaply on such a batsman's wicket as that at Hove. He has for a fast bowler had to do a lot of work recently, and he has rather overbowled himself. After most of the Somerset bats had played brilliantly against the Lancashire bowling they utterly failed against Mold and Briggs in their second innings, and the rain alone saved them from a bad beating. Captain Quinton played two good innings for Hampshire, which county scored the same number of runs each time it went in against Leicester, and was then beaten after a close finish. Marlborough made a miserably weak display against Rugby, for whom Fletcher and Wilson bowled admirably, while Walford alone did anything worth mentioning in the way of batting.

Too much attention must not be paid to the Australians' defeat at Bexhill. At the same time, Douglas's batting was excellent on the bad wicket. Yorkshire had bad luck all through their match with Surrey. Smith's hitting was superb, and it was gratifying to find Peel in form again. Ranjitsinhji and Marlow played stolidly for Sussex against Notts until defeat was very improbable, and then the former's hitting was brilliant in the extreme. Captain Quinton and Ward saved Hants from a beating by Warwick, for which county Bainbridge and Quaife made big scores.

Many cyclists will be glad to hear that the Surrey County Council is going to take Kew Bridge in hand and have it rebuilt. At present to ride over it is something like going over a church steeple, with the pleasant additional excitement of not knowing what may appear at the top.

MAMMON.

From MOSES MOSS to BENJAMIN BOSS.

Sunday.

MY DEAR BEN,—We had quite an old-fashioned slump in connection with the settlement last week, and for once again rumours have been busy as regards forced closing of large accounts. The greatest weakness has been shown on the Paris Bourse, and it is evident that a stale "Bull" account in Turks and other stocks of that ilk, and in South Africans, had to be weeded out there. In London sales of Yankee Rails were pressed, and there is no doubt that there was some compulsory closing in these securities as well as in South African shares, both classes of stocks having of late experienced very important declines. The trouble, however, did not prove of much importance, and a sharp recovery has since taken place, which will probably, after the Bank Holiday, make further progress. A very lively market cannot, of course, yet be expected; but everything tends to show that when the holiday-makers return there will be an all-round improvement.

Home Railway Dividends.

Home Railway stocks were also affected by the general weakness, and although rates at the carry-over were easy, and money was plentiful, quotations at one time suffered a sharp relapse. Then a distinct rally followed, and the market will doubtless be much better for the shake-out which has eliminated some of the weak elements. Of further dividend announcements I have only to record that of the North London, which was extremely favourable—viz., at the rate of 7½ per cent. per annum against 6¼ per cent. for the corresponding half-year of 1895. This distribution had a very beneficial effect upon Brums (London and North Western), this line being interested in the North London; and there were also favourable dividend estimates current as regards the North Western, an increase at the rate of 1 per cent. being confidently looked for. Both the Great Western and North Western announcements will be made this week. The time has now come to pass in review in tabular form the position of the different lines, and the yield of the stocks. I have compiled the following table, which gives the yield on the basis of the distributions for the twelve months ending June 30, 1896:—

I propose to add the North Western and Great Western next week to this table. It will be seen that the North Eastern and Lancashire and Yorkshire stocks yield the highest return, and that Chatham Prefs. equal this yield, the Midland ranking with a return of 3¼ per cent. per annum. The Brighton Ordinary stock tops this result with a yield of 3½ per cent., and I may mention that Brighton "A" at 184½ return £3. 17s. per cent. South Eastern Ordinary yield 3 per cent., and Dover "A," on the basis of the last two half-yearly dividends on the Ordinary, also yield 3 per cent. It is probable that the traffics during the current half-year will show a considerable increase upon those of the corresponding half of 1895, in which case the annual yield would of course be considerably raised, and that is doubtless what present purchasers are looking for in view of the continued excellent returns. With reference to the South Eastern line, more especially, a further reduction in working expenses is looked for, as the result of an arrangement with the Chatham Company; and under all the circumstances I consider Dover "A" one of the most promising speculations. There has been a considerable shake-out in the Scotch Deferred stocks, and an important further rally seems assured. Both Caledonian Deferred Ordinary (Coras) and North British Deferred are in fact excellent purchases at present prices. Dividend estimates will stimulate dealings, no doubt, in the near future, and excellent distributions as compared with those of last year are anticipated; while last week's traffic again shows a very large increase, that of the Caledonian amounting to £8,329 above the corresponding week of last year, while the North British increase is £5,044.

Spasms in the Yankee Market.

As I anticipated, sharp spasms are now the order of the day in American Railroad stocks, and there is little doubt that the unsettled condition of this department will continue up to the Presidential election. The position in New York is unchanged, and everything turns upon the currency platform. Mr. McKinley is evidently about to make the very best of the chance thus given him by the Democrats, and sound money will be his watchword. The bankers and merchants are likely to rally round him, and in fact the more intelligent portion of the people will doubtless support him. Governor Flower gives vent to his feelings on this subject with characteristic candour in the following statement, which I take from an interview which one of the New York pressmen had with him:—

I met a great many business men at Chicago, including men from all sections of the country, especially the South and West. I met others at Watertown, and still others since I reached New York. I never found business men so thoroughly united in their ideas as they are now, and I have never seen a political party succeed which was opposed even by a majority of the business men. They wish no further disturbance to the currency, and they are a unit in their desire to preserve the present standard. It cannot matter what the politicians do; the business men will send out their literature to the farmers and mechanics of the United States, and absolutely control this election. It is a great business question, for on it hinges prosperity for all the people. I look for organisation outside of both parties, and an issue wholly of business and not of politics. The people will be thoroughly educated on this currency question before November. I have no doubt but what the people will decide the question in the right way. There are some Republican farmers in my county who believe in taking free coinage as a dose to cure their ills resulting from the small returns for produce, but when they thoroughly understand the question they would sooner take jalap than free coinage.

It is to be hoped that Governor Flower's sanguine views will be borne out by results. The sharp decline which took place on Tuesday and Wednesday was chiefly due to a "Bear" drive, both here and in Wall-street, and the ursine party succeeded in dislodging a good deal of stock which was weakly held. Forced closing was the result, more especially in the case of Louisville, which were strongly attacked by the "Bears," under cover of rumours of a war in rates. A recovery has since come about, and it is hardly likely that the great financial houses so closely connected with this road will in the long run leave it without support. Yet the time for making speculative purchases has hardly come, as political accidents might any day counteract a moderate advance, and the only manner in which profits might be skinned in Yankee Rails at present would be by buying on sharp declines and selling on rallies. In the meantime, it is possible that more object-lessons will be needed before our American cousins realise the extreme danger which they will run by adopting a silver basis. With reference to Milwaukee, the Wall-street Daily News, which has somehow or other turned on the "Bear" tack of late, goes so far as to state that the salvation of this stock depends entirely upon the fact that London has not yet started to liquidate its holdings to any extent. My contemporary is of opinion that should an attempt be made to do so, it would be difficult to say to how low a point the price would drop. It is this which, according to the Wall Street Daily News, makes the "Bull" pool in Wall-street quite anxious, and no cat ever watched a mouse more closely than these gentlemen are watching the Britishers for a change in their market position. If the salvation of the Milwaukee "Bull" pool depended upon London, I am afraid that there would not be much chance for them. But I have repeatedly explained that the purchases of American Rails, which have during the last month or two been made on this side in the face of panicky conditions, were really carried out for American account; so that the key of the market is practically on the other side of the Atlantic. By the way, the present political situation in the United States is bringing about some curious developments in journalism. An American contemporary remarks that the World, owned by Mr. Joseph Pulitzer, is a strong advocate of the gold standard, while the St. Louis Post-Dispatch, also owned by Mr. Joseph Pulitzer, is a rabid champion of free silver, and "in Anarchistic, Populistic, and Socialistic divagations can double discount Herr Most." Editor Jones, of the Post-Dispatch, is in fact credited with having formulated the Chicago free silver platform. I am afraid that this dual rôle of Mr. Pulitzer must be a very inconvenient one to him. Canadian-Pacifics have been weak in sympathy with the American market, and seem little inclined to recover, but Grand Trunks are displaying greater rallying power.

Foreigners and South Americans.

We are so little accustomed nowadays for any special weakness to develop on the Paris Bourse, that operators were quite surprised to find quotations of interbourse securities knocked down all round in connection with the Paris settlement. Spanish and Italians did not suffer so much; but Turks and Ottoman Banks showed great weakness, and this is indeed not surprising when it is considered that the Ottoman Empire is now threatened by two different upheavals, one in Crete and the other in Macedonia. No wonder that the Turkish Groups dropped suddenly from one to three points! I have always argued that Turkish stocks were too high, in view of the danger of political trouble in that tottering Empire. I dare say things will be patched up once again, and none of the great Powers are as yet desirous of partitioning that country off. But sooner or later the Sultan's reign will come to an untoward end. The weakness emanating from the Paris Bourse also communicated itself to Argentine Government and Railway stocks, and quite a sharp decline was caused at one time by French sales, which came upon a somewhat inflated position here. The 1886 Loan temporarily dropped to 80, the Funding Loan to 82, Buenos Ayres Water and Drainage bonds to 66½. But there has been a moderate recovery since, and unless Paris repeats the performance I shall look for a further improvement. It was, however, just as well that the speculators in Argentines were reminded that the rise cannot go on for ever. Uruguay bonds were also temporarily affected, but the Old Loan did not drop below 50½. This week the New Loan will get its settlement, and then we may look for more active dealings in it. Brazilians also passed through a moderate spasm, and Mexican Sixes fell rather sharply on a somewhat critical article in a financial daily contemporary. I cannot say that I share the somewhat gloomy view taken in these remarks, and am not surprised that these bonds are recovering now. South and Central American rubbish stocks are unaltered, and much neglected.

The Kaffir Circus.

Tempora mutantur! How different was the condition of the South African market a year ago when I had to write to you (also just before the August Bank Holiday) about the boom in Kaffirs which was then in progress, notwithstanding the weakening influences of the holiday season. At that time record prices were touched by a number of gold and land shares, and the street market was in a state of intense excitement. French and German investors and speculators were rushing into gold mines, and there seemed to be no end to the boom; although I then already suggested that some speculators were going beyond their depth, and that setbacks were in store for the Kaffir Circus. The excitement lasted a little longer, and prices rose still higher, and then the "far-seeing" financiers who organised the famous "flotation" which culminated in the Jameson raid, unloaded upon the public and afterwards smashed the market. The collapse of the Kaffir Circus, in fact, was entirely their doing. Had not the disastrous and mischievous Jameson raid been carried out, the output of the Witwatersrand mines would have gone on steadily increasing, the trouble in the Transvaal would never have happened, labour would have been abundant, and probably by this time a number of useful reforms would have been introduced. Even the Chartered Company would have been in a better position than it is at the present time, especially as the upheaval of the natives in Matabeleland and Mashonaland can be distinctly traced to the after-effects of the Jameson raid. It is no good crying over spilt milk; but I would just like to put on record that Chartered shares a year ago stood at $5\frac{11}{16}$ and rose to $8\frac{1}{2}$ afterwards, while they have now dropped to $2\frac{3}{4}$. Langlaagte Estate were then quoted $6\frac{5}{8}$, and are now $5\frac{1}{4}$ x.d.; Oceana, then $4\frac{1}{16}$, are now $1\frac{3}{8}$; Randfontein had risen to $3\frac{7}{8}$, and are now $2\frac{13}{16}$; Buffelsdoorn had touched the high quotation of $8\frac{1}{4}$, and are now quoted $2\frac{5}{8}$. New Primrose a year ago stood at 7, and are now $5\frac{5}{16}$, Barnato Consols, now 3, then stood at $4\frac{1}{4}$; and so on. I do not specially refer to Rand Mines, Limited, East Rands, and Consolidated Goldfields (which in the height of the boom touched 45, 12½, and 19 respectively, and are now quoted 29½, 6 15/16, and 12 respectively), for the simple reason that I always warned my readers to be careful of these dangerous gambling counters. From this melancholy retrospect I turn to the present condition of the market, which has experienced a severe shake-out during the past week. Paris has been unloading, a number of weak "Bulls" having apparently been compelled to close their engagements. There were also weak spots in London, which now appear to have been eliminated; and after a further collapse we have a moderate improvement. Whether the latter will last through the holiday period, or whether the real advance will only come next month, when the holiday-makers return, I do not undertake to say; but that in the course of the present year we shall have a marked rise from the present level I feel fully convinced. The unfavourable points are gradually disappearing. Dr. Jameson and the other leaders of the raid have been sentenced to various terms of imprisonment, after a very fairly-conducted trial; and thus I think that even the most vindictive Boers will admit that the British Government have acted loyally and fairly in the matter. The appointment of a Parliamentary Committee has, moreover, been agreed to by the House of Commons to inquire into the origin and circumstances of the Jameson raid and into the administration of the British South Africa Company. Thus further light will be thrown upon the whole matter, and all the reasonable expectations of the Transvaal Government and the Boers will be fulfilled. It is for President Kruger and his Government now to introduce the reforms, the necessity of which they themselves admit. Mr. B. I. Barnato has again arrived in our midst, and I have no doubt that he will have some cheery information to give with regard to his own stocks, and more especially concerning the big amalgamation scheme which he is about to engineer. With reference to the Robinson group the decline in some of these shares is doubtless due to a large extent to the Paris settlement, as our French neighbours have all along taken much interest in Langlaagte Estates and in the Randfontein and its sub-Companies. With the elimination of the weak elements an improvement should set in, as the recent decline was by no means due to intrinsic conditions, but to the collapse of certain speculative positions. The amalgamation of the Oceana with the Austral-African and the Africana is being carried out, and I have little doubt that the new Oceana Consols will rise to a much higher level, and, in fact, when the next August Bank Holiday comes along I expect to see them up again in the neighbourhood of 4, as they were a year ago. The important amalgamation which is on the board with reference to the Mozambique Company should also help these shares, which are still quoted 1⅝, notwithstanding the surrounding weakness. Leicester Diamond shares have remained firm at 3⅝, and the new Leicester Consolidated shares stand at 1 15/16. De Beers at one time suffered considerably from the shake-out, as some of the weak holders had also loaded up with these shares, but they are now above the lowest at 29½. New Jagersfontein have been steady at 10¾. In New Bulfontein a fair amount of business has been passing.

Golden West Australia.

Advices from the West Australian goldfields are as favourable as ever, and I have received by the last mail a private letter from a high authority in the Colony expressing some exceedingly encouraging views, considering that the writer is a very cautious man. His opinion is now to the effect that the area of auriferous ground in Western Australia is practically unlimited and inexhaustible. Indeed, he states that "gold has been discovered in material and under circumstances in the colony which put to flight every conceivable theory or practice of the geologist and the mineralogist." The writer adds that discoveries of coal of fine quality, opals, diamonds, and rich copper deposits appear to him to be within measurable distance of realisation. The most important event of the past week has been the emancipation of the West Australian market from the weakening influences which are still depressing the Kaffir Circus. Business is growing, and quotations of particularly promising mines are going ahead fast. Amongst these I must place first the Lake View Consols Mine, from which further sensational news has been received. The following are the latest cables received:—Mr. Kaufman cables: "We have in hand a reserve of ore of at least 500 oz. per ton. The purchase completed; additional 10-stamp mill." The West Australian Exploring and Finance and London and Globe Finance Corporation have received the following cable from Mr. Kaufman:—"Private and confidential: Do not part on any account with Lake View Consols shares. Property simply wonderful in extent and richness." It is not surprising that under these circumstances Lake View Consols should have advanced to 8. Competent authorities are already pledged to the view that this will prove the greatest gold mine the world has ever seen. The whole of the Whitaker Wright group, in fact, has again improved, and we have now West Australian Exploring and Finance at 4¼, London and Globe at 4¼, Mainland Consols at 3⅝, Paddington Consols at 1 13/16, Wealth of Nations at 1¼. The Exploring and Finance and London and Globe Companies are stated to have made over a million sterling in Lake Views. The improvement which I predicted last week in Hannan's Golden Treasure and Hannan's Golden Group has already commenced, and both these shares have moved up to 1⅝. I expect to see them at 2 in a very short time, and strongly advise their purchase. The Golden Crown will be the next to crush, and as this mine has a remarkably rich shoot, the shares will probably double their present figure. Mr. Kaufman is erecting a great water dam at the Wealth of Nations. When it is completed this famous mine may be expected to give a good account of itself. Further favourable information has been received by cable from Perth, according to which the Kalgoorlie Mine is opening up well, and the Star of West has crushed 33 tons for 924 oz. of gold. The manager of the Hannan's Brownhill is also stated to have completed the erection of a reverberatory furnace for drying the ore before crushing, and it is hoped that this will greatly increase the output. The encouraging view which I was able to express last week has been confirmed by a rise in the price of the shares to 5⅜. Respecting Burbank's Birthday Gift a cablegram is to hand from Professor Nicholas, the manager at the mines, according to which they started crushing on July 18. The winding engine has been started and is going well, and the balance of the 20-stamp mill and saw-mill has been shipped. We may therefore look for further large crushings from this mine at an early date, and there is every prospect that these satisfactory developments will also benefit the Burbank's North (now quoted 1⅛) and Burbank's Consols (also quoted 1⅛). The improvement has extended to a good many other mines, and there has been a sharp rise in Great Boulder to 7½, while both Lady Loch and Hannan's Reward are firmer. Associated Gold Mines and Associated Southern are better, and a considerable business has again been done in West Australian Joint-Stock Trust shares, which have improved to 3⅝ premium. The issue of the great Northern Territories scheme is now in sight, and will, no doubt, be crowned with complete success. I have received a long statement from Mr. D. N. Shaw, of Glasgow, through his solicitors, respecting a short paragraph which appeared in Truth on July 23, concerning the newly-formed Central Finance Corporation, Limited. Mr. Shaw explains that he had secured a number of properties in New Zealand and Western Australia, and also home industrial businesses, which he thought might be advantageously handled by such a new Finance Company. In consideration of these options, &c., along with the expenses of the formation of the Company, it was agreed to give him £25,000 in shares out of a capital of £100,000. Mr. Shaw states that his connection with the Wood Pulp Company, now in liquidation, was of the most honourable and laudable description, and the concern was wound up owing to a heavy decline in wood pulp from £13 to £9 per ton; that, in fact, a large proportion of the capital subscribed for the Central Finance Corporation was found by the shareholders belonging to the Wood Pulp Company in question. Mr. Shaw also mentions that Mr. J. Edgar Paterson, one of the Directors, lives in the Hydropathic at Slateford, a large establishment well known in Scotland. Having briefly recapitulated all Mr. Shaw's statements, I trust that his hopes with reference to the Company's future will be realised, and I certainly shall follow its future course with some degree of interest. The declines in West Australian shares generally have not been numerous and are unimportant. Hannan's Crœsus, North Boulder, Hainaults, and Mount Jackson are lower, and there have been slight reactions in a number of others. Great Boulder South have attracted some attention at $1\frac{5}{8}$, and there has been a considerable demand for King of the West, which have improved to $2\frac{3}{8}$, and, considering the very favourable news from this property, it is more than probable that a further improvement will occur. Tardily a cablegram has been published by the Secretary of the Murchison New Chum Gold Mines, Limited, to the following effect:—"Present discoveries most encouraging. Level No. 3, the formation is 2 ft., the vein continues narrow, ore contains visible gold, both walls are well defined and very strong." I should like to know why this news has not been sent out before, as the movements in the market distinctly pointed to some inside knowledge of an improvement. When will the time come that the Murchison New Chum shareholders are promptly advised of any good or ill fortune? I note with satisfaction that my West Australian contemporaries continue to pay me the compliment of reproducing my articles on "Golden West Australia," while very courteously acknowledging the source. Not only does the Western Mail of Perth (W.A.) publish these, but I see that the Kalgoorlie Western Argus gives extracts (amongst others) of "Leaves from the Notebook of a West Australian Mining Engineer," which appeared in TRUTH some months ago. The Mining Journal of Perth (W.A.) also quotes some of my remarks.

Indian, New Zealand, and Other Mines.

Although a distinct rally in Indian Gold Mining shares has not been altogether maintained, prices are firm, and there is every prospect of a marked recovery, especially if, as is anticipated, the July crushings prove satisfactory. Mysore Gold are higher at 8, Champion Reefs at $7\frac{1}{2}$, and Ooregum at $3\frac{3}{8}$ xd. Although Goldfields of Mysore at about 24s. are hanging fire, I anticipate a recovery in these, and in Coromandel, now quoted $2\frac{1}{8}$. In Australian mines (other than West Australians) a fair amount of business has been transacted. Aladdin's Lamp are steady at $1\frac{13}{16}$ xd., and Wentworth Proprietary at 1. Amongst Charters Towers mines very few transactions have occurred, but Croydon Consols are distinctly firmer at 5s. 3d. The latest statement is as follows:—"Underlie about 260 ft. deep. No. 3 shaft 160 ft. deep; cleaned up for fortnight 263 tons for 1,306 oz.; approximate value, £3,300. Mine at the deepest workings is opening out most satisfactorily; crushing steadily. A circular letter will be issued to shareholders within the fortnight." Mount Lyell shares have been active at 8, and in other Tasmanian mines of a similar character there has been some demand for Curtin-Davis and Mount Reid, the last-mentioned being quoted $1\frac{1}{2}$. With reference to the Mount Lyell the Australian Mining Standard, of Sydney and Melbourne, furnishes a good deal of information in its latest issue, and more especially brings out the fact that Tasmania is at last coming to the front. It argues that to say that Tasmania is always coming, but never comes, is manifestly unfair in the face of such grand dividend yields as those from the Tasmania (Beaconsfield), the Golden Gate (Mathinna), in gold; the Western, Oonah, Junction, and Silver Queen (Zeehan), in silver; and the great Bischoff in tin. The total dividends from the Bischoff, £1,414,000, and from the Tasmania, £612,675, certainly look as though the colony had "come" pretty handsomely. According to the same authority the present healthy movement in Zeehan and Dundas stocks, and the general interest which has been directed to the West Coast yields springs entirely out of the fact that when all outside resources had been cut off, and the in-flowing stream of capital had wholly ceased, Tasmania kept "coming" in a quiet, dogged manner, supporting its own mining communities, and so encouraging the enterprise which is now represented by such groups of mines as the Curtin-Davis, the Hercules, and Mount Reid, and in another direction by such a great enterprise as the Mount Lyell Company. I have for some time taken a favourable view of the Mount Reid and Curtin-Davis mines, the shares in which still stand at a comparatively moderate price, and I have little doubt that there will be a considerable improvement in these. New Zealand mines have recovered somewhat, more especially Waihi Silverton which are now quoted at $2\frac{3}{4}$, Waihi at $6\frac{13}{16}$, Waitekauri at $5\frac{1}{2}$, Hauraki at 19s. The great drawback in this section is the excessive number of new Companies which are being brought out. Once a stop is put to these flotations, I shall look for an improvement in some of the better-class shares, and amongst low-priced shares in Maoriland, Preece's Point, Komata Queen, and Key of Komata. In the general foreign section business has been restricted. Copper shares have fluctuated wildly, the collapse in Paris also affecting Rio Tinto, and although they have recovered somewhat, they are still below the top quotation at $23\frac{3}{8}$; thus bearing out the view which I have repeatedly expressed that this is a highly speculative share. I need hardly say that this refers also to Anaconda, which, in spite of their influential backing, are also weak at $6\frac{7}{16}$.

New Enterprises and Issues.

The prospectuses of the following new Companies and issues have been placed before the public during the week:—

North Boulder East Block, Limited.—This Company has been formed to acquire a mining lease at Hannan's Western Australia. The capital is fixed at £120,000 in shares of 10s. each.

This, to my mind, is an over-capitalised concern. There are but ten acres, and very little or no development has been done. Until some further information is obtained it will be as well to wait.

Lidstone, Limited.—This Company is formed to acquire as going concerns twelve meat and provision businesses situated in various parts of London. The capital is fixed at £120,000 in shares of £1 each.

I cannot see how people can feel tempted to invest their money in a venture like this. A simple sum of arithmetic will show the large average cost of each shop. Why do not the promoters give the returns and profits of each shop separately, instead of collectively? To my mind the course followed throws doubt upon some of these concerns.

The Electrical Development and Finance Corporation, Limited.—Capital £500,000 in £1 shares. This Corporation has for its object the promotion and development of undertakings for utilising electrical power.

The Britannia (Hauraki) Gold Mining Company, Limited.—This Company has been formed to acquire and work a property known as the Britannia, situate in the Coromandel Goldfields district of Hauraki, New Zealand. Capital £100,000, in shares of £1 each.

My Letter Box.

I am once again obliged to remind my readers that I can only reply to communications which are accompanied by the names and addresses of the writers, not, of course, for publication, but as a token of good faith. All anonymous letters will be consigned to the waste-paper basket. Some delay must necessarily occur in answering questions which entail special inquiries, and it is, as a rule, not possible to attend in the current issues to communications which arrive after Friday. My correspondents will also greatly simplify my task by reading my weekly letters carefully through, as these frequently contain remarks on the very subjects on which information is sought. I again repeat that I can accept no fees for replies in "My Letter Box," and that I cannot undertake to answer by letter or telegram. I must also absolutely refuse to execute any orders for stocks or shares, or to act as an intermediary in any way. It is necessary to number the stocks on which information is asked. Owing to the intervening holiday I have not been able to answer all inquiries, and my readers will, therefore, have to excuse some delay. The following are replies to inquiries from various correspondents :—

Government, &c., Bonds.

S. P. N.—I gave particulars of the rise which has taken place in Argentine Government stocks in last week's issue. A further improvement is probable. Herbert.—Uruguay bonds are a promising purchase, more especially the New Five per cent. Loan which was issued at 71½, of which £25 has been paid up, while £25 is due on the 15th inst., and £21 10s. on September 30. The price is at present 1¼ discount, and the yield therefore is upwards of 7 per cent. per annum. Nemo, Cullompton.—The Japanese Loan in question is suitable for investment, and you might also buy the new Uruguay loan which yields upwards of 7 per cent. per annum. A. D., Edenbridge.—No reason to sell Mexican Sixes now.

Banks, Trusts, and Financial.

J. L., Enniscorthy.—I regret being unable to comply with your request for a recommendation of a stockbroker; but you can doubtless obtain the name of a respectable member of the Stock Exchange through your bankers. Do not deal with outside brokers. T. R., Sydenham.—I quite agree with you that an association which really would give bonâ-fide advice to investors would be desirable; but it would be most important to see that only highly respectable and honourable men are at the head of it. Until this is fully demonstrated to me, I could not give any countenance to such a movement. Eyre.—You must know that at present it is not possible to obtain from 4 to 4½ per cent. in gilt-edged securities. You would have to put up with speculative stocks, and would have to tell me what particular class of securities you prefer. N. L., Larne.—Outside brokers; you should deal through members of the Stock Exchange only. J. R., Burnley.—The address of a smart firm of City solicitors has been forwarded to you in your envelope as requested. A. D. F.—The name of the foreign bankers in London, from whom the lottery bonds can be purchased, has been forwarded to you in your envelope as requested.

Home Rails.

Pierhead.—As a speculation, I should prefer North British Deferred, Caledonian Deferred (Coras), and Dover "A" to those Home Railway stocks Nos. 1 to 4 mentioned by you. I do not recommend a purchase of Spanish.

American and Foreign Rails.

Dyoll.—A change would perhaps be advisable, but you cannot buy high-class investments to yield you a better interest unless you run the risk of a decrease in capital value. Laroche.—No reason to sell Nitrate Railway bonds at present, even though some further capital may have to be raised. Artist.—No reason to sell the Canadian Railway bonds in question. You cannot get any absolutely safe investment to yield 5 or 6 per cent. To get that return you must run some risk. A. M., Cumbrae.—Central Argentine have recovered to a considerable extent, and, after having held so long, I think you might keep them a little longer. J. W. S.—It would be preferable to hold.

Mining Shares.

Meirion.—No option but to hold the mining shares mentioned. Hannan's King are a good purchase. Do not buy any more of the low priced South African shares about which you inquire, and leave Bembesi alone. Africana should improve on the amalgamation with the Oceana, and the New Zealand mining shares in question should also advance. In future please number your inquiries. Irishman, Bangor.—I have never expressed any favourable opinion about the Hainault mine, and certainly do not think that it will be a second Great Boulder. A. G. L.—Lake View Consols are likely to go much higher. Barnato Banks, Barnato Consols, and 90-Mile Proprietary are an excellent purchase now. J. J. G.—1. London and Globe are doing remarkably well, and the shares promise to go much higher. 2. No. 3. No reason to sell now. Oulton Low.—1. That is the fact. 2. Crushing will, no doubt commence very soon. 3. No. 4. A fair mining risk. M. R. B.—No option but to hold all your mining shares Nos. 1 to 14 for an improvement; most of these are well selected and should do exceedingly well. You had better buy some more promising mining shares, such as Langlaagte Estate, New Primrose, Glencairn, Lake View Consols, Hannan's Golden Treasure, and Hannan's Golden Group. Enquirens.—Please repeat your inquiry in full. W. W., Southend.—Waterfall Estates are a fair mining risk, and the statements mentioned are absurd. Malacca.—African Gold Properties are promising at the present low price. D. S. W.—The Aladdin's Lamp mine is doing remarkably well, and the shares are likely to improve. Anxiety.—1. A fair mining risk. 2. I do not think much of North Boulder East Blocks. Fife.—Your shares Nos. 1 to 9 are partly promising, especially Glencairns (1), Mount Margaret (2), and Paddington Consols (4). The others should also be held for an improvement. H. E. L.—I should think it would be advisable to try again. Gold Trust.—No, do not follow this publication. Your shares Nos. 1 to 16 had better be held, as they are likely to improve all round. D. L. G.—It boots little to cry over spilt milk. You have dealt with an outside broker, against whom I have always warned my readers, and have been regularly taken in in the Colonial and Finance deal, and have not been apparently sufficiently able to look after the "rights;" but I do not see how you can now raise an action about it. In future have nothing more to do with this person, and deal only through members of the Stock Exchange, and you will always be able to get your rights. Taffy.—New Bulfontein were ex dividend then, and purchases made after that date would be x.d. Sigma.—It is quite correct that Northern Territories shares cannot be purchased. The Company has not yet been brought out, and it is not settled yet whether the shares will be offered by tender or not. Scotsman.—You have made some splendid purchases in West Australian Mines, Nos. 1 to 4, and should obtain a still higher profit by holding. I think you are right with regard to Great Eastern (5). 6. Langlaagte Estate, New Primrose, and some of the West Australian mines mentioned in my letter. You certainly have not too many London and Globes, as these are likely to go much higher. Hold Nos. 7 to 11. I look for a further advance in Knights (12). I do not care for No. 14; but No. 15 is a fair mining risk. Hagen.—No reason to sell at present. F. M. S.—No option but to hold these shares for the present. Whenever the South African market improves these should also go ahead again. Southern Cross.—1. I should think that this West Australian mine will recover. 2. I have a very unfavourable opinion of the Sapphire and Ruby Company of Montana, and have always expressed this. 3. Write to the Secretary. A. McC.—Yes; I still hold a favourable opinion of these shares in spite of the temporary slump. Advice.—1. Hold the shares for an improvement, which is probable. 2. I do not generally advise purchase of low priced shares; but amongst those mentioned by you I consider Nos. 4 and 8 the most promising. Ierc.—There are not many dealings in the South African shares in question just now; but they are likely to improve again. Avondale.—The Financial News. Optimist.—You have done exceedingly well to buy Lake View Consols on my advice, and as the price has already risen to 8 you will see that you are in for a good profit; a further improvement is expected. Musicus.—1. I suppose it will be best to join the reconstruction and sell after. 2. You ought to have bought Lake View Consols when they first came into the market; but they are still a good purchase. Hannan's Golden Treasure and Golden Group are likely to go much higher. 3. London and Globe should be held for a further important improvement. I cannot reply by letter. Boltonian.—Yes; all the South African shares mentioned by you are a good purchase at present, more especially Barnato Banks (1), Barnato Consols (2), New Primrose (3), Johannesburg Consolidated Investment (5), Buffelsdoorn (6), and Randfontein (10).

Industrial Shares.

N. Y.—1. I cannot tell you what has become of the New Sociable Bicycle Company, Limited. If, as you say, your application money was taken at the end of April, and no allotment has been made, this application money should certainly be returned to you. 2. Have nothing to do with such outside dealers, but deal through members of the Stock Exchange only. 3. I cannot help you in the Dunlop-Truffault matter; I have repeatedly expressed an unfavourable opinion of this concern. J. S., Waterford.—I do not like Grapplers, and never have. Sextant.—A fair investment, but no catch. Veritas, Upper Sydenham.—It is quite true that your patience is much tried with this meat Company; yet I cannot take the responsibility of advising you to clear out after having held so long. Oxon.—I do not advise present shareholders to take up more Beeston shares. A. D. U.—No option but to hold for the present. Venturer.—Under the circumstances I am afraid that there will not be any chance for you to object; but I have a very unfavourable opinion of the Dunlop-Truffault Cycle Manufacturing Company, which I have repeatedly expressed. Birr.—I do not think much of the Warehouse Company in question, and advise you to take a moderate profit. Enquirer, Newcastle.—The decline has taken place in sympathy with the weakness of American Rails; no doubt they will recover again. Kent.—No occasion for selling at present; a recovery will doubtless come about in due time. Q. O. C.—1. I do not like Beeston Tyre shares. 2. Why not take your profit? An Admirer.—I do not care for either of the two Cycle shares in question, and in your position you ought not to go into such speculative investments, but should be satisfied with a moderate yield. Coats's shares are quite high enough.

Mixed Investments.

Norton.—Your list of investments Nos. 1 to 17 is upon the whole a satisfactory one; and I do not advise selling your American Railroad bonds, as these are not likely to suffer even if the Yankees were to become mad enough to adopt the silver

"plank." No reason to sell No. 5 for the present. Grand Trunk Debenture stock (6) should be held, and there is no reason to sell No. 7. No. 16, and all the others, should also be held for the present. Alma Chaletson.—1. I do not consider the heavy fall in Atchison stocks justified; but the present trouble with the silverites is, of course, a serious matter. 2. Even if this should happen, gold bonds would be safeguarded. 3. The line appears to have suffered from a series of bad traffics; but matters should improve again. 4. I have never recommended Wolhuters much, but I should say that they should be held now; a turn in the Kaffir Circus should come soon. L. E. W.—A. A fair investment but no catch. B. I do not advise the purchase of these American bonds, which have only recently been introduced on this market. C. A fair investment, but no catch. D. Black Flag Consolidated are no catch; you can do better in other West Australian mines referred to under "Golden West Australia." Mary.—If you are a holder of the shares Nos. 1 to 11, you had better keep them. I do not think much of Nos. 2, 3, and 7; but all the same there is a prospect of an improvement. Waterloo.—I really do not see why you should not stand at present as you are. The Home Railway Guaranteed stocks mentioned, in which the £15,000 is invested, are likely to further improve, and Consols are not likely to decline for the present. Before further investing in American Railroad bonds at present, it would be wisest to await the course of political events. Bartholomay Brewery Prefs. are, however, a good investment. Liverpool.—No; I do not advise purchase of Kent Coalfields' shares; neither do I like Maynards, Limited, as a permanent investment. City of Mexico bonds are a good investment. South Clifton.—I should say that a recovery will take place again; and as regards Johnnies, they should certainly be held for an improvement, and you might now average by buying more. Rindo.—1. They will probably recover again. 2. No reason to sell now. 3. No option but to hold. 4. No; I think you ought to have sold your copper shares when they were very strong the other day. 5. I do not advise the purchase. Hematite.—Langlaagte Royal (1) should be held. 2. You will probably have a better opportunity of selling. 3. I do not like Elandsfontein; but think it would, perhaps, be better to hold for a general improvement in the South African market, which will, no doubt, come about. F. E. S.—No option but to hold your shares Nos. 1 to 9, and sell when the market improves again. China.—There is nothing to be said against your investments A to I, which are likely to do well. With regard to mining shares I must refer you to my letter.

P.S., Tuesday.—In view of the splendid weather with which holiday-makers have been favoured, bumper traffics of Home Railways may be looked for, and a corresponding improvement, especially in the Passenger stocks, is probable. The outlook in the Yankee market is as uncertain as ever, and the see-saw movements will obviously continue. The position in Paris has greatly improved, even though the trouble in Crete is still causing some nervousness. There are signs of a further rally in the Kaffir Circus, especially as, to judge from private utterances of Mr. B. I. Barnato, he holds favourable views of the position in the Transvaal, to which he will no doubt give public expression when opportunity offers. —Your affectionate uncle, MOSES.

QUEER STORY.

THE NEW JERUSALEM.

"THESE links always remind me of the New Jerusalem," said Cutlish Pinkerton, as, after carefully testing the possibilities of a brassey in relation to his half-imbedded "Silvertown," he replaced that wooden implement in his bag, and drew out the heaviest iron he possessed.

"And why of the New Jerusalem?" inquired Minnie Anson, his partner in the foursome.

"Because there is nothing here that maketh a lie," answered Pinkerton, gravely. "This is the fourth time running that I have had to play from the bottom of a cavity."

Minnie laughed.

"You use your Bible knowledge for practical illustration," she observed.

"Just so, Miss Anson. The clergyman preached from a text last Sunday which impressed me a great deal. I was thinking of our foursome the day before; and I could not help feeling how much—from a golf standpoint—I resembled St. Paul."

"In what way?"

"Why, the evil that I would not—slicing, pressing, topping, &c.—that I do; and the good I would do—clean swing, hands well away, straight putting, &c.—that I do not. The psalms for the day, also, contained a very appropriate verse: 'They went astray in the wilderness, out of the way.' I need not tell you that my thoughts at once reverted to our awful experience in the gravel-pits the day before."

"Really Mr. Pinkerton, you are incorrigible."

"People know me, and they make allowances," said Cutlish Pinkerton, apologetically.

People did know Cutlish Pinkerton very well indeed. The most popular comic lion of the London stage is inevitably the best-known man in the country, not even excepting Mr. Gladstone or W. G. Grace. For more than a year past the public, of all classes, had been flocking to see him in "Ticklebery Takemorf," at the Garrulity; and their tears, induced by laughter at his screaming impersonation, would, taken together, have filled a good-sized reservoir. Even the stalled oxen (as Pinkerton used to designate the sleek and prosperous Philistines who sat in the half-guinea seats), forgetful of their dignity, laughed till their waistcoats shook and their very dinners were digested; thus saving the price of their entertainment in camomile and podophyllin. Cutlish Pinkerton always declared this to be the one real test of farcical success. "When we start a new piece," he used to say, "and I want to judge whether it is likely to catch on, I always fix my eye on the sleekest Philistine in the stalls. If he grins, I am satisfied; if he chuckles, I am elated; but if he laughs that digestive laugh, I simply dunno where I are. But there's one thing I do know, and that is, that we are in for a safe run of three hundred nights."

Cutlish Pinkerton was still young; that is to say, he was on the vernal side of forty. He was also a cultivator of the tender passions, which were ever and anon assailing his susceptible, if rather fickle, heart. And if the truth must be told, this golf foursome, in which he was now making one on the Bigham Links, had been arranged by him quite as much to facilitate a flirtation, as from any innate affection for the game itself. Minnie Anson's sister, Dora, and young Charles Tredgold, a fellow comedian of Pinkerton's company, formed the other pair. They also were flirtatiously inclined, and so were too much taken up with each other to be in the way of Pinkerton and Minnie.

Now, it is a sad thing to say—but so it was—that Minnie and Dora Anson had behaved in this matter like very naughty girls indeed. They had allowed Pinkerton and Tredgold to drift into an acquaintance with them, upon the Bigham Links, without any proper introduction, and—what was still worse—without their mother's knowledge or consent. Mrs. Anson was a very strict and severe lady, having rigidly old-fashioned notions on the subject of propriety. She also cherished a Puritanical horror of all things and persons theatrical (her father had been the Lowest Church Dean of his generation), and not only would she never enter a playhouse, as she valued her immortal soul, but she would as soon have been introduced to the Devil himself as to a play-actor. This was why Minnie and Dora kept so absolutely silent on the subject of Pinkerton and Tredgold; and this was why, when they had privately arranged a foursome with those gentlemen on the Bigham Links, they pretended to their mother that they were simply going to play a twosome between themselves in the ordinary way.

Mrs. Anson was not enthusiastic about their playing golf at all. She knew nothing of the game, and cared less, supposing all games to be more or less a waste of that valuable time which is allotted to man to be spent in working out his eternal salvation. Still, she allowed the girls to join the Bigham Ladies' Golf Club (having ascertained that the committee numbered among its members several matrons of the highest social standing and moral character), and did not object to their going down there for a round now and again. Had she known that these demure daughters of hers were sometimes to be seen disporting themselves on the gentlemen's course, in the company of two actors, she would have nearly had a fit.

But she was in blissful ignorance of that appalling fact; and Minnie and Dora, of course, took no steps to enlighten her.

Now when they played their foursome, they not infrequently dispensed with the services of caddies. To couples flirtatiously inclined the presence of caddies is apt to be irksome. These youngsters have eyes as sharp as needles, rendered especially acute by practice in marking down golf balls (and on the "sporting" Bigham course balls want some marking), while their ears have grown keen by constant straining to catch the muttered expletives in which even the most righteous and sober players at times indulge. Nothing very wrong passed between the members of our foursome. Matters had not yet progressed to the length of a stolen kiss; only once or twice (and that when they were hunting for a ball "in the wilderness out of the way") to the length of a hand-squeeze. Still, even that might result in the caddies carrying back undesirable rumours to the club, or retailing them to other golfers by whom they might next be employed; and so they found it convenient to dispense with them altogether, and to carry their own clubs. That is to say, of course, each gentleman carried his own and his partner's in his capacious canvas bag.

If there was one thing more than another which showed the utterly demoralising effect of flirtation upon sound golf, it was the complacency with which Pinkerton and Tredgold accepted their own crooked drives from the tee. Now Pinkerton sliced his drives abominably; Tredgold, on the other hand, pulled his in the vilest way. In a golfer of any proper feeling the perpetration of either enormity should induce a sense of the direst shame and distress. Yet Pinkerton would slice into a gravel pit with entire equanimity, and Tredgold would pull into a whin-forest with perfect composure. If both had kept straight, the foursome would have advanced on their balls en masse. But one ball lying fifty yards to the right of the proper line, and the other fifty yards to the left, the players moved away in pairs, with a convenient space intervening, and only met again at their Philippi—the putting green.

By that time each side had usually approached double figures in the way of strokes. When it is added that they could not merely accept this without turning a hair, but actually joke—yes, joke—over the disgrace, it will be seen that the loss of their golfing self-respect had become perfect and complete.

At this point, when Pinkerton had just had to dig his ball from the bottom of a well, and Dora had experienced that wonderful bit of luck in jumping the bunker, they were approaching the seventeenth hole, which—as all Bigham golfers know—lies closely adjacent to the Croydon high-road. It was Minnie's shot, and she raised her cleek in the act to strike. But she stopped in the middle of her swing, let the club sink feebly to the ground, and uttered a sudden cry of dismay.

"Oh—oh—Dora," she cried to her sister. "Oh—oh—Do—do—you—see?"

"See? What? The hole?"

N—n—n—o—o. Mamma! Yes, and I do believe it's—it's—M—Mr. Carruthers with her."

"Mamma? Mr. Carruthers? Where?" exclaimed Dora, turning as white as a new golf-ball.

"There: just coming towards us along the footpath. Oh, what shall we do?"

"Will your mother be very angry?" asked Cutlish Pinkerton.

"Angry? She'll be furious; she—she—she will never let us play golf again. She'll—she'll——oh, what shall we do?"

"By the way, this Mr. Carruthers," said Pinkerton hurriedly. "Is he the gentleman whom you told me of the other day as——"

"Yes, yes! He's rich and—and—horrid. And m—mamma wants me to marry him. And—and—I won't. But, oh dear! What shall we do? It—it's—too late for you and Mr. Tredgold to fall back, and pretend you don't belong to us. They—they—must have seen us talking. Oh, Mr. Pinkerton, what is to be done?"

Cutlish Pinkerton looked at Minnie's frightened face with genuine concern. He felt that he himself was chiefly to blame for the contretemps; he also felt that, as so often happens in this topsy-turvy world, all the punishment would fall on the less guilty heads of the girls, and that he and Tredgold should escape with nothing more than a passing unpleasantness. He was too decent a fellow to contemplate that unjust visitation of his own fault upon the girls, without a keen sense of distress. At the same time, how the deuce was he to prevent it? Suddenly an idea occurred to him. He was renowned for his marvellously ready wit, and had often before now got himself out of scrapes by adopting a course of action which the average man would have considered impracticably audacious. But Pinkerton was nothing if not audacious; and he was endowed with a cucumber-like coolness that was quite phenomenal.

"Hist, Tredgold!" he said, "Sling that bag across your shoulders, man; slouch; for the love of Heaven, slouch! Here; like this. Gad! it's lucky we came out in these old coats of ours. Turn your collar up, Tredgold. Right: you look a regular sweep now. So do I, I dare swear. Now remember, Tredgold, that we are both caddies—caddies, twig? And if you speak, mount the Cockney twang. I'll do the canny Scot."

"You—you—don't mean to t—ry to t—t—ake mamma in that way?" gasped Minnie, "she—she'll never——"

"Yes, she will. It's the only chance. Oh, we'll carry it off, never fear. . . . Iron, leddy? Oo aye, leddy!" said Cutlish, in excellent Caledonian, touching his cap. "There don't you think I shall manage?" he whispered, with a reassuring twinkle in his eye.

"I—I—don't know. Oh—oh—I'm so frightened—I—I——"

"Will yer tike yer putter, lydy?" asked Tredgold of Dora, entering at once into the humour of the situation.

"Yes, please, Mr.——, I mean caddie," gasped Dora, who was trembling like an aspen, yet at the same time unable to help feeling amused. "I—I—think I will."

By this time Mrs. Anson and Mr. Carruthers were within speaking distance. The two caddies fell respectfully back, and Dora and Minnie advanced, trembling, to greet the unwelcome arrivals.

"Oh, here you are, dears!" said Mrs. Anson. "It is such a beautiful day; and when Mr. Carruthers suggested to me that he should bring me down here to see you play, and enjoy the bracing air upon this common, I could not refuse. I hope you are having a good game, dears."

"Excellent; thank you, mamma."

"Good morning, Miss Anson — good morning, Miss Dora," said Carruthers, raising his hat. Minnie saw, with increased dismay, a malicious look on his face which she did not at all like. "We may as well turn and walk round with you. Eh? What do you say, Mrs. Anson?"

"Certainly. The grass is quite dry. I shall enjoy it."

"Th—this is the last hole but one. We only have one more to play after this. But for that short distance, we shall be charmed with your company," said Dora, forcing a smile.

"Putter, caddie," said Minnie, with her heart almost in her mouth, as she turned towards Cutlish Pinkerton.

"Oo aye, leddy, said Cutlish, handing her the gun-metal implement with the gravest air.

"Do you have men to carry your clubs?" whispered Mrs. Anson to Minnie, with a note of disapproval in her voice.

"Yes, we call them caddies, you know," replied that young lady, trying to speak in a natural and unconcerned way, though her heart was thumping against her ribs with terrific palpitations. "Let me see!" (addressing Pinkerton). "How do we stand, c—caddie?"

"You've each played sax, leddy. You are lying like."

"Like the devil," muttered young Tredgold, aside Tredgold never could resist the opening for a joke.

"Eh! What is that man saying? I—I—believe I heard him swear," said Mrs. Anson (whose ears were of the sharpest) in an indignant tone.,

"Naw—naw," answered the imperturbable Cutlish. "He'd naw say swear words before leddies. He ainly said they were lying like and level."

"Was that all? Oh!" said the lady, with a severe and rather suspicious glance towards Tredgold, nevertheless.

"Go and lift the flag, please, caddie," said Minnie, fearful lest Cutlish Pinkerton should be tempted to overdo it by saying too much.

"Oo, aye, leddie." And he slouched off to execute her request.

They holed out, and then crossed the road to the next tee. Minnie could see by her mother's face that, thanks to her absolute ignorance of golf in every particular, she as yet suspected nothing of the truth. But this brought her little relief, since by several furtive glances at Mr. Carruthers she had satisfied herself that he had taken in the whole situation and meant to make use of it. Indeed, it was almost inevitable that he should know Cutlish Pinkerton by sight; and even if that were not the case, neither the latter nor Tredgold could well be mistaken for real caddies by a shrewd man of the world like Claud Carruthers. In spite of the skill with which they threw themselves into their parts, in spite of their shabby coats and slouching gait, their appearances nevertheless gave them away. And no one except a complete golf-ignoramus like Mrs. Anson, could well have failed to smell the proverbial rat.

Minnie's first fear was lest Carruthers should expose the whole deception then and there; for she believed him to be capable of any meanness. But from the expression of his face, and one or two peculiar glances which he gave her when she looked at him, she divined—or thought she divined—that this was not his game. Unless her penetration was entirely at fault, he meant (she was convinced) to hold his tongue, but to demand a price for his silence. Minnie was naturally timid. She was very much afraid of her mother. Of course, Claud Carruthers knew this, and was not above taking advantage of it. He was quite bent on making Minnie marry him; and having learnt, by experience, that no efforts of love-making would be the least use, he was ready to exercise any means of pressure that might come to hand.

Of course she should refuse him—even under stress of this pressure. But then the dire results! Carruthers would tell her mother the truth about the caddies; and matters would be far, far worse than if Mrs. Anson had discovered it for herself in the first instance.

It was an appalling, a humiliating situation. Nothing but dire, awful disaster either way. Did any poor girl ever find herself more hopelessly between the devil and the deep sea?

As they played the last hole, Cutlish Pinkerton, who had kept his eyes wide open, whispered to Minnie, under cover of handing her her cleek:

"Carruthers sees through it—eh?"

Minnie nodded.

"What's his game?" whispered Cutlish. "Will he split?"

"Not now," said Minnie, hurriedly. "I think he means to—to—hold it as a threat over my head."

Pinkerton waited until she had to exchange her cleek for an iron, to play the approach to the green.

Then he murmured:—

"I say. Does Mrs. Anson take the Morning Post?"

"Yes," said Minnie, wondering why he asked this extraordinary question.

But there was no chance then of asking him to explain; so she took her iron and played the shot. It was a beauty, landing just over the small crescent bunker, which fences the home green, and running on towards the hole till it stopped nearly dead.

"Gran gowf!—gran gowf! leddy" exclaimed Cutlish, enthusiastically. "As pratty a shot o'er a bunker as I ever saw."

Minnie brought off the put and won the hole—thus finishing the match. She was relieved that it was over; for the strain of the last ten minutes had simply taken years off her life. Yet she dreaded the journey back to town, and the unpleasant interview with Claud Carruthers, which she knew was in store for her, more than she could say. In her nervousness and agitation she forget a certain little matter; of which, however, Cutlish Pinkerton, true to his part, reminded her with a respectful touch of his cap.

"It's a shilling, please, leddy," he said. "And twa bawbees for cleaning the irons. Wull I leave your gowf-sticks down wi' the professional?"

"Yes, please. Here's your one and twopence."

"Thank you, leddy."

Then he added in a meaning whisper, "Put him off with excuses for to-day, and—read the golf news in to-morrow's Morning Post."

* * * * *

Minnie's conjecture anent Claud Carruthers' little game was soon verified. On the return journey, he found an opportunity of reiterating his suit, at the same time hinting at distressing consequences in event of her answer still being negative.

Remembering Pinkerton's last injunction, she hurriedly excused herself from giving an immediate answer.

"I must h—h—have time, Mr. Carruthers, "she faltered. "I—I—must think about it."

"Very well," he said. "I will come to-morrow afternoon for my final answer. I hope—I do sincerely hope, Miss Anson, that, on all accounts" (his tone was distinctly menacing) "it will be favourable."

The two girls, Minnie particularly, passed a miserable and anxious night. Next morning she was down very early, and at once caught up the Morning Post, turning to the golf-intelligence with great curiosity and excitement. When Dora came down a few minutes later, she found her sister quite radiant and smiling.

"Oh, Dora!" she exclaimed. "Isn't this clever and considerate of Mr. Pinkerton? He—he—has furnished us with a—a—complete defence. Just listen."

And she read aloud from the paper, as follows:—

Amusing Incident.—A curious bet, made some time since, between Messrs. Cutlish Pinkerton and Charles Tredgold, the well-known Garrulity actors, on the one part, and certain fellow-comedians of theirs on the other part, was decided on the Bigham Golf Links yesterday, in favour of the former. Messrs. Pinkerton and Tredgold backed themselves, we understand, to masquerade as caddies on the Bigham Links, and to carry for a whole round without being detected by their employers. Yesterday they succeeded in their design, their services being innocently requisitioned by two young ladies, for whom they carried in an eighteen-hole match, and from whom they duly received their shillings, never having aroused the least suspicion that they were not genuine caddies.

"Oh, I say! How artful! How splendid!" cried Dora. "Whatever happens, we need only stick to that version, and we shall be all right."

"Yes. The eleventh commandment's the ticket. Well, there's one thing, at any rate, that Mr. Pinkerton will never again be able to say about the Bigham golf-course."

"What's that?"

"Why, that it reminds him of the New Jerusalem," answered Minnie, demurely.

MUSIC.

LAMBETH AND OTHER MUSICAL DIPLOMAS.

THE fact that the Archbishop of Canterbury has conferred the degree of Mus. Doc. Cantuar upon those two excellent musicians, Mr. W. G. McNaught and Mr. G. D. Wood, of Exeter, again directs attention to that which Sir George Grove once rightly described as "an anomalous power." In Grove's Dictionary it is not quite fairly stated that "the only regulation existing in connection with this strange prerogative" is the payment of £63 in fees. However, at a meeting of musicians held at St. James's Palace, under the Presidency of the Prince of Wales, some years ago, the then Archbishop of Canterbury referred almost pathetically to the power of granting degrees exercised by the "unworthy person whom the musicians now saw before them." As a matter of fact, the Archbishop of Canterbury knows no more about the status or qualifications of a musician than the Senate or Hebdomadal Councils of the Universities which grant musical degrees "Honoris Causâ." Therefore Archbishop Benson wisely will not move without a memorial, which in the present case, I believe, was signed by Sir John Stainer, Sir George Grove, and Sir Walter Parratt. The fact that Sir John Stainer recommends musicians to the Archbishop for an honorary degree, which his own University of Oxford has an equal opportunity of granting, is only one of the anomalies of the system. The University of Oxford will rarely or never grant British honorary degrees at all save to its own officers. As a matter of fact, the Royal College of Music has by Charter the right to grant degrees of Doctor or Bachelor in Music, and this would at first seem to be the proper body to entrust with a duty which it has scrupulously neglected. The Archbishop and the Universities can only go by hearsay.

The Archbishops of Canterbury, indeed, have arrogated to themselves this power, which, so far as I know, has been conferred upon them neither by the Sovereign nor by Act of Parliament. Before the Reformation, it seems, the Archbishop of Canterbury, as Papal Legate, asserted his right to license teachers in Divinity and Music apart from the Universities. This alleged right (with its correlative 60 guineas in the form of fees) the Archbishop still exercises, though curiously enough, under no other authority than that of the Pope of Rome. Dr. McNaught, who, if I mistake not, is a pillar of Dissent, consequently obtains his degree, vicariously, from the Vatican. Still, while the Universities seem inclined to keep their degrees for their own officials, or for eminent foreign musicians, and while the Royal College neglects its chances, the Archbishop has some sort of excuse for offering his sixty-guinea degree. Of all the big British musicians who hold the Mus. Doc.—Sullivan, Mackenzie, Hubert Parry, Villiers Stanford, and the rest of them—not one, save Sir John Stainer and Professor Bridge, has gained the honour by examination. For some reason, rightly or wrongly attributed to unworthy jealousy, several of our best musicians, such as Mr. Cowen, Mr. Manns, the late Sir Charles Hallé, and Sir J. Barnby, were never offered the degree at all; while Professor Prout, one of the greatest contrapuntists in Europe, had no musical degree, until he was elected Professor of Music at the University of Dublin, whereupon these honours began tardily to be showered upon him. Max Bruch, Boito, Grieg, and other foreigners have had the honorary, and in their case, unmeaning degree of Doctor conferred upon them; though the compliment was declined by such really great musicians as Gounod, Verdi, and Rubinstein, while to the invitation to accept a doctorate, Johannes Brahms characteristically made no reply whatever. As to Handel, we all know the contempt with which he received the suggestion of a doctor's degree. He said, amongst other things, it had been conferred at Cambridge upon "my bellows-blower," or in other words, upon the distinguished Church musician, Dr. Greene, who in his younger days had once blown the bellows for Handel at St. Paul's Cathedral.

If, however, honorary degrees are pieces of absurdity, what can be said for the diplomas which certain institutions lavish on their students, with the privilege of adding any number of capital letters to their names? The Royal Academy and Royal College have some sort of Chartered rights to do this, although amusingly enough the older institution has no power of preventing any former student from adding the capital letters R.A.M. to his name, whether he has passed an examination or not. But other and younger schools and colleges have also adopted the system, and recently at the Guildhall School certain young ladies and gentlemen have blossomed forth with the grotesque diploma A.G.S.M. I should really like to know who signs these preposterous documents. Sir Joseph Barnby has been dead more than six months, and the School authorities, with Civic good taste, have recently issued statistics to prove that the institution has got along far better without than with him. Meanwhile, the Guildhall School of Music has been mainly under the control of the Chairman, who, of course, knows little or nothing about musical diplomas in general or the mystic letters "A.G.S.M.," in particular. Nobody for a moment suggests that these diplomas are not granted until after full and fair examination. But it is one of the amusing points of the situation that the door porter of the Guildhall School, or for the matter of that the man in the street, has an equal right to confer musical diplomas and capital letters upon anybody he chooses. Clap-trap nonsense of this sort should be above a great City school. Indeed, it is high time such rights were limited by Parliament, for diplomas with capital letter appendages are now so numerous that it is almost a distinction among musicians to be able to boast of nothing of the sort.

Mr. Robert Newman has now arranged for a series of six weeks' Promenade Concerts at Queen's Hall, to open on August 29, under the conductorship of Mr. H. J. Wood. It is rather late to commence such an enterprise, which, according to precedent, ought to be started the first week of August. It is perfectly true that last year the first two or three weeks of the season in early August attracted comparatively few people, but the reason lay in the fact that Promenade Concerts had then been discontinued for many years, and time was necessary to advertise them. It is very possible that the same results may happen this year, although the management of Promenade Concerts, since the music-halls catered practically for the same clientèle, has necessarily become more or less an experiment. Mr. Newman, however, will have an excellent band led by Mr. Arthur Payne, and if his programmes are as interesting as those which he put forward last autumn, he will richly deserve success.

The veteran Sims Reeves, with his young wife and the baby, sailed last week by the Tantallon Castle for South Africa. It is not very often that a tenor vocalist about to enter his seventy-ninth year starts on an extended tour of this character. Mr. Reeves, however, hopes to sing both in South Africa and Australia before he returns to this country.

M. Jean de Reszke has written a most complimentary letter to Mr. Maurice Grau, congratulating him upon undertaking the direction of Covent Garden next year. Mr. Grau is now on the ocean, bound for New York; but before he left he engaged Madame Nordica for the parts played this year by Madame Albani, and he likewise arranged to do Signor Mancinelli a good turn by producing that volatile conductor's Norwich Festival cantata "Hero and Leander." Lord de Grey, Mr. Higgins, Mr. Greenfield (nominee of the ground lessee), Mr. Montagu Guest, Mr. Forsyth (representing the Harris executors), Mr. George Cawston, and Mr. Grau form the syndicate with a capital of £15,000; while the subscription is about double that amount, so that (unless Mr. Grau is tempted to go to American extremes) the enterprise is safe enough for next season.

The next National Eisteddfod of Wales will be held at Monmouth, and as this is so near to London, it has been suggested that one or more London choirs should compete. I hope, however, that nothing of the sort will be attempted. The Welsh Eisteddfod is a national institution with which London choirs clearly do not wish to interfere.

The compromise in regard to the Harris memorial ought to be satisfactory to all parties, although some people who are always grumbling, and from whom little or no money can be expected, propose to make things merry at the meeting to-day (Wednesday), when most of the opulent subscribers will have left for the holidays. That the bulk of the money should go in charity was generally admitted. Musical scholarships have of late years been rather overdone, and have at any rate not been so productive of the long-expected British Handel or Mendelssohn as was anticipated. A certain number of the subscribers, however, wish part of the money to be devoted to more personal uses. Ten per cent. of the subscriptions are therefore to be set aside either for a monument for Harris's grave, or for a bust at the Opera House. The remainder will be divided between the Royal Society of Musicians and the Actors' Benevolent Fund.

"Norse King," 3,212 tons register, 4,500 horse-power, will sail from London (Tilbury), August 27, for a twenty-five days' Cruise to the Capitals of the Baltic, calling at Leith, Copenhagen, Stockholm, St. Petersburg, Kiel, returning viâ the New Baltic Canal and Heligoland. Fares from Eighteen Guineas. Passengers are allowed to take bicycles free of cost.—Pirrie & Co., Newcastle-on-Tyne; Jas. J. Ballantine, 134, Vincent-street, Glasgow; Hy. Gaze & Sons, Ltd., 142, Strand, London, W.C.

One of the schemes which Harris projected, and which had, indeed, been sketched out before his death, ought certainly not to be dropped. That which deals with the question of a permanent English opera is, perhaps, too difficult of accomplishment now, for it comprises London seasons in the autumn and spring and a tour. The permanent orchestra, however, is another matter. Harris intended that it should be of about forty-five members, who would play in the autumn drama at so much per week, with liberty to send deputies; in autumn opera at so much extra per night, but without deputy rights; in pantomime day and night; afterwards again in the spring opera; and finally at season prices at Covent Garden in the grand season. Thus the bandsmen would have about ten months' engagement, and would not only be able to accept slightly more moderate prices than under the present conditions, but would also acquire that ensemble which only comes by long association.

GIRLS' GOSSIP.

DEAREST AMY,—You cannot imagine the social bleakness of deserted London. The place is a blank, so far as Society is concerned, and one feels that it is pure waste to put on a pretty costume or adjust with ordinary care the neatest of one's toques. But for a belated wedding or two, there would be left no sweetness or light. What is the charm in the crowds of daintily dressed women and their husbands, brothers, and cousins, that one misses so much when they all vanish like a dream? Is it that the sight of the highest physical culture is agreeable to us in the same degree as that of rags and dirt in connection with the lowest human stratum is disagreeable? There is something subtle about one's sensation of pleasure in the crowded park, the full opera house, the smart theatre, that is difficult to analyse.

We are busy packing, being bound for Folkestone as soon as Bank Holiday gets cleared away. Those who venture forth on that day find a grand opportunity for studying the companion picture to the high life that has, wraith-like, swirled itself away in the smoke of departing train and steamboat. I wonder if the Bank Holiday-makers are really happy, or if they are not, half consciously, pleased when the day is well over, and their doings become mere reminiscence. The young lovers who pass it together are happy, of course. The children are happy in the beginning of it, but when they tire and lean heavily on a weary, peevish mother, overdone always and more than ever after the early start and the crowded train, the little ones must sometimes vaguely wonder if they are really enjoying themselves, or if they only fancy it.

It requires so much foresight, and even intuition, to say nothing of a little margin of loose cash beyond what is expected, to render a day's outing perfectly and smoothly agreeable, even in ordinary circumstances. And in the crowds of a Bank Holiday, with slow trains, stifling carriages, and delays in getting home again, there must be everything favourable to ebullitions of temper and irritability.

Richard says that this is all nonsense; that the crowds find happiness in being crowds, and that if it were not for drink and its victims, Bank Holidays would be perfect bliss for thousands and thousands.

However, we wait till it is all over and go down to the sea on Wednesday. Bee and I went to Folkestone to look after rooms one day last week, and we think it is one of the prettiest places we have ever seen. The drive to Hythe, along Lord Radnor's private road, which skirts the sea as far as Sandgate, is a lovely one. It seems wrong that any one man should own so much of the coast, but it is fortunate, perhaps, in this instance, that it is so; otherwise it would not be so beautifully kept as it is, with the lovely little bosky bits on either side, with steps cut in the wooded cliffs, rustic bridges crossing from point to point upon the beach, and giving exquisite "sketchy" glimpses of the sea.

We did not care much for Hythe. There is, however, a perfectly beautiful and most romantic avenue of wych-elms, now called the Ladies' Walk, which would be worth thousands a year to Olympia or Earl's Court, could it only be bodily transplanted, just as it is, to suburban London, with the light greyness of the aged trunks, gnarled and knotted, and the youthful green of the leaves that meet overhead.

Sandgate we thought delightful, with its houses right on the sea-beach. We noticed a pretty house for sale on the top of the hill above the sea, but under the cliff. I wish Richard would buy it, and give up his house by the river. The latter is delightful in May and June, but after that a sort of close, dry sultriness seems to settle down over everything, and until September one scarcely feels able to breathe in long, full draughts of air. I should prefer one week by the sea to a whole month by the river in weather so exhaustingly hot as this.

One of the charms of Folkestone consists in the dim, mysterious pathways through the woods close by the sea, with seats abundantly provided all along them, in the depths of shade. On the other side, close to the pier, there is considerable skill shown in landscape-gardening, shrubs, and trees having been planted so judiciously as to embellish the sea-front in a remarkably tasteful way. Bee and I sat there for a whole hour, dreamily enjoying the lovely greenish, grey-blue of the sea and the vivid turquoise of the sky,

> And only the noise of the switchback
> Cast its shadow over me.

We think of crossing to France and spending a week or so on the investigation of the watering-places along the coast. It would be interesting. I think I shall write a guide-book afterwards, on a plan of my own. It will give the information that every-day mortals really need—such as particulars of local train service, the hours the boats leave and return, the charge for flys from the station or by the hour, when the posts go out and come in, and the tariff of one or two hotels. We bought at Folkestone all the guide-books we could get and found in them none of these things. They contained much antiquarian lore, whether accurate or not we are not in a position to say, but for practical purposes absolutely useless.

When people go to a new place, they want to know all about it as it is, not as it was several hundred years ago. There are pages of padding, but not a word to enlighten the reader as to the whereabouts of the golf links. A whole history of the ancient Norman monastery is given, but you may look in vain for the hours of modern church service. There is some information given about the reading-room, but the most useful item to strangers is omitted, viz., the hours during which it is open free to them. A picture of the town-hall is given, but we are not told that the omnibuses and brakes start from there for Hythe. And what everybody wants to know immediately they arrive—where to find a post-office, and at what hour is the last mail for delivery in London in the morning—is, of course, omitted.

Oh, yes! I'll write a guide-book all of my own.

The feline population of London grows apace. Who shall compile statistics that will tell us how many kittens are born in every year, and how many escape the perils incident to infancy, and survive to catdom? It is really high time that some one should take the matter in hand. I suppose the business would devolve on the London County Council. I wish they would put a small tax on cats, and have the superfluous ones put mercifully to death. It would be a kindly thing to do, for there must be an enormous number of stray cats, homeless and generally hungry, whose lives must be far from happy.

We have, as you know, a garden large enough for a small lawn, a greenhouse, and some flower-beds, and from it we can see a goodly bit of the south-eastern sky. It is a boon to be able to see a stretch of sky in London, and with frightful presumption we call this limitless home of countless worlds "our bit of sky." Richard has had an al fresco room made by having a portion of the garden covered in with an awning, and there the girls and I read and sew, and sometimes write. Richard occasionally smokes out there, and it is a pleasant change from the house in this broiling weather. But much of our pleasure in it is destroyed by cats. They prowl about, lie on the cushions when we are in the house, and upset our work-baskets. The dogs keep them away while we are out, but, as you know, dogs are fond of human company, and when we leave the garden they leave it too, and when we go back there are disagreeable evidences of the feline visitors. Anybody who walks much about suburban London will testify to the nuisance our over-supply of cats occasions.

I wonder if you are as much troubled with them as we are?

Unfortunately I could not myself get down to Goodwood, but Frances, who was there, has sent me a long account of the delightful four days she spent at that most pleasant of pleasant race meetings.

She tells me that regardless of several threats to the contrary the weather was all that could be desired. Still the meeting was not by any means a crowded one. On the Thursday—the Cup day—there was a good "lawn," and on Tuesday our sex were fairly well represented, but on the two other days the gathering, from a social point of view, was below a very ordinary Sandown. I suppose this was partly owing to the dull mornings, and also to the fact that, though Goodwood is second to no other race meeting when you are there, you have to get there first—which, especially from London, is in itself no small undertaking. Nevertheless, it is well worth all the trouble and all the exercise of patience that are required, if only to get the chance of having one's lunch under the charming trees on the equally charming lawn.

Luncheon is a distinct feature at Goodwood. At Ascot you snatch your food from the top of a coach surrounded by gipsies and every conceivable species of beggar; at Sandown you fight for it in a crowded and generally very hot room; at many other meetings you more often than not have to go without it altogether; but at Goodwood you sit down comfortably at a table (if, of course, you are fortunate enough to have a friend who has a table there) surrounded by the cream of Society, from the Prince of Wales down to—but no, it would not be fair to say down to whom. Not only, however, are there private tables, but several of the Brighton clubs, and, in fact, one or two of the London clubs, entertain there. Frances tells me that this year the decorations of the tables were as a rule far quieter and less pretentious than last year—which is a step in the right direction—as the self-advertising that has at times been conspicuous through the luncheon tables at Goodwood was threatening to vulgarise the whole idea. Have we to thank the various hosts and hostesses for this improvement, or is it due to the discretion of such caterers as Sayers & Co., of Brighton, who seem to have been responsible for many of the luncheons?

Goodwood this year will be noted as a red-letter meeting by the male sex for the sensible resolve arrived at by the Prince of Wales that it should not be a "top hat and frock-coat meeting." It has always seemed absurd to me that men should be expected to thus clothe themselves at a race meeting, especially during such weather as we have recently experienced; and I trust, for the sake of our Males, that the Prince of Wales will extend this Royal resolve even to Royal Ascot.

I must, however, cut short Frances's criticisms, as unfortunately I have already exceeded my usual limits.

But you will ask, How about dresses at Goodwood? Has Frances nothing to say about them? Well, all she says respecting frocks is that they were more interesting than striking—it being interesting to see how old friends had been revivified and altered to make them appear as though they had really been made specially for the occasion. Dress at Goodwood, she adds, is like luncheon at a country house on the day following a dance—it is simply a réchauffé or redishing-up of what one has seen before.

Fancy a table top of solid silver! One has just been made for an American customer by the Goldsmiths' and Silversmiths' Company in Regent-street. The table is a round one, and the silver top is more than 10 ft. in circumference. It seems rather a triumph to England that a commission of this kind should come from the great silver-producing country, and in spite of the fact that America protects its manufacturers by a heavy import duty. If this duty were rendered a moderate one, England could supply America with silver articles, now that the metal is so cheap, at prices lower than it now pays for electro-plate.

Doubtless you have seen in the accounts of the arrival of Li Hung Chang, or, to be more correct, Li Chung Tang, that the Chinese Viceroy is scarcely able to get about except with the assistance of his attendants. We had the fact brought home to us very forcibly the other day in calling at Carter's, in Cavendish-street, to inquire about an invalid-chair for a friend of Richard's in the country. Among other admirable appliances for the comfort of the bedridden and infirm, we saw a delightful adjustable reclining-chair, which Mr. Carter has made specially for our Celestial visitor. It is a most handy conveyance, and will doubtless be of great assistance to Li—that is his real name, you know, Amy, the rest being only complimentary titles, I believe—during his visit to this country. But are you not astonished at the courage and resolution of this Grand Old Man of China, who can actually undertake a journey round the world, and all the labour of a state progress through the chief countries of Europe, not to mention the United States, while almost incapable of walking without assistance?

And now for our weekly bit of cookery. This is a new savoury fritter which I think you will like:—

Take 8 oz. of cold boiled rice, mix it with 2 tablespoonfuls of flour, 2 oz. of grated Parmesan cheese, a pinch of cayenne pepper, a little salt, and sufficient water to make a very stiff batter. Place a frying basket in a stewpan of hot lard, and carefully place portions of the batter, with a tablespoon, about the size of an egg in it, so that they do not touch each other. Fry briskly until they are a delicate golden colour, and turn on to a paper to drain. Arrange the fritters in a pyramid in a dish, and pour the following sauce round:—Put the yolks of 2 eggs into a stewpan, with three-quarters of a gill of milk, a pinch of salt and pepper, and a pinch of cayenne pepper, whisk over the fire until it is a thick custard, then add a tablespoonful of grated Parmesan cheese, and stir it till it is dissolved.

And you must try this surprise of cutlets :—

Roll out some good puff-paste very thin, which cut into small portions about the size of a crown piece—heart shape. Put into the paste, apricot marmalade, lap over half the heart and pinch it to the other, so as to resemble a cutlet. Put them on a tin and bake. Cut the remaining paste into strips and form into the shape of a bone, bake them at the mouth of the oven, but not sufficiently to colour. When the cutlets are cooked glaze them over with the beaten white of an egg. Bruise some macaroons and roll them in it. Heat a skewer and press it across the cutlets to give them the appearance of having been grilled. Fix into them the bone of paste, arrange the cutlets on to a mound of whipped cream, then pour round some liquid red-coloured jelly.

This delicious sweet is a recent invention :—

Oil and paper a plain round mould and line it with strips of Genoese 1 in. wide and ¼ in. thick, using a little white icing to stick them together, then leave it until next day to get firm. Blanch and pound 2 oz. of sweet and ¼ oz. of bitter almonds, and steep them in 1 gill of water for an hour, then strain, with pressure, into an egg bowl; add 4 yolks of eggs and 3 oz. of fine sugar; whisk the contents of the bowl over a saucepan of boiling water until quite hot and thick; now remove the bowl from the fire and whisk until cold. Mix a gill of whipped cream and a dessertspoonful of maraschino with the custard, and freeze it in the usual way. When ready to serve, place the prepared cake on a fancy paper, fill it with the frozen mixture, piling it high in the centre, and sprinkle the top with chopped pistachios.

Foie-gras in aspic is a dainty dish. It is made in this way :—

Pour a little dissolved aspic jelly into a plain round mould, and when it is set decorate it tastefully with diamond or crescent shaped pieces of truffle; pour in a little more jelly to set without disarranging the garnish. Remove the fat from the contents of a tureen of foie-gras, and pound the liver with part of the breast of a boiled chicken and an ounce of butter, season with salt and pepper, rub it through a wire sieve, and place it lightly in the mould; pour in a little dissolved aspic, and allow it to set. Then add more jelly, filling the mould by degrees. Turn it on to a dish and garnish the base with chopped aspic and sprigs of chervil.

HOSPITALS & APPEALS.

GREAT NORTHERN CENTRAL HOSPITAL.
VERY POOR, FREE, and UNENDOWED.
The only Hospital available for a population of one million.
An urgent APPEAL is made for FUNDS to support the work of relieving 1,200 In-patients and 30,000 Out-patients annually.
Holloway, N. L. H. GLENTON KERR, Secretary.

CANCER WARDS of the MIDDLESEX HOSPITAL.—35 beds devoted to Hopeless Incurable Cases.
A FUND of £12,000 is being raised for the purpose of erecting a separate BUILDING for the accommodation of the FEMALE CANCER PATIENTS hitherto located in the hospital, an improvement which is urgently demanded on the ground of the health, comfort, and convenience of the patients. Towards the cost of the new building the sum of £9,000 has been paid or promised, and an URGENT APPEAL is now made for the balance of £3,000 still required. Patients are admitted without letters or any recommendation, save that of necessity, and are permitted to remain until "relieved by art or released by death."—F. CLARE MELHADO, Secretary-Superintendent.

LONDON FEVER HOSPITAL, Liverpool-road, Islington, N.
For the Reception and Treatment of Sufferers from Infectious Fevers.
Each patient pays a fee equal to about a fourth of his cost, the balance falling upon the funds of the Institution.
Subscribers of a guinea and upwards for more than one year are Governors as long as they continue to subscribe. Donors of 10gs. or more in one sum are Governors for life.
Domestic servants of Governors and certain employés of firms, clubs, and hotels, are treated free of charge.
22,000 patients have been treated here in the last 25 years.
154 sufferers, nearly all with scarlet fever, were refused admission for want of room last year.
The Committee earnestly ask for ADDITIONAL HELP to enable them to provide accommodation for all who desire admission.
Donations and annual subscriptions will be gratefully received by the Secretary to the Hospital. MAJOR W. CHRISTIE.

PROSPECTUS.

This Company has been formed to acquire and work a property known as the "Brittania," situate on the Coromandel Gold Fields district of Hauraki, New Zealand.

SITUATION.—The position of the property is in the same channel of gold-bearing country as the "Hauraki," "Kapanga," "Scotty's Hauraki," "Tokatea," and other well-known mines.

Area and Title.—The property consists of 38 acres or thereabouts, and is held as a special claim under the usual conditions from the Government of New Zealand.

Extract from the Statist Newspaper, 22nd February, 1896.

"We were amongst the first to recommend our readers to study South Africa, and to select judiciously good shares, which could then be bought at tempting prices. Now, we repeat our advice respecting New Zealand. The out-turn there has been larger than the world supposes up to the present time, and in some cases the cost of production is wonderfully small. Those, therefore, who turn their attention to that field before everybody is rushing at it, will, we venture to hope, make handsome profits—always, of course, assuming that they exercise care and judgment."

Reports.—The property has been reported on by the following experts:—
W. H. Argall, M.E.M.I.M.M., Manager of the "Kapanga" and other gold mines;
R. A. Marshall, Mine Manager;
George M. Steedman, Mine Manager; whose reports "in extenso" accompany the prospectus, and the Directors recommend a careful perusal thereof.

Mr. Marshall states: "Portions of the present ground were afterwards taken up by a small company of working men, who put in the drive marked A on the sketch, and, in want of sufficient funds, did not timber the drive properly, and after cutting a 2 ft. 6 in. reef, and only taking out some 40 or 50 tons (which averaged 4½ oz. per ton), the drive fell in. The surface water was also making, and not having the means to get timber and pumping gear, and the expense of crushing and carting at that time being heavy, the Company broke up. Since then other developments adjacent to the property have taken place, and the original men again took up the old ground, with extra area, which is now the 'Brittania.'

"The drive referred to as marked A, called the 'Flying Cloud.'—They drove in about 220 ft. and cut a 2 ft. 6 in. reef; the stone from same, without picking, averaged 4½ oz. per ton. This reef is in good sandstone country, with well-defined walls.

"'Bonanza.'—This shaft was sunk 30 ft. near the point of the main spur, and a drive put in at that level 25 ft., and cut a strong leader 18 in., carrying good gold.

"'C.'—This is another shaft they sunk on a leader, which was showing very fine gold.

"'D.'—M'Neil shaft. This, you will see, is on the west side of the creek. He only sank 25 ft., and from stone obtained got 40 oz. gold. This good leader is dipping under the creek, and therefore prevented him single-handed going down further.

"'D.'—Again referring to this rich leader. It is a very favourable indication that good gold is in the ridge running north, on the west side of the creek, and that a large portion of the ridge is included in 'Britannia' lease."

Mr. Steedman states: "Its position I was at once struck with as excellent, being in the same channel of gold-bearing country as the 'Hauraki,' 'Kapanga,' 'Scotty's Hauraki,' and 'Tokatea' Mines, from all of which, I need hardly remind you, very rich deposits of gold have been won. It is bounded on the west by 'Scotty's Hauraki,' while the 'Tokatea' lies to the east, and less than a mile to the west the 'Famous Hauraki' is yielding gold at the rate of about £10,000 per month.

"A most important feature about the ground is that all the reefs and leaders cut are more or less gold-bearing, and loose dish prospects can be obtained from the surface soil in many places, which all points to the fact that the right class of country for carrying gold is enclosed in your area. Your property, on the whole, is 'low-lying,' with a creek running through it: therefore it will be necessary to sink before a good mine can be developed, and to this fact I attribute the chief cause of attention not having been directed to this property before.

"Another most important feature (and one that has been entirely overlooked in the past) is, that there is a 'slide' traversing the northern end of the ground (in a north-westerly direction), which should cross the 'Flying Cloud' reef just about the point where it is intersected by the 'Junction' reef; and as it is characteristic of the Coromandel reefs and leaders to make their richest patches where they strike a 'slide' or 'flat-head,' I trust that when this point is reached at a depth that it will not prove to be the exception to the rule, but cause a period in the history of the 'Britannia Special' to be long remembered."

Mr. Argall reports: "The lodes are found enclosed in a decomposed andesite rock, called by miners the 'Kindly Sandstone,' and by geologists 'Propylite.' This is the productive class of country, being of soft yellowish, grey, and blue colours, and in the vicinity of the quartz veins is highly impregnated, as a rule, with iron pyrites, and sometimes arsenical pyrites. The reefs generally, in this particular locality, are rather changeable in their nature, but they are always auriferous, and often very rich deposits of the precious metal are struck, as can be instanced from some of the adjoining mines, viz.: 'Kapanga,' 'Scotty's Hauraki,' the 'Tokatea' group of mines, and, I believe, in this very mine rich ore was obtained in the early days of the gold field.

"From a miner's point of view, the situation of the mine is everything that can be wished for, lying, as it does, close to the 'Kapanga' and 'Tokatea' mines, which have yielded large returns of gold, and in direct line of the auriferous belt of country. Well, considering all these matters, one cannot but arrive at one conclusion, and that is—if the property is systematically and energetically worked, with judicious management it should be very profitable to the shareholders."

On the advice of the manager, Mr. Steedman, a working shaft has been sunk, and has now attained a depth of 190 feet. It is expected to cut the reef at a depth of about 250 feet.

Timber.—There is a plentiful supply in the district.

Water.—Water will be obtained both in sinking and from a river running through the property.

The following contracts have been entered into, viz.: (1) Dated June 8th, 1896, between the Britannia Gold Mining Company of New Zealand and David Nairn Shaw, for the sale to the latter of the property to be acquired by the Company; (2) dated July 14th, 1896, between the said David Nairn Shaw (with consent of Robert Stewart) and the Central Finance Corporation, Limited; and (3) dated July 15th, 1896, between the said The Central Finance Corporation, Limited, as Vendors, David Nairn Shaw, Robert Stewart, and Peter Laurence, as trustee for the Company, for the resale of the said property to the Company at a profit.

Copies of the above contracts, and the Memorandum and Articles of Association of the Company, with the original reports of Mr. Argall, Mr. Marshall, and Mr. Steedman, on which the statements in this Prospectus are mainly based, may, while the list is open, be seen at the Offices of the Company.

The Vendors under the latter contract, who are the Promoters of the Company, have fixed the purchase price to be paid by the Company for the property at £75,000, payable as to £5,000 in cash and as to £50,000 in fully-paid Shares, and as to the remaining £20,000 in cash or in fully-paid Shares at the option of the Directors of the Company. The Vendor pays all preliminary expenses of and incidental to the formation and registration of the company, and the subscription of its capital to allotment. During the negotiations for the purchase of the property and the formation of the Company, agreements have been entered into with various parties in connection therewith, and as to the above expenses and the issue of the capital now offered, to none of which the Company is a party. Applicants for shares must be deemed to have had notice of these agreements, and to have waived the specification of the names of the parties to, and the dates and other particulars of, the said agreements, whether under the provisions of Section 38 of the Companies Act, 1867, or otherwise, and allotment will be made on that condition. Mr. J. Edgar Paterson is also director of and shareholder in the issuing corporation.

Applications for shares should be made on the form accompanying the prospectus, and should be forwarded to the Company's Bankers, with a remittance for the amount payable on application.

If less than the whole number of shares applied for by any applicant be allotted, the surplus paid on application will be applied towards the sum due on allotment, and the balance (if any) returned. In case no allotment is made, the deposit will be returned in full.

Prospectuses and forms of application can be obtained at the Offices of the Company, or from the Company's Bankers, Brokers, or Solicitors.

July 24th, 1896.

The List of Applications for Shares will CLOSE on FRIDAY, AUGUST 7th, for Town, and the following day for the Country.

SECRETARY AND OFFICES (pro tem.).—James Meadowcroft, 24, Coleman-street, E.C.

PROSPECTUS.

1. This Corporation has for its primary object the promotion and development of undertakings for utilising Electrical Power in all its industrial applications.

2. About eight million pounds sterling are already invested in the United Kingdom alone in Electricity Supply undertakings, while in the immediate future the use of Electricity for transmission of power for working light railways, and for street traction, will in all probability demand an expenditure far exceeding that amount.

3. The business of the Corporation will not be confined to the British Isles, but is proposed to be extended to the Colonies and foreign countries.

4. The Directors attach importance to the field for enterprise presented by the transmission of Electric Power for mining and other purposes from existing water powers, and they hope for considerable revenue from this source alone.

5. Electric Traction for tramways has not, as yet, attracted the attention in the United Kingdom it obtains on the Continent and in America. In the United States there is scarcely a town with a population of more than 10,000 people without its Electric Tramway. In this country the subject is now receiving serious attention from Tramway Companies, Engineers, and Capitalists, and this Corporation anticipates a considerable revenue from the promotion and development of Electric Tramway undertakings.

6. In 1890 a Company similar to this Corporation was formed, and its operations were practically carried on on the lines now proposed, and it has paid—after its first year's working—dividends yearly of not less than 20 per cent. on the capital issued, in addition to providing a very considerable Reserve fund.

7. This Corporation intends commencing operations at once, and has under consideration the following businesses:—

(1) The exploitation of a new and improved system of Electric Traction.

(2) The Electric Lighting of an important and rapidly growing district.

(3) An interest in a new and thoroughly practical self-starting alternating current motor.

(4) The construction of a system of electric generating stations and the transmission of power in a mining district of South Africa.

From these and other likely opportunities for the employment of capital there appears every prospect of success for the Corporation.

8. The Corporation will on all technical matters have the assistance of Mr. F. H. Medhurst, B.Sc., M.Inst.E.E., the Consulting Electrical Engineer to the London Vestries of Hackney and Fulham, and several important provincial Corporations.

9. This Corporation has not entered into any definite contracts other than those hereinafter mentioned.

10. The Corporation has entered into (1) a contract with Ernest Coleman, dated August 4th, 1896, whereby he has agreed to pay all the preliminary expenses, including Registration Fees, down to the first allotment of Shares, for a Commission of 2 per cent. upon the Capital of the Corporation, and (2) a contract with F. H. Medhurst, dated August 4th, 1896, for his employment as Consulting Engineer, whereby his remuneration is dependent on profits only. The Corporation has entered into no other contracts, but applicants for Shares will be deemed to have agreed with the Corporation as Trustees for the Directors and others to waive their right (if any) to further particulars of contracts, whether under Section 38 of the Companies Act, 1867, or otherwise, and applications will only be received, and Allotments made, on this footing.

11. It is proposed to apply in due course for a quotation of the Shares of the Corporation on the Stock Exchange.

12. In the event of no allotment being made, the deposit will be returned in full.

13. Prospectuses and forms of Application may be obtained at the Offices of the Company, and of the Bankers and Solicitors, where the Memorandum and Articles of Association, and the contracts herein mentioned, can be inspected.

August, 1896.

This Form may be cut out, filled up, and sent with amount payable on application to the Company's Bankers.

To the Bondholders.

From time to time Bondholders have been informed through the medium of the press, of negotiations that have been carried on with the view of some arrangement between the various security holders and the Company.

The Committee are now informed that these negotiations have failed, and looking to the large arrears of interest due, they have come to the conclusion that it is time to take new steps to protect the interests of holders of the various classes of bonds by legal proceedings or other means, and provide for the efficient and economical management of the railways with a view to the regular payment of interest.

Before any definite action can be taken it is necessary to arm the committee with full powers and to provide a fund for expenses.

The Committee, therefore, request holders to deposit their Bonds with Messrs. Barclay & Company, Limited, 54, Lombard-street, E.C., who will give formal certificates in exchange, and further, at the time of deposit, to pay to Messrs. Barclay & Company, Limited, for credit of the Committee the sum of 2/6 in respect of each £100 of bonds deposited.

A copy of the purposes and conditions of deposit is annexed to the circular issued, and will be endorsed upon the certificates to be issued in exchange for Bonds.

Application will be made in due course to the Stock Exchange, to allow a quotation for the Committee's Certificates.

By order,

E. J. LAKE, Secretary.

"TRUTH" PUZZLE, No. 905.—SUGGESTED NAME FOR HORSELESS CARRIAGES.

Toucan (real name and address will be published in due course) £2 2 0

"TRUTH" PUZZLE, No. 911.

The Prize in this Competition will be divided between Flitters and Clara, who both make what is practically the same suggestion for a subject for discussion in the newspapers during the Silly Season. Their suggestion is that correspondents should be invited to discuss whether the use of artificial aids to beauty, such as cosmetics, rouge, powder, &c., is permissible?

"TRUTH" PUZZLE, No. 915.

In accordance with many requests, a Translation from French into English verse is made the subject of Competition this week. The usual Prize of Two Guineas is therefore offered for

The Best Rendering of the Two Stanzas printed below into Rhymed English Verse of the same Metre as the original French Lines.

Here are the two well-known stanzas of which an English version has to be written:—

"La vie est vaine :
Un peu d'amour,
Un peu de haine,
Et puis—bonjour !

La vie est brève :
Un peu d'espoir,
Un peu de rêve,
Et puis—bonsoir !"

Competitors will please specially note that they are not to lengthen the number of the syllables in the lines of their version. Each line of the English version must also rhyme with its alternate line as in the original. I need hardly add that though a literal translation is not asked for, it will be well for competitors to keep as nearly as possible to the original in their English versions. All answers must reach me by the morning of Monday, August 17.

CONDENSED RULES.

All answers to the current Puzzle must be sent in on or before the morning of the Monday week following the date of that Puzzle's publication, to the Puzzle Editor, Truth Buildings, Carteret-street, Queen Anne's-gate, London, S.W. The answers must be signed by a nom de plume of not more than twelve letters, and must not be sent on post-cards, nor by telegraph, nor by hand; whilst in the case of new competitors the real name and address must be forwarded with the first reply sent.

Answers to Correspondents.

 In consequence of going to press exceptionally early several answers to correspondents are held over until next week.

"TRUTH" PUZZLE, No. 912.—ASSORTED SPECIMENS—GOOD AND OTHERWISE.

DESCRIPTION OF A CYCLING TOUR, IN RHYMED VERSE.

We started off one morning, and we sped along so fast,
That everybody seemed to stare in wonder as we passed,
"I say, old boy!" he said to me, "now what d'you think of this?
"To me, to spin at such a rate is nearly perfect bliss."
Well, as we'd ridden thirteen miles, and faster grew the pace,
I answered rather gruffly, "Well, you know, it's not a race,"
I don't know what he thought I said; he seemed to take no heed,
In fact, I saw with horror that he now increased his speed;
I thought I'd not be beaten, so I worked with all my might.
He thought that I was racing him, and vanished out of sight.
Now work grew ten times harder, and I felt with deepest pain
That I had got a puncture; and then it began to rain;
The prospect thus of ten miles more I really couldn't bear,
And, though I grieve to say it, I straight began to swear.
Now, with my feelings thus relieved, I had to drag that load
For nearly ten miles in the rain upon a greasy road.
And when at last I did arrive they took me for a tramp,
And if my friend had not been there I should have had to "camp."
Next day I had to stay in bed until my clothes were dry,
And then I let my friend go on, and wished him there "good-bye."

A warning pray take if it's now to your liking,
And never go far if you should take up "biking,"
Whatever you do, never go with a scorcher,
Or, like me, you'll pass through unlimited torture.

Asher.

Attend all ye who list to hear my noble cycle's praise:
I tell of the thrice famous deeds she wrought in recent days,
When such a storm—a Dartmoor storm!—against her bore in vain
The wildest blasts of hurricane, the thickest sheets of rain.
It came, a year or two ago, upon a summer's day.
What came? A little sable cloud right up from Plymouth Bay,
And blinding was the lightning's flash, and loud the thunder's sound,
As slow against the labouring wind I forced the pedals round.
Night sank upon the purple heath (so far as I could see)—
Such night on Dartmoor ne'er had been—and one's enough for me.
For swift to east, and swift to west, that sable cloudlet grew,
And every stick and stone it drenched—it drenched the writer through.
The sentinel at Dartmoor Gaol looked forth into the night,
And saw approaching (up the hill) a speck of ruby light;
Then with one start, and with one yawn, he shook his dripping hat,
And as my cycle passed, he cried, "Why, who the devil's that?"
And faster still the wheels went round, and faster fell the rain,
And faster, faster, onward still, my cycle raced again.
And on and on, without a pause, untired she bounded still,
And hurried, with the wind behind, like lightning down the hill,
Till, like volcanoes flared to heaven, "The Duchy" lights below,
Till broad and fierce the boss came out, and roared, "Who's knocking so?"
Till, 'neath his hospitable roof, I housed my iron horse,
Till thus I closed my cycle tour with such a tour de force.

Relwop.

Carew de Vere, rich and no wife,
Was thirty-eight, or thereabouts;
His club and liver were his life,
And Bond-street was his whereabouts.
When cross, he was a Hottentot,
And when polite, an icicle,
But grew more cheerful when he'd got,
And learned to ride a bicycle.
For first to Rochester he rode,
And studied that Provincial See,
Then Dover was his next abode,
From there, through Hythe, to Winchelsea.
Here dwelt his aunt, and pretty Coz
(When Coz was small he'd carried her)
Who had a tandem—thus it was
He fell in love and married her.
And now he dwells far out of town,
His liver working actively,
His eye is clear, his face is brown,
Life smiles on him attractively.
So, as no happiness is real
Till love and health are put to it,
Don't place your shoulder to the wheel,
But, rather, put your foot to it.

Oom Paul.

Breathes there the man so forced by adverse fate,
So out at elbows, or so up of date.
Whom sylvan joys avail not to allure
To taste the rapture of a cycling tour?
How sweet to rise at breezy call of day,
Forecast the weather, and forswear delay!
Then, breakfast o'er, bestride the glittering wheel,
That chafes for action worthy of its steel.
By dewy lawn, by stream, by feathery brake,
By hamlet rude, our sinuous course we take,
Till timely inn suggests a noontide halt,
And hints at lunch and eke a mug of malt.
A pipe; a siesta 'neath the whispering trees
That thrill with murmur of a myriad bees;
Till Phœbus sloping slowly to the west
With warning finger speeds the parting guests.
Thus hour by hour on velvet tyre we stray,
Keeping the noiseless tenour of our way;
Till, evening come, we stall the patient steed,
Sans tache, sans puncture, best of all—sans feed.
Then dinner: weary limb but restful head;
A well-earned slumber, and a well-aired bed;
Blest he that thus can tread the pilgrim's way,
And rest content with forty miles a day!

Kottabos.

We'd projected, some few weeks ago,
On our cycles to take a long tour,
And my spirits they rose, that I very well know,
As they never had risen before.

Our mark'd route was to Bath, and then on To fair Exeter, Plymouth, Penzance;
And, returning, we thought we'd have probably gone
Just to take a short spin in North France.

There was Bill, there was Tom, there was Jack,
And last, but not least, there was I;
And we started one morn with our humps on our back,
As to scorch o'er the roads we did try.

But the luck was against us. First Bill
Got entrapped in a large flock of sheep,
Which soon caused him to have a most terrible spill,
And his bike was a ruinous heap.

Then young Tom, with a stone cut his tyre,
And old Jack we just left on the road;
While his bike it picked out a good place full of mire,
And then, for a joke, "shed its load."

So we never reached Bath, and I guess
I in future will travel by rail,
Where no spills make one swear, and no punctures distress,
And no rents in our clothes we bewail.

Almaviva.

John L-pin was a gentleman,
Of cycle trade renown;
A man of much invention he
Of Coventry's fair town.

And he had, too, his Mary dear,
Who for wedding he was keen.
"The honeymoon a-wheel," said he,
"Will we two spend, my queen."

So by the church where they were wed,
This modern pair got on Their motor-bikes, the foolish souls,
To scour the country 'pon.

Away went L-pin, and away
Went Mrs. L-pin, too.
They little thought, when they came out,
What motor-bikes could do.

"Stop, stop, John L-pin," shrieked his bride,
"Do pray, for dinner, stay";
"I'm hungry, and I am so tired."
And L-pin echoed "Yea."

But motor-bikes are tricky things,
For L-pin vanished he;
And Mrs. L-pin waits and pines,
For him no more she'll see.—Amapola.

SIC VOLVITUR ROTA.

Through the grey, silent streets, ere the dawning
We tranquilly treadled our way;
And when slowly the night's cloudy awning
Rolled back 'fore the smile of the day,
We were ringed by the green of lush meadows,
We were kissed by the balm-bearing wind,
And the storm and stress of the city
Lay far and forgotten behind.

So our days slipped away, in a vision
Of an earth when the world was young;
As we lingered, 'mid pastures Elysian,
And the scenes by Theocritus sung.
How we swept, with the swoop of the swallow,
By the dull-droning, ivy-clad mill,
Where the hamlet lies hid in the hollow,
'Neath the sentinel tow'r on the hill.

Drowsy noons, when, the cool turf our pillow,
Lotos eaters, we languidly lay
In the shade of the silver-palmed willow
That waves o'er the well by the way.
Et nos in Arcadia—we've chanted
Our earth-mother's grand choric song;
And our κτημα ες αει she granted
In these days when her love lapped us long.

Tibicen.

Just a step to the pedal, a spring to the seat.
And we're off and away down the still sleeping street.
Then past mansion and villa, by homes that are poor,
Till the town lies behind us, the country before.
And it's oh! what a freshness from woodland and brake,
As we swing through the land ere the world is awake.
There's a God in the heaven, a song in the blue;
Ev'ry leaf seems enchanted, a-spangle with dew.
How light-hearted we're laughing. Now comes a stiff hill—
Put your weight on the treadles, and up with a will.
There! we've crested the top, and the moorland is ours,
With its lights and its shadows, its peaks and its flowers.
Now 'tis down through the valley our pathway must lie;
With our feet on the rests we can fearlessly fly.
Steeds like these never tire—but should punctures betide,
They are easily mended, and on soon we ride.

Noonday rests in some coppice, nights spent at an inn,
With some quaint lattic'd window where roses peep in.
So through country and village we rove, till at last
Our holiday's over—the days fled too fast.
Back we go to our calling, hard-muscled and brown;
With some pretty tall stories to tell in the town.
Let others look doubtful, we who've tried it are sure
That there's nothing on earth like a bicycle tour.

Janet.

I wanted to go for a tour on my bike;
Quoth the wife of my bosom, "Very well; as you like.
But, my chances of holiday being so few,
Pray say, dearest Alfred, that I may come too!"

Now this was not what I'd intended at all,
As my wife, on her bike, can't get out of a crawl;
Whilst her Alfred darts forward, breaking record at last,
She is far, far behind—not a milestone has passed.

I own that I was unaffectedly bored
When in the first half-hour my wife was thrice floored.

My language was strong, and I fear me, unkind;
Yes, I gave my Maria a bit of my mind.

She whimpered and bothered, said her pedals were wrong,
Called the saddle too small, and the brake much too strong;
Vowed I didn't care if she broke all her bones,
And finally wept on a hard heap of stones.

At last we reached Bagshot (our first place of call);
The inns were all full—there was no room at all.
My wife turned quite rusty, said "Home I'll return,"
And I did not oppose it, for I wished her to learn

That I do not approve of the woman on wheels:
For as such she is symbol of care at my heels!
So I bought her a ticket, saw her into the train,
Much relieved at the thought she'd be soon home again!

ENTRE NOUS.

An evening journal announced last week that "the projected celebrations of her Majesty's long reign are already engaging the attention of the officials of the Household." This is an absurd fiction, and the statement that "alternative plans will be laid before the Queen for provisional approval" is another invention. There is, at all events at present, no idea of having any elaborate "celebration" next year, and the "officials of the Household" have heard nothing whatever on the subject, nor would it be their business to make the arrangements for any such functions. This duty would fall (as in 1887) on the Queen's "State servants," and it might as well be attributed to Convocation or to the Corporation of London as to the "officials of the Household."

I have a little suggestion of my own to make in regard to the celebration of the Queen's sixty years' reign. It is that the Imperial Institute should be pulled down. The Institute was built to celebrate the Queen's Jubilee, and by common consent it is one of the most crack-brained projects that ever emanated from the mind of man; although, doubtless, some of those who were behind the scenes had a certain amount of method in their madness. There could not, it seems to me, be a better means of celebrating the coming event in English history, than by putting this Jubilee blunder right, and preventing the Imperial Institute remaining for ever a reproach to British common sense.

Of course, if the Institute could be sold by auction, and the proceeds applied to some useful purpose, this would be a still better way of celebrating the occasion. But, so far as I have been able to see, no one would bid any sum worthy of consideration for the premises in their present shape, so that the idea of getting the subscribers' money back is out of the question. On the other hand, if we got rid of the bricks and mortar, we might undoubtedly do something sensible with the land. The best thing that has been done at the Institute has been the open-air concerts in the gardens. Those who have heard the Strauss and Monte Carlo orchestras during the last two seasons will bear me out in this. The only fault about these entertainments has been the smallness of the ground, and the hideous character of the huge factory-like buildings with which it is surrounded. Get rid of these buildings, and you would more than double the size of the garden, and, under the present intelligent management, London would gain a kind of open-air recreation place which it very badly needs. I have noted a great many of the idiotic suggestions now being made for celebrating the Queen's "record" as a reigning British Sovereign, but I have not seen one among them which strikes me as so simple and practicable as this little idea of mine.

It will soon come to be said of the Royal Victorian Order, as Mark Twain observed of a French decoration, "Few, indeed, escape it." Considering the number of Orders which already existed, each with its various classes, it seemed that the Queen's opportunities for decorating meritorious persons were already abundant. The Royal Victorian Order, however, has been given away during the last few months with a profusion so lavish that there will surely be a rise in the price of ribbon before long. Ten French officials were decorated when the Queen left Nice, and there have been almost daily creations ever since, ending with Li Hung Chang. The Queen was advised to give him the Grand Cross of St. Michael and St. George, but her Majesty insisted on bestowing her new Order upon the Chinese statesman, who will probably not be flattered when he learns that he shares that decoration with a number of railway officials and household servants. During the Queen's last visit to the Continent the order was given to persons who, under ordinary circumstances, would have received presents of either plate or jewellery, so it is a novelty which has the merit of economy.

The Duke of York is going to Scotland, to visit the Duke and Duchess of Fife at Mar Lodge, Aberdeenshire, and Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Sassoon at Tulchan Lodge, Morayshire. The Duchess of York is to proceed to Balmoral when she returns from the Engadine, and the Duke will meet her there.

The Duke of Cambridge, who is now at Homburg, will return to England in time to attend the Sanitary Congress at Newcastle on September 2, when H.R.H. is to be the guest of the Duke of Northumberland at Alnwick Castle.

The Empress Marie Feodorovna of Russia, who is to arrive at Copenhagen this week, will probably spend the month of November in England, when she is to be the guest of the Queen at Windsor Castle, and of the Prince and Princess of Wales at Marlborough House and at Sandringham. The Empress will be accompanied to England by her children, the Grand Duke Michael and the Grand Duchess Olga, who are to be with her in Denmark.

Princess Marie of Greece, second daughter of King George, is engaged to be married to the Grand Duke George Michaelovitch of Russia. An Athens journal announced the other day that the match had been broken off, and the unfortunate editor has been arrested on the charge of insulting the King and his family, an offence for which the penalty is imprisonment with hard labour for a term not exceeding seven years.

Lord Bridport is to go to Osborne next Tuesday, and he will stay there until the Queen leaves for Balmoral on the 27th.

The annual meeting of the British Association is to take place at Liverpool next month, and Lord and Lady Derby will give a large garden-party to the members at Knowsley, and other entertainments. Dean Farrar is to preach the sermon at the special service in Liverpool Cathedral.

From more than one source lately, inquiries and suggestions have reached me respecting the sanitary condition of Westgate. A few weeks back there was an outbreak of typhoid fever in one of the hotels, and the local medical opinion was that the source of infection was to be found in something that the patients had had to eat. The other day, however, a friend of mine who had intended to take a house in the place, abandoned the idea, after what he heard on the spot as to the health of the town. In view of this last fact, if the local authorities can show a clean bill of health, they should do it without delay. If, on the other hand, there is still any typhoid, diphtheria, or similar illness in the town, it is better in the long run for all parties that the exact truth should be made known, and the cause of the illness thoroughly and publicly sifted.

Another matter on which I have been repeatedly questioned of late is the water supply of Eastbourne. There seems to be no doubt that the water is still very far from irreproachable, and it is as well that intending visitors to Eastbourne should recognise this fact. I was told the other day by one gentleman that he had been unable to use the town water for drinking purposes while staying there, and by another that while for perhaps two days out of three the water would be all right, on the third it would be so salt as to suggest that the salt spring, which was supposed to be the cause of all the trouble last year, had been suddenly turned on again. The chemists in the town are selling distilled water at 6d. per gallon, and many visitors report that it is generally necessary to use this water for drinking purposes and for making tea. Doubtless when these statements are made public, I shall at once be confronted with official statistics proving that the health of the town was never better than now, and that the effect of the salt is rather beneficial than otherwise. This may be perfectly true, but there will be many with whose constitutions salt water does not agree, and others who find fresh water more to their taste. Tectotallers, at any rate, would do well to avoid Eastbourne for the present.

While on this subject, I would ask why do not more people go to Bournemouth in the summer? I had a letter the other day from a friend who writes in high praise of the beauty and healthiness of the place at this time of year, and it is surprising that Londoners are not more alive to the fact. There is a popular idea that Bournemouth is only a wintering place, and that in summer it is intolerably hot. This is entirely a delusion. The thermometer does not rise higher there than at Hastings or the Isle of Wight—to say nothing of Devon and Cornwall—and, owing to the pine woods and the dryness of the soil, you feel the heat far less there than at the majority of South Coast watering-places. So far as amusements go, Bournemouth—with its capital steamboat service, its fine new recreation ground and golf links, the splendid country all round, and the New Forest almost at the door—has far more attractions in the summer than in the winter. A new one, by the way, has just been added to them in the shape of a daily coach service between the Bath Hotel and Salisbury—a lovely drive. Bournemouth possesses unrivalled hotel accommodation, and it is one of the few places where, at this time of year, the hotels are not uncomfortably overcrowded. To people who are alarmed by diphtheria in one seaside place, salt-springs in the water-mains at another, and extravagant charges in many more, I would say give Bournemouth a trial for your summer holiday.

To my cost I know all about sea-sickness, but I am a stranger to railway-train sickness. There are, I suppose, many sufferers from the latter malady, and a lady tells me that in her experience the infliction is worse than anything to be met with on the treacherous ocean. This unfortunate sufferer laments the absence of the "steward," with his appurtenances, on board railway trains, and asks me why there is no medical remedy for the evil. Probably anything that will cure sea-sickness will cure train-sickness. I recommend my lady correspondent to try "Yanatas." But Heaven forbid that we should have stewards running about with their implements in the corridors of our long-journey trains.

Having read in TRUTH of the story of the dove which has found her a nest in the precincts of the Reform Club, a clerical correspondent thinks that my readers may like to hear how another bird lately built in one of the apertures in the walls of the quaint little old parish church at Neasdon. Unfortunately, this bird, after having got so far as to lay an egg, took to flight—as far as I can make out—without hatching it. I am not quite clear what inference my clerical friend draws from this little incident in natural history. To me, however, it seems a striking example of the sagacity of the brute creation, that while a bird finds herself compelled—doubtless from conscientious motives—to leave the Church, she should be able to make herself a permanent home in the temple of Liberalism.

The following letter is an instance of the touchiness of the "New Woman." Females of this class are indignant when the slightest suggestion is made that there may be occupations more fitted for men than for them, and yet if the same sort of criticism is applied to them as to men, they are also indignant. Here we have a lady either denying that women ever eat too much, or insisting that if they do make an exhibition of themselves by gorging in public, no notice should be taken of it. If it be any pleasure to my correspondent, I will admit that many men also eat a great deal too much; indeed, whilst some men and women eat too little, because, unfortunately, they are without the means to buy sufficient nourishment, others consume each day about twice as much as is necessary, and even healthy. The late Mr. John Bright, many years ago, once explained to me the reason of this. He was saying to me that he was getting too stout. I suggested a course of Banting, for at that time "to bant" was all the craze. "No," he replied, "I shall eat less," and then he went on to say that the stomach is a cavity which is easily distended. If a person eats very much, the distension becomes permanent, and whenever the enlarged cavity is not full an artificial feeling of hunger is produced. This is met by eating less. By degrees the stomach resumes its normal size, when its owner ceases to feel hungry whenever he does not eat too much:—

5, Lydford-road, St. Peter's Park, W.
August 7, 1896.

DEAR SIR,—There seems a class of writer which finds its sole occupation in finding fault with whatever women do. Their dress, exercise, amusements, morality, habits, temperament, and work are all and each the subject of unfavourable comment. But that you who, in TRUTH, avail yourself of at least two distinguished ladies in Mrs. Lynn Linton and Mrs. Humphry, should be a member of this band, I can scarcely believe. Yet, in this month's Westminster Review, Mr. Walter Nathan purports to quote from your authority that women eat too much, and if his statement is correct, you descended to the spying of the ladies who were taking lunch at Lord's, and of taking note of every morsel they put into their mouths. If a woman rides a bicycle she commits a fault in some eyes. If she dresses well and goes out she is either extravagant or immoral. If she sits at home she is either lazy or a dowdy. If she tries to earn a living she unsexes herself, and now it would appear to be a crime to eat if she is hungry. I trust, if the quotation is correct, no others will follow your example. For myself, I shall never eat comfortably in public again, for I shall always imagine some one is calculating the exact weight and cost of whatever I eat to be published and commented on in some journal. I may add that, whether on your authority or that of Mr. Walter Nathan, I do not believe that any lady would eat pickled salmon after strawberries and cream.—Yours faithfully, ELLEN GORDON.

Athletic sports, as managed at Stamford appear to be a decidedly dangerous form of amusement for the spectators. A paragraph in a local paper states that at the meeting on Bank Holiday a bullet from the starter's pistol, after striking the ground, rebounded, and whizzed by several onlookers some sixty yards away, passed through the hat of one girl, grazed the ear and made a hole in the hat of another girl, went through a lady's dress, and finally found a resting place in the thigh of a youth, who was conveyed to the infirmary. It might be inferred from the paragraph that the pistol was only once loaded with ball cartridge, and that, indeed, would be bad enough. I am told, however, that, as a matter of fact, ball-cartridges were used in starting the races throughout the sports. A more amazing, or a more disgraceful and reprehensible proceeding at a gathering of this kind I never heard of, and the idiots responsible for the arrangement will, I hope, have to pay smartly for the mischief they have done.

One of the morning papers produced a special article last week about yachting at Cowes, which contained the amazing statement that the Solent "has really given birth" to the pastime. As a matter of fact, Solent yachting only commenced during the Regency, when the Royal Yacht Squadron Club was founded. There were yacht races on the Thames in the last century, and the Royal Cork Yacht Club is by far the oldest establishment of the kind. The success of the R. Y. S. was mainly due to the enthusiasm and sagacity of Lord Yarborough, who was Commodore for many years.

In reference to a paragraph in the "Linkman's" letter of July 30, in which Mr. Whitaker Wright was referred to as the owner of the White Heather, Mr. R. C. Leigh asks me to mention that the vessel belongs to him, and is only chartered by Mr. Wright.

"NORSE KING," 3,212 tons register, 4,500 horse-power, will sail from London (Tilbury), August 27, for a twenty-five days' Cruise to the CAPITALS OF THE BALTIC, calling at Leith, Copenhagen, Stockholm, St. Petersburg, Kiel, returning viâ the New Baltic Canal and Heligoland. Fares from EIGHTEEN GUINEAS. Passengers are allowed to take bicycles free of cost.—PIRRIE & Co., Newcastle-on-Tyne; JAS. J. BALLANTINE, 134, Vincent-street, Glasgow; HY. GAZE & SONS, LTD., 142, Strand, London, W.C.

The following delicate question has been propounded to me. A lady takes a seat in the stalls at Brighton Theatre expecting to see a performance of the "Geisha." In front of her is another lady—in the conventional sense of the term—with a gigantic hat upon her head, and the first lady finds that she can see absolutely nothing but the hat and its forest of black plumes. Not wishing to entirely lose her money, Lady No. 1 politely asks No. 2 if she will kindly remove the hat. Lady No. 2 replies, with a frigid stare, "I shall do nothing of the kind." In her pocket Lady No. 1 happens to have a pair of scissors. Query: Would she be justified in snipping off No. 2's feathers, and thus obtaining a glimpse of the stage? Personally, I should like to answer the question in the affirmative; but I fear that the result would be that every reader of TRUTH would go to the play with a pair of scissors in his pocket, and that the result would a general mêlée, in which the hats would not be the only things disfigured. Really, this is a matter which the management of every theatre ought to see to. If I pay my money to see a play, I have a right to complain when I find that I can see nothing but one lady's hat. If managers of theatres have not sufficient courage to require ladies to remove their hats, they must make such structural alterations as will enable those in the background to see over the hats of those in front.

A leading and well-known gentleman of the theatrical profession sends me this letter in regard to the Covent Garden Fund. No one seems clearly to know what is the amount of the Fund, but that it is considerable there is no question. It is evident that existing subscribers should be entitled to all that has been secured to them by their contributions. But that the principal should be divided between survivors is entirely contrary to the intentions of donors and subscribers. There are, it would seem, directors. Why should they not make a clean breast of the exact position of the Fund? They owe this to the entire profession. The Fund was established under an Act of George III. I see no reason why an amending Act to meet the present situation should not be passed. If a public Act, it might be referred to a Select Committee, empowered to receive evidence. If such an Act were brought in, backed by a petition of the leading members of the theatrical and musical professions, I do not think that there would be any objection to its being read a second time, and then to its being referred to such a Committee.

DEAR SIR, — With reference to "The Covent Garden Theatrical Fund," I thought it might interest you to know that when my father died about two years ago, the only benefit his children received from the Fund was a cheque for (I believe) £12 to pay his funeral expenses, although he had subscribed to the Fund regularly since the days of Pyne and Harrison. My father told me, some time before his death, that he could retire from the stage any day, and would receive a pension of about £300 a year from the Fund, but as he died suddenly he did not comply with the rules of the Fund, which required that he should retire, so not a penny did we receive, except the cheque referred to. My uncle, who died last year, was also on the Fund, and, if I am not mistaken, my grandfather and another uncle were also on the Fund, and, though four members of our family were subscribing to this Fund, the children of my father (three sons and one daughter) get no benefit from all this money, which is particularly hard, when my father died without leaving a single penny to any one of us.

I only hope that Mr. Hogan's protest will bear fruit, because it seems monstrous that the last survivors of this Fund should reap the benefit of the hard-earned money of less fortunate fellow artists, especially as I am under the impression that most of the present subscribers are in very comfortable circumstances, including Charles Lyall and Charles Santley. I am pleased to say that neither my father's wife or his children are in need of any help from this Fund, but it has always been felt by all of us a great injustice that, after my father having paid this money away for years from his hard-earned savings, the only return his family get is the paltry sum of £12.

To commemorate the centenary of the death of Burns, the Scottish Associations of Australia have sent a wreath to Dumfries which weighs 23 cwt., including the case which contains it, and an ice-block. The wreath was deposited at the mausoleum on Friday, with an elaborate ceremonial.

Under the title "Advertising as a Fine Art," the Glasgow Evening News publishes, with some very appropriate remarks, the following letter, which a Glasgow gentleman has picked up in Germany:—

"Travel," A Monthly Magazine,
5, Endsleigh Gardens,
London, July 16, 1896.

The Proprietor,
Kronprinz Hotel, Wurzburg.

DEAR SIR,—In the course of a few days my brother, Mr. Edward Lunn, Mr. John Foster Fraser, a distinguished journalist, and Mr. F. H. Lowe, whom I am sending as the three cycling commissioners of this magazine to cycle round the world—through Belgium, Germany, Austria, the Balkan States, Russia, Persia, India, &c.—will arrive in your town. They are writing a series of articles, both for my magazine and for some of the most influential English papers, and hotel proprietors at some of the principal hotels en route have already offered them hospitality. If you would be willing to entertain them gratuitously at your hotel, they would be glad to mention your hotel in their articles on "Travel," and I have no doubt their visit would attract the attention of all the English visitors passing through the town at the time, and would give you very considerable publicity. They would only stay one, or, at most, two nights. Awaiting the courtesy of your reply.—Yours very truly, HENRY S. LUNN.

In plain English, these three "Commissioners" are making a tour round the world at the expense of all the hotel-keepers who can be induced to put them up in return for a puff. From some of the articles which have already appeared, it may be reasonably supposed that they have obtained their machines and outfits on similar terms. I do not blame them for so doing, if they can manage it, though it is not exactly a mode of travelling which would commend itself to one possessed of much delicacy. But I certainly blame any editors who allow hotel or bicycle-maker's advertisements to be smuggled into their columns on such terms. The tourist described by Dr. Lunn as a "distinguished journalist" (though when or how he has distinguished himself before this occasion is more than I know) is apparently writing articles on this delectable tour for the Daily News, and I would advise the readers of that paper to take any of his remarks about the hotels he visits, the machine he rides or the clothes he wears, for what they are—paid advertisements, and nothing more. The same remark applies, of course, to whatever may appear on the same subject in Dr. Lunn's publication, "Travel." I wonder what happens when the hotel proprietor thus approached does not respond to Dr. Lunn's invitation to accord hospitality gratuitously to the "Commissioners." Does the opposition house get a favourable notice in that case? If so, I would suggest to Dr. Lunn that the difference between this operation and blackmailing is not a very wide one. There is an old sporting novel well known under the title of "Mr. Sponge's Sporting Tour." It might be a happy thought to issue the descriptive articles of these three "Commissioners" as a companion volume, under the title of "The Messrs. Sponges' Bicycling Tour."

A correspondent writes:—

A paragraph which originated in a romancing weekly journal has been going round the papers, which states that when Dickens died Gadshill "passed to his eldest son, who was offered an enormous price for it, but he had not the heart to part with it at the time." This is a ridiculous romance. Dickens left directions that all his property was to be sold by auction as soon as possible after his death. When Gadshill was put up the competition was not keen, and "young" Charles Dickens commenced bidding in the hope of running up the price. However, he overreached himself, and his opponent suddenly stopped, and the property was knocked down to him, much to his discomfiture. The same journal states that when "young" Charles Dickens succeeded to All The Year Round that serial had already seen its best days, as it had never fairly taken the place of Household Words. I happen to know that during the period of about eleven years when Dickens was "conductor" of All The Year Round (1859-70), his net profit from that periodical averaged £3,000 a year, although there were no advertisements, as, owing to some ridiculous fad or other, he would not have them.

The most gratifying evidence I have yet seen of the decrease of crime in Ireland is afforded by the following circular. The Royal Irish Constabulary, it would seem, have so little to do that they just sit down in their barracks and write poetry. The sword has been turned into a ploughshare, or the truncheon into a quill-pen. The Constabulary poet seems to be a man of business, too:—

The History School examinations at Oxford produced some exceedingly funny answers. One candidate stated that the Prussian Army was reorganised after the disasters of 1806-7, by "the great Schnadhorst, the real maker of modern Germany as a military power." Another genius described the discoverers of America as "two intrepid seamen, San Sebastian and Cabot."

I mentioned the other day how two perspiring boys at the City of London School were "sent up to the Headmaster"—and every one knows what that means—for outraging the dignity of their form-master by appearing before him on a hot summer's day without waistcoats. It would probably give a terrible shock to the pedagogues of the City of London School to see a photograph that has been sent to me of the Headmaster of Loretto School and his prefects. The whole party are arrayed in white flannel, without coats or waistcoats, and the only difference that I can discover between the Headmaster and the boys is that the former wears trousers, while the latter have loose knee-breeches, such as are worn for running. The following words of wisdom on this subject were recently put on record by Dr. Almond in a phonographic message:—

I cannot understand why schoolboys should be condemned to wear so much unnecessary clothing in hot weather. Here, when the temperature rises much over 60 deg., they are all in flannel shirts and trousers, no starch, and no coats or waistcoats; and I follow their example myself. It makes us all brighter and fresher, and cleaner both in reality and in appearance. No one here would wish to revert to the conventional disguises. We may not be able to drive Mrs. Grundy out of the world; let us, at least, drive her out of schools.

To which the Headmaster of Felsted School replied with the following sublimely foolish utterance:—

I have never been able to persuade myself that the course which he suggests, and in his school adopts, would really be consistent with the dignity and mutual respect which I still venture to hold ought to characterise school work and the relations of masters and their boys.

From this it would seem that in the opinion of this pedagogue (and he ought to know) whatever dignity and respect he possesses in the eyes of his pupils are entirely due to his clothes. I wonder whether he has ever read "Sartor Resartus."

If a summer costume of white flannel or white "duck" is good for schoolmasters and schoolboys (as I doubt not it is), one cannot help reflecting how much better it would be for those who have hard manual labour to perform in hot weather, or whose work keeps them exposed to the sun. Why not white flannels for our postmen, policemen, and railway porters—not to mention our lawyers, doctors, stockbrokers, and journalists? Why should not our poor friend Tommy Atkins be allowed to wear the same clothing in London in the dog-days as he would wear in the same temperature in Egypt or India? Was ever such insensate cruelty as that of setting a Guardsman to do sentry-go in a bearskin with the thermometer at 86 deg. in the shade? Talk about rational dress for women! There is infinitely more need of rational dress for men. I have often wondered that no dress reformer has ever endeavoured to convert the British workman from his corduroy or cloth garments to clothes that will wash. What a difference it would make in our third-class carriages of an evening!

Here is a monumental example of clerical narrow-mindedness and pedagogish arrogance. Mr. Richard Dunn, the well-known bookmaker, lately had a son, twelve years old, at Heathfield School, Streatham, under the charge of an ornament of the Church, by name the Rev. James Cornford. Two or three weeks back a report appeared in the papers of an Anti-Gambling League prosecution, in which Mr. Dunn was one of the parties. On the day following, the Headmaster called young Dunn up before all the school, handed him a newspaper, and ordered him to read the report. He asked the boy whether he knew what it meant, and the boy answered that he did not. The master then expounded his views about Mr. Dunn, senior, in the most opprobrious terms, and informed the boy that he would not have the son of such a man in his school, and that he intended to expel him. Expelled accordingly young Dunn was. Schoolboy annals are full enough, Heaven knows, of stories of the persecution endured by boys at the hands of their schoolfellows on account of their fathers' avocations or rank in life. But this is the first time that I ever heard of a boy being publicly insulted by his master on the score of his father's calling; and it is difficult to say whether such a proceeding is more reprehensible for its cruelty or its snobbishness.

The important living of Spitalfields, which has become vacant by the resignation of the Rev. J. H. Scott, whose health has broken down badly, is not in the gift of the Bishop of London, as stated by several papers. Mr. T. Fowell Buxton is the patron, and he will find it no easy task to discover a new rector, for the parish is one of the most laborious and engrossing in London, with only a small income and a poor house, while the surroundings are the reverse of agreeable. It is a disgraceful scandal that such a living as this is should have such a meagre endowment, while several City benefices, where the incumbent has practically no work whatever, have incomes of from £1,000 to £2,500 a year.

The Rev. John Wakeford is a very admirable preacher, but he does not appear to be a "judicious divine." He has been in conflict with the Chancellor of the diocese of Liverpool, who protests against his persistently ignoring the lay officials, and his objecting to churchwardens being formally admitted to their office unless they undertake to carry out the old canon which directs them to present "all evil-livers" to the Ordinary, in order that he may deal with them. The Chancellor has been obliged to curb the undue zeal of Mr. Wakeford for "Church discipline," and he has pointed out that churchwardens are not under the incumbent, but are really the officers of the Bishop of the diocese.

"Do you think it right," asks a country visitor to town, "that at a time when London contains thousands of visitors from the provinces and abroad, to say nothing of a few millions of its own natives, the Sunday evening services at one of the grandest, best endowed, and most famous of English churches should be discontinued?" The writer refers, I presume, to Westminster Abbey. If so, I need scarcely say that I think the thing a scandal, for it is one that has been dealt with in these columns annually for years past. There is, of course, no more reason why the Sunday evening services should be suspended at Westminster than at St. Paul's, or any other church in London; and it is disgraceful to the Dean and Chapter that they should persist in a course which Churchmen of all grades and complexions condemn.

A gentleman writes from the neighbourhood of Leighton Buzzard:—

> I am the lessee of a glebe farm, on which the buildings are, and have been for years, in a most dilapidated state, though I have repeatedly called the attention of the incumbent, who is also the owner of the advowson, to the fact. Failing any satisfaction from him, and there being unfortunately, no covenant as to repairs in my lease, I have complained to the Archdeacon, and also to the Bishop of the Diocese (Oxford) with a like result.
> Now, the Act of Parliament distinctly recognises the liability of the incumbent for such repairs, but on my pointing this out to the ecclesiastical authorities they reply that the incumbent has a discretionary power. If such is the case, what in Heaven's name is the use of the Act at all? Supposing the incumbent should get into pecuniary difficulties, as may happen to any one, where will the money come from to repair the farm buildings?

I can only say that the case is another instance of the unsatisfactory state of the law in regard to the management of Church properties. And I am afraid I must add that, as the Church sets its face resolutely against all attempts to reform the abuses connected with its property, there is very little chance of amendment until the natural end comes, in the shape of the resumption of the Church endowments by the State.

The following extract from a local Press report of a school treat at Stranocum contains some valuable information about the aristocracy which has been overlooked by the compilers of peerages and similar publications:—

> In addition to the teachers and children there were present Mrs. F. Hutchinson, The Rectory, Derrykeighan; Master Roger Hutchinson, Miss Ferguson, and Miss Scudamore (aristocracy); also Mrs. Shields, Mrs. Coile, Mrs. Henessy, Mrs. M'Dowell, Mr. and Mrs. Cathcart, Miss M'Racken, and the Misses Holden.

It would be interesting to know whether the intelligent reporter discovered for himself this distinction between the aristocracy and the plebs; or, if not, how it was brought home to him.

I have received the following additional amounts towards Lady Jeune's Holiday Fund for poor and sickly London children:—M.P., £1. 10s.; George and Philippe, £2. 2s.; R. G. S., £2; R. H., £4. 4s,; C. T. A., £1; Mrs. Johnstone, £1. 1s.; Flora and Clarice, Shortlands, 10s.; White Violet, £1; D. G., £8. In answer to D. G.'s inquiry, I unhesitatingly say, This Fund.

Since reference was made to the subject in last week's Truth, a sort of official disclaimer has appeared of the remarks of Lord Wolseley on the Indian Army which have evoked so much unfavourable comment. Through Reuter's Agency we are given to understand that his lordship entertains the highest possible opinion of the efficiency and fighting qualities of the Indian Army, and that the extracts from his evidence that have appeared in the Press are "misleading." After this, all that it seems necessary to say on the subject is that it is a pity that a functionary in Lord Wolseley's position should not have been more careful on such an occasion to use language which would not have been open to misconstruction. Lord Wolseley may have the military talents of all generals from Alexander to Moltke. But it cannot be said that he shares with the latter the priceless gift of silence. It was said of Moltke that he could hold his tongue in a dozen languages. In how many can Lord Wolseley perform this feat?

By the way, are we to take it that the disclaimer above mentioned refers to the following remark, which is attributed to the Commander-in-Chief in one of the reports?

After having served eight years, soldiers are of no use to the Army in India, or, as a matter of fact, anywhere.

This off-hand condemnation of the veteran—hitherto looked upon as the backbone of all armies—may be a stroke of genius, or a bit of empty phrase-making. But, assuming it to be true, is there any reason why it should not apply to the soldier who is a General Officer as much as to the soldier who is a private?

Apropos of the recent question in Parliament as to the order forbidding N.C.O.s of the 2nd Battalion Royal Berks to subscribe to funds for the defence of their comrades before courts-martial, the following story of a sergeants' mess subscription is decidedly interesting. About a year ago the sergeant-major got a commission as quartermaster, and the Colonel took to himself a wife; and it was proposed by certain sergeants of the class who busy themselves over matters of this kind, that the sergeants' mess should mark the two auspicious occasions by a presentation to each officer. The proposal was so unfavourably received in the mess that it was dropped for a time, but the promoters of the movement, nothing daunted, having privately sounded the sergeant-major on the subject, purchased, and presented a set of fish carvers to the Colonel, and a clock to the sergeant-major—now quartermaster. End of Act I.

Act II. opened with the arrival of the bill for the above-mentioned articles. This bill was calmly presented at the next monthly mess meeting, when the majority of the members flatly declined to pay it. Pressure of the usual character was then privately brought to bear upon the dissentient N.C.O.s, with the result that an arrangement was arrived at for every member of the mess to be charged a certain sum per month until the debt was liquidated. The agreed amount was stopped accordingly for some few months, when some of the sergeants again struck against it. Finally, the unpaid balance (about £7) was included in another bill from the same firm, and smuggled through a mess meeting, after which it was sanctioned by the officer temporarily commanding and debited against the mess fund. It is only fair to the Colonel to say that this little matter did not come before him personally, and presumably he does not know much about the secret history of his fish-carvers. At the same time, it is decidedly amusing to see the difference between the attitude of the regimental authorities towards the court-martial defence fund and this fund for a presentation to two officers, which the majority of the mess had twice, at least, refused to have anything to do with.

Here is another little item from the 2nd Berkshire. During last season the band had a weekly engagement to perform on the pier. At the end of the season the managing director of the pier gave them a benefit, which was well supported by the public. Not a penny out of the proceeds did the musicians ever receive—beyond their usual scale of pay for "playing out." What has become of the money? Did it go to the band fund? If so, I would ask the managing director of the pier whether the performance was intended and advertised as a benefit for the band fund, or for the band?

I hear from Ranikhet that a proposal has been brought forward by the sergeant-major of the 2nd Yorkshire at a sergeants' mess meeting, that a special mess jacket should be adopted and worn by the men. As usually happens with proposals emanating from such a quarter, the mess as a body had not the courage to resist, although the married men and one or two others strongly objected to having such an unnecessary expenditure forced upon them. A pattern has now, I understand, been seen and approved by the new C.O., who took over the command of the battalion a week or two back, and the sergeants have been informed that they were to appear in their new garments at a forthcoming dance. There is an impression in the regiment that the whole proceeding is entirely contrary to regulations, and so far as my knowledge goes this impression is well founded. But whatever the regulations may say, it is obviously wrong that a compulsory expenditure of this kind should be authorised, except with the full consent of every man concerned.

By the way, a military friend who was down at Canterbury for the Cricket Week, expresses his astonishment at seeing sergeants and colour-sergeants from the cavalry depot disporting themselves on the ground in patrol jackets. This also, I am given to understand, is entirely irregular, but it is said to be nothing uncommon at Canterbury.

A correspondent who has been visiting Dover gave me the other day an amusing account of the drilling of a party of men of the Medical Staff Corps, as witnessed by him. It seems that for some portions of the drill a horse or a mule was required, and, no live quadruped being at hand, his place was supplied by an empty linseed tub placed on a couple of packing cases. As an entertainment for the spectators, drill under these circumstances may have its merits, but I should hardly think it would serve any other purpose—more especially as my informant adds that the officers in command appeared to know nothing about the technicalities, and actually read the words of command from the Manual of the M.S.C. Perhaps, however, the drill was designed for the instruction of the officers.

In Truth of July 16 certain statements were made respecting the detention of the 2nd Wiltshire Regiment in the Portsdown forts for another winter, and the statements were of a character which, I think, called for an answer of some kind. It was alleged, on the authority of those who best know the facts, that Colonel Hayne was personally desirous of remaining in his present quarters for the winter; that, having sounded the General on the subject, he was informed by that officer that he had better take the opinion of the officers of the regiment; and that Colonel Hayne subsequently reported that the majority of his officers, if the vote of one junior was disallowed, were in favour of remaining at the forts. It was further alleged that the Colonel gave this report without having consulted the whole of the captains or any of the subalterns; in other words, that the General was misled as to the state of feeling in the regiment. Is this true, or is it not? Surely if it is untrue, it ought to be contradicted on the authority of the Colonel. There is so strong a feeling in the regiment against their being kept in the forts for another winter that it seems almost impossible that a clear majority of the officers, or anything like a majority, can really have voted for this course; and unless there was an overwhelming preponderance of opinion that way, it is a most indefensible thing that the regiment should be kept there. From what I hear, it would seem that the General, very properly, had no desire whatever to keep the regiment in the forts unless it was their own wish to remain there. That it is not their wish I can say with confidence; and I really think that the General would be justified in making some further inquiries of Colonel Hayne as to how the feeling really stands among the whole body of his officers.

I rejoice to hear that Sergeant Bryne, of the Connaught Rangers, whose case was fully dealt with in Truth of the 30th ult. has been reinstated, the decision of the court-martial which reduced him to the ranks having been overruled by the Judge Advocate-General. It will be remembered that Bryne, when before the C.O. charged with some minor offence at the instance of a colour-sergeant, hotly remarked that the prosecutor was telling lies; whereupon he was court-martialled for conduct prejudicial to discipline, with the result above mentioned. The course taken was equally repugnant to common-sense and common justice, and it is satisfactory to find that it is equally at variance with law. It is to be hoped that the Commanding Officer of the regiment, who cuts rather a poor figure in the affair up to the present point, will now make some intelligent effort to adjust the feud between two of his non-commissioned officers—both of them apparently very good soldiers—which resulted in the above explosion.

Here is another growl following on the one which I published the other day with reference to the clothing of troops at Malta. From time to time special permission to wear mufti has been given to schoolmasters (both warrant and non-commissioned officers), to the garrison sergeant-major, to two sergeant-majors A.S.C., and one of the M.S.C., and two or three others; but to no regimental sergeant-major. At a sub-tropical station like Malta the privilege of appearing out of uniform is greatly valued, and there is something extremely invidious in drawing distinctions of this kind between men of the same rank. If half a dozen sergeant-majors in the garrison are allowed to wear mufti, the privilege should be extended to all.

On the inexhaustible subject of rifle-stealing on the north-west Indian frontier, an Indian officer writes me that such thefts are much less common in Native than in British regiments. This he attributes not to the greater vigilance of the Sepoy, but to the superiority of the arrangements for guarding rifles. It appears that in the Punjab Frontier Force the rifles are put all together into stands in the barrack-rooms, with a rod run through the trigger-guards and padlocked to the framework of the stand, the key being kept by the Company N.C.O. on duty. It is this N.C.O.'s business at the conclusion of each parade to see that all the rifles are placed in their stands and if any rifle is not in its place he knows the reason why. This N.C.O. is made jointly responsible with the private in the case of any rifle being missing, and not accounted for. Such arrangements may be all very well in barracks, but they will hardly do, as I think has been pointed out before, where there is any possibility of a sudden alarm.

If it is necessary to punish soldiers for the loss of their rifles by theft, at any rate attention ought to be given to the disadvantage which sentries are under in dealing with thieves or suspects. An old soldier told me recently of a case in which a sentry was shot dead by a Pathan thief, who simply lay in wait for him and potted him as he came round the corner. Shortly afterwards a sentry who shot a native in the belief that he was a rifle thief (the man having failed to answer when challenged) was tried and sent to prison in consequence. This happened in Rawal-Pindi about two years ago. The truth is, I suppose, that soldier-sentries are of very little use in dealing with intruders of this class. By the way, I heard from one of my correspondents that a few months ago the Indian Government offered a prize for the best design for a safety arm-rack. Judging from the statements of the native officer referred to in the previous paragraph, there ought to be very little difficulty in designing a suitable contrivance.

The cost of living is a perpetual source of complaint among soldiers of British regiments in India, and from examples which are given there seems ample room for the military authorities to deal with the grievance. Here are a few samples from one battalion. Enamelled basins and plates are being supplied regimentally at R. 1. 8 a. apiece; precisely the same articles are on sale in the bazaar at R. 1. Putties have lately been issued at R. 1. 8 a. Officers' putties are advertised in the local papers by private firms at R. 1. 4 a. Brown helmet-covers are charged to the men at Rs. 1. 2 a.; the same articles are sold in the regimental tailors' shop at 12 or 14 annas. The worst instance of all is our old friend the regulation cane for walking out. The soldiers are charged R. 1. 4 a. for these; they can buy in the bazaar for 4 annas an article in all respects similar, except for the regimental crest on the head. All articles of this kind could, by proper management, be supplied to soldiers below market prices; and if this is not done, I should imagine that it is because it is somebody's interest that it should not be done.

My Military Pillory contains one or two items which seem to call for special notice—more particularly the grievance in the 2nd Cheshire, which is not confined to this battalion, and the objectionable battalion order now in force in the 1st East Yorkshire Regiment, a method of indiscriminate punishment which can only have a bad effect, and which I imagine hardly any one will defend. With regard to the case from Netley Hospital, I dare say I shall hear that this man has been very troublesome, and that he has no one but himself to thank for the punishment he has incurred. But it seems certain that the second dose administered to him is entirely the result of the C.O. having omitted to observe the rule which requires the option of a Court-martial to be given before the punishment is awarded, and I mention the case as one more example of the laxity that prevails among Commanding Officers in regard to the observance of this rule:—

2nd Battalion Cheshire Regiment, Cork.—In this battalion there are loud complaints against the practice of promoting raw recruits, who have got their lance-stripe at the depot after a few weeks' service, to the rank of paid lance-corporal in preference to old soldiers of good character. In some cases, owing to the dearth of N.C.O.s, a recruit gets the lance-stripe at the depot after as little as three weeks' service. He joins the home battalion and ranks as unpaid lance-corporal until a vacancy occurs, when he is placed on pay, without regard to the claims of any privates in the battalion to promotion. This system is not only very unfair; it can hardly be conducive to discipline.

1st Battalion East Yorks. Regiment, Belgaum.—An order has recently been issued in this battalion by which whenever any man is found guilty of insubordination the whole of his company are turned out for one hour's extra drill. In one week three companies got an hour's extra drill under this order for the offences of three individuals. The principle of such punishment has been condemned over and over again, and such orders ought not to be allowed.

Medical Staff Corps, Netley Hospital.—A private who was absent without leave for twenty-four hours and missed a guard, was punished with three days' C.B. Another, who quitted his post while on sentry over sick, and was found in the Garrison canteen, got seven days' C.B. A third, having been reprimanded and sentenced to one day's C.B. by his company officer, asked to be allowed to see the C.O., and was thereupon made a prisoner on a charge of insolence to his company officer. The C.O., after hearing the evidence of a sergeant, awarded him ten days' C.B. In doing this, the C.O. omitted to give the prisoner the option of being tried by court-martial, and the man accordingly made a complaint to the P.M.O., including in his complaint certain allegations against the sergeant, on whose evidence he had been punished. The P.M.O. declined to entertain the complaint, but the C.O. inquired into the charge made against the sergeant. At this inquiry the private was not present, and without having any opportunity of proving his allegations, he was confined on a charge of making an untrue accusation against an N.C.O., and eventually got a further term of eight days' C.B.—making eighteen days in all.

2nd Battalion Royal Berkshire Regiment, Devonport.—A private of this battalion was recently sentenced to 168 hours cells for wearing a dirty serge when guard mounting. The man was wearing his 1895 serge, which was no dirtier than might be expected from the age of the garment. He had the new one for this year in his possession, but had been forbidden to wear it. The conclusion would, therefore, seem to be that he was punished to the above extent for not having supplied himself, at his own expense, with an extra serge, price about 9s. 9d.

8 Company, W. Division, Royal Artillery, Milford.—Two married N.C.O.s of this company were proceeding from South Hook Fort to their quarters in Milford, without belts on. They met the sergeant-major, riding a bicycle in his shirt-sleeves (his coat being strapped to the handle), and wearing white shoes, contrary to Regulations. The two N.C.O.s were next morning made prisoners for being improperly dressed. The sergeant-major has remained at large. What is going to be done to him?

Depot, Royal West Kent Regiment, Maidstone.—At this depot the library accounts are at present being kept by a depot sergeant-major, while the librarian is a depot colour-sergeant. The Regulations for canteens, grocery shops, &c., lay down expressly that the accountant is to be an N.C.O., and that the librarian shall also be a non-commissioned officer not above the rank of sergeant. There seems to be no reason whatever why this regulation should not be observed at Maidstone.

Army Service Corps, Aldershot.—By an order in force at this station, only three men per company are allowed a pass out of church parade on Sundays. There being fifty men in a transport company A.S.C., this means that a man can only get a Sunday out about once in four months. There is no such order in force elsewhere, and it is naturally resented.

With reference to a statement in TRUTH of July 30 that the "camp damages" in the 3rd South Wales Borderers did not exceed 2d. per man, I am told that even this estimate is a good deal over the mark, no camp damages at all having been charged in this battalion either this year or last. The necessary amount is defrayed out of a certain battalion fund which the C.O. utilises for the purpose; and the men have only had to pay in this way an amount equivalent to about ¾d. per man. This makes it appear all the more unreasonable that the N.C.O.s and men of the 4th Battalion should be charged 6d. per head.

CHINA AND GLASS.—Messrs. GOODE, Artists and Designers, solicit an inspection of their collection in their recently-extended South Audley-street premises, now by far the largest and most important in Europe. Messrs. Goode guarantee the excellence of all their productions, and invite a comparison of their prices with those of any co-operative stores.

Upwards of 3,500 Volunteers were encamped on Dartmoor last week; and on Thursday a serious accident occurred, and several persons were badly injured. Much distress was occasioned through there being no ambulance waggon. It appears that there is some idiotic regulation which prevents an ambulance waggon from being sent to a Volunteer camp, so the War Office refused the application for one, thereby manifesting a most reprehensible indifference to the welfare of the men. It seems, moreover, that these wonderful regulations "do not allow the War Office to issue ordinary sanitary appliances to a Volunteer camp for the purposes of a temporary hospital." Last week on Dartmoor two hospital tents were crowded with sick men, and there were no conveniences of any sort or kind, although the articles required are, of course, lying by dozens in the various stores. Such leather-headed red-tapery is really quite sickening in these days, and the War Office fatuities are certainly not calculated to stimulate the zeal of the volunteers.

Apropos of the Invalid Trooping Service, it has been suggested to me that there is great room for improvement in the hospital accommodation on the Eastern passenger liners. At present, whenever a steamer is full, the provision for isolation in the case of an outbreak of infectious disease on board is practically nil. The danger which may arise from this state of things, to say nothing of the hardship to the sick, was forcibly illustrated on a homeward-bound P. & O. steamer last year. Soon after leaving Calcutta smallpox broke out among the crew, and although the sick were landed at Colombo, it was not long before a lady passenger was taken ill with the same complaint. In the first instance she was removed to the "dispensary," which is simply a cabin, adjoining other cabins; and when the adjacent passengers became aware of the state of the case, the patient was removed to a tent on deck. As the tent was close to the skylight of the second-class saloon, the second-class passengers naturally protested against this arrangement, but there was no help for it, not another vacant place in the ship being available, and the poor lady remained in the tent until she reached Aden, where she was landed. Had the weather been bad, the patient would have had to be taken below, regardless of the consequences to the other passengers. On this same ship, after leaving Aden, an outbreak of measles occurred—an event by no means uncommon. It would be a simple matter in building a ship to arrange one or two cabins in such a way that they could be utilised as an isolation hospital in case of emergency; and there need be little loss of space thereby, as such cabins could be occupied when not required for their special purpose.

The papers contained a few days ago advertisements of one of the periodical sales of "old and surplus stores" from Portsmouth Dockyard, and the Royal Clarence Victualling Yard. I would recommend every taxpayer to study these announcements for himself, and calculate the appalling amount of reckless waste which they represent. Look, for example, at such articles as the following. Is it conceivable that they are all good for nothing but to be knocked down at auction-room prices? Or is it nothing but a wanton and wicked sacrifice of public property? If the latter, who orders it, and who profits by it?—

Twenty tons electric cable, eight lathes, planing, shaping, and punching machines, thirty-four hydraulic jacks, 720 gallons olive oil, 120 loads teak and oak planks, 5,509 yards carpet, cabin urniture, &c., &c.

Provisions, including 32,000 lb. biscuit, 22,000 lb. fine and coarse middlings, 12,000 lb. pollard and bran, peas, oatmeal, preserved milk, &c., 1,500 blankets, 50,000 staves and heading pieces, 15 tons old iron hoops, lamps, lanterns, implements, officers' mess traps and utensils, troop bedding, and numerous other effects; also 489 dozen champagne (Giesler Extra Superior, 1884), 1,585 dozen claret (St. Estephe, 1889, and Chateau Beaucaillon Dueri, 1875, bottles and half-bottles).

The wine list is specially interesting, the wonder here being not so much that the liquor is being sold, but that it was ever bought. For whose delectation were these luxuries originally intended? Of course, it may be said that the wine, the '84 champagne especially, will now realise a profit on the original cost; but I question much whether the sale is prompted by any such solicitude for the taxpayer. The explanation given to me is simply that it is the rule at all the Government yards to periodically clear out all stores at auction prices, regardless of their condition, and replenish at current trade prices. The champagnes and clarets are no more sold because they have improved in value, than the provisions, blankets, &c., are sold because they have deteriorated, and the responsible officials care no more for the profit in one case than the loss in the other. The goods are simply chucked overboard in compliance with an established red-tape formula.

Lord Hopetoun has leased a piece of land to the Admiralty at Queensferry for a term of twenty-one years, on which sick quarters for the invalids of the Caledonia have been erected at a total cost of about £3,500. Considering that the lease is for so short a period, this generous expenditure seems highly foolish, as, of course, the buildings will revert to Lord Hopetoun at the end of the term and, even if he should grant the Admiralty another lease, he would be sure to require a largely-increased ground rent.

A report appeared in the papers a few days ago of a case in which a Naval engineer, Mr. Stewart, of H.M.S. Opossum, was court-martialled for making his bedding in a dirty condition by getting into bed in his clothes after leaving the engine room. It was also alleged against him that he had only taken two baths in six weeks. Although the prisoner offered a very plausible explanation of the condition of his bedding, the charge was held to be proved, and Mr. Stewart was sentenced to be severely reprimanded, dismissed his ship, and to forfeit two years' seniority. Readers of TRUTH are familiar with some pretty stiff examples of Naval court-martial justice, but I doubt if anything has been recorded to beat this. The charge was technically one of conduct to the prejudice of good order and discipline, and one wonders to what length this convenient offence will next be stretched. Will it be laid down next that it is prejudicial to discipline for an officer not to use his tooth-brush in the morning, or to wear the same shirt for more than two days in succession? If the prisoner had been condemned to take a bath twice a day and put on a clean shirt every morning for a month, the interests of justice, as well as cleanliness, would have been amply served.

Very appropriately, the Admiralty and Horse Guards Gazette contrasts with this monstrous sentence upon a commissioned officer the punishment of Lieutenant Pearson of H.M.S. Landrail. This officer, holding the same relative rank, was convicted of "gross negligence," for involving his ship in a disastrous collision. He was severely reprimanded, but not dismissed his ship, and he only forfeits eighteen months' seniority, against Mr. Stewart's two years. So that, in the eyes of the naval authorities, for an officer to sink a large merchant ship, for which the country has to pay, and to greatly damage and endanger the safety of a Queen's ship by gross negligence, is a much less serious offence than for an officer to go to bed in his clothes, and to take only two baths in six weeks. This is putting cleanliness next to godliness with a vengeance!

The executive of the National Lifeboat Institution will do well to ascertain and make known the exact facts of an incident that has been exciting a good deal of unfavourable comment in the Isle of Man. The version of the facts which has reached me is as follows:—Two brothers on a visit to Castletown hired a boat and went for a sail. The boat was suddenly capsized some little distance from shore, and four of the crew of the Castletown Lifeboat put off to the rescue, as I understand it, in the Castletown Lifeboat, though this does not agree with the account in some of the local papers. After having been rescued and landed, the two visitors gave the boatmen 10s., which was all they had in their pockets, but said they would make it up to £5. On arriving at their lodgings, however, they found that they had only £4 more in their possession, and this they gave to the men. The boatmen then became abusive, insisted that they must have £5, and for some time refused to leave unless the money was paid. As I have said, it is not clear from the local papers, nor from my own correspondent's report whether the lifeboat was really used. If it was, here we have an extortionate demand made for the services of a lifeboat in a case of life-saving pure and simple. In any case, these "heroes," who this time had incurred nothing worse than a quarter of an hour's row on a fine day, seem to have made a most extravagant and indefensible claim, and to have robbed the men whose lives they had saved of their last farthing. It will be interesting to see what action the Lifeboat Institution takes in regard to their conduct.

A circumstance reported from the telegraph office at Madras may be of interest to the Indian taxpayer. When this office was built, the unmarried signallers were accommodated with quarters in the building. They have, however, since been turned out, and in lieu of free quarters, received an allowance of Rs.10 per month — a totally inadequate compensation. In their place the premises have been occupied for some time by the Superintendent of the Madras Division and an Assistant Superintendent. These two officials are entitled to an allowance for house-rent amounting in the aggregate to Rs.75 a month, and it would be interesting to know whether they have ceased to draw it, or whether they are merely staying temporarily at the telegraph office in the character of visitors.

The Southern Daily Mail, a Tory paper of Portsmouth, has the impudence to talk about TRUTH being "got at" over the case of the Portsmouth mail drivers. It seems that the Portsmouth journalist has placed himself at the disposal of the contractor, has swallowed anything she and her servants chose to tell him, and has then offered the result to his readers as "facts." The first "fact" in the list is that the contractor "interceded with the Post Office for her men and obtained them a further two shillings a week." How such rubbish can be printed and published it is difficult to understand, seeing (1) that the men are not in the service of the Post Office, but of the contractor; (2) that it is notorious that their rise of 2s. came after public attention had been drawn in TRUTH to the atrocious way they were sweated; (3) that the late postmaster at Portsmouth had himself interfered in the matter before the rise was granted. The other "facts" now put forward are much of the same character as this, and can all be disproved by the evidence of the various men concerned. The public can judge for themselves who has been "got at."

I am curious to know whether the inhabitants of Ryde have any cause to find fault with their Parcels Post service. If they have not, it is greatly to the credit of the postmen employed at the work, but certainly not to that of the postal authorities. From certain particulars which I have before me, it would seem that the work, more particularly on the morning deliveries, must be a great deal too heavy for the men employed on it, while the carts are at once too small for the work, and too big for a hilly town like Ryde. One result of this state of things is that on the morning delivery, it is a common thing to see a cart too full to be locked, and the surplus parcels packed outside, at the mercy of any light-fingered member of the public who sees his way to lay hands on them while the postman's back is turned. The departmental rules provide that the carts shall be kept locked during the deliveries, and there ought to be enough carts and men to enable this rule to be complied with.

The other day, a Glasgow Town Councillor visited one of the tramway depots in order to inspect it, but the foreman in charge gave him a very unceremonious reception, and concluded by "chucking" him out. It was explained that the offending functionary "had no idea that he was dealing with a Town Councillor." It has since been proposed "that each Councillor should be provided with a distinctive badge," in order to prevent any repetition of the mortifying adventure of this inspecting Councillor.

It is to be hoped that the town of Chepstow will be free from anything in the shape of infectious disease for some little time to come. At the Urban District Council last week the Medical Officer, Dr. King, made a report on certain proceedings with reference to a supposed case of smallpox. The case had been attended by Dr. Lawrence, a member of the Council, and Dr. Lawrence considered himself grievously outraged by the report and general behaviour of Dr. King. After having intimated as much in no uncertain terms, Dr. Lawrence informed the Council that "he had been advised by a lawyer to defy the Council for the future and make no notifications;" and he eventually left the room declaring that he should burn his book of notification forms and never notify another case, as it would be far less trouble to him to be prosecuted and pay a 40s. fine. It would seem from this that the Act wants strengthening. The Legislature did not foresee the existence of magnificent medicos who would find it too much trouble to fill up a notification form, and would laugh at a 40s. fine. Clearly it ought to be 40s. or a month.

A strong complaint has been addressed to me in reference to the lack of a mortuary at Eton. Drowning accidents are almost inevitable during the boating and bathing season, and when a body is recovered from the river, the usual course is to take it to the nearest public house and there deposit it in a stable or shed, where, pending the inquest, it is left lying upon the floor or upon an improvised slab, just as it has been taken from the water. The practice is objected to by the publicans, it is revolting to the friends and relatives of the deceased, and at times it may conceivably be a source of danger to the public health, for the places utilised as temporary dead-houses are situated in the midst of closely-packed dwellings. Two recent drowning cases have helped to accentuate the scandal, and it is to be hoped that the indignation which has been manifested in the town will persuade the authorities of the necessity and desirability of providing a public mortuary.

Concerning the reference in last week's TRUTH to certain slaughter-houses in the main street of Corsham, my attention is called to the still greater nuisance caused by similar buildings in Air-street, Brighton, adjoining Queen's-road. Not only do these sheds open out of one of the principal thoroughfares of the town, but they are immediately alongside the large and handsome Congregational Church in Queen's-square, from the interior of which the voices of the cattle and sheep can be plainly heard, even on Sundays. Apart from the proximity of the church, the slaughterhouses are in the midst of a densely-peopled residential and business quarter, and the municipal authorities are greatly to blame for allowing them to remain in such a position. Brighton has erected, at great expense, a convenient public abattoir, and with such provision for the more offensive operations of the butcher's trade, there can be no excuse for countenancing a public nuisance of this magnitude in the very centre of the town.

I do wish that persons whom I do not know would cease writing to me asking me to find them situations in this or that walk of life. How can I? Even if I knew of friends with such situations in want of occupants, what could I say to recommend my correspondents? Assuming that the friend entertained the request, he would naturally ask me what I knew of my client, and were I to reply that I knew nothing of him, except that I had received a letter from him, is there the remotest probability of his acceding to my request? One would have supposed that this would be obvious to all; yet I receive so many letters of this description that I have given up even answering them.

Many of my readers will recollect the pitiful case of Fanny Gane, a domestic servant, whose conviction at Winchester Assizes for the murder of her illegitimate child excited a good deal of public feeling in 1891. More than 50,000 people signed a petition on her behalf, and the sentence of death was promptly commuted by the Home Secretary to one of penal servitude for life. But it was generally considered that this punishment also was preposterously excessive in the circumstances of the girl's offence, and the committee which was formed at Portsmouth has persistently agitated for a further remission of the sentence. It is now announced that Gane was liberated last week, and the honorary secretary of the committee, Mrs. Proctor, and the ladies associated with her, are to be congratulated on the success which has at last crowned their efforts in the cause of mercy and justice.

A most discreditable scene occurred at Skibbereen Petty Sessions the other day on the occasion of an application for a summons for assault against Dr. Jennings, a member of the Bench. This worthy J.P. not only persisted in remaining on the Bench while the application was made, but continually interrupted and insulted the applicant's advocate, sarcastically remarking that he was "such a respectable solicitor," taunting him with appearing there "because he got a miserable fee," casting aspersions on his conduct in connection with some local election, and so on. Dr. Jennings also referred to the applicant himself as "a little bailiff," declared that it was "perfectly justifiable" to refuse the summons, and asked for a Testament so that he might there and then "take his oath" in regard to the alleged assault. Finally, after what the report describes as "a regular scene of commotion and noise," the Chairman of the Bench intimated that he would sign the summons. Whether the summons has been heard, and, if so, with what result, I do not know. But from what happened at the application it is quite clear that Dr. Jennings is lost to all sense of judicial decency and decorum, and a magistrate capable of taking such a part in proceedings concerning himself should not be allowed to remain in the commission of the peace a day longer.

There is a popular idea that no person can be imprisoned in this country without a trial by some judicial tribunal, but that it is an entirely erroneous idea has just been shown by the experience of one Varney. This man was formerly assistant overseer for the parishes of Eaton Bray and Edlesborough, and for embezzling the poor rates he was tried in the ordinary way and sentenced to four months' imprisonment. The extraordinary feature of his case came in afterwards. It seems that besides being assistant overseer Varney was a collector of taxes, and it is alleged that he failed to account for two sums amounting to £145. On his liberation from Northampton Gaol at the end of the four months, he was re-arrested under two warrants signed by the Commissioners of Taxes, and conveyed to Bedford Gaol, there to be detained as a debtor until payment should be made of the £145.

That the Commissioners (who are not necessarily Justices of the Peace) should have power to commit a defaulting collector to prison in this way without any magisterial investigation of the charges against him, is certainly a remarkable state of things, and one which is on many grounds open to grave objection. Of course, Varney may not be receiving more punishment than he deserves, but that does not affect the question. A man ought not to be imprisoned until he has been tried and found guilty, nor ought defalcations by a tax collector to be treated purely as a matter of debt, so that such an offence as the theft of £145—for that is what it practically is—can at once be wiped out by the mere repayment of the money.

What amount of ill-usage do the Harlow Justices consider a wife should undergo before she gets an order of separation from her husband on the ground of "persistent cruelty"? Some time back a Mrs. Grove applied to these worthies for such an order under Section 4 of the Act which came into force at the beginning of this year. Mrs. Grove proved that her husband had taken a razor and threatened to cut her throat; pulled her by the arms violently upstairs and threatened to strangle her; put his hand over her mouth and threatened to break her nose; and committed various other assaults. All this, however, was not sufficient to satisfy the justices that the husband had been guilty of "persistent cruelty," and they refused to convict him. Fortunately, the new Act allows an appeal to the Judges of the Divorce Division, and last week Sir Francis Jeune and Mr. Justice Barnes granted the wife the desired order, and referred the case back to the magistrates for the settlement of the amount of the allowance for maintenance. Others of the Great Unpaid as well as the Harlow Justices will do well to read, mark, learn, and inwardly digest Sir Francis Jeune's judgment. Too often their worships appear to think that a woman should not be judicially parted from her husband until she has been pretty well half murdered.

I referred some time since to the grave disclosures which had been made in an action in the Chancery Division respecting the conduct of Mr. I. B. Coaks as solicitor to the trustee in the bankruptcy of the Norwich banking firm of Harveys & Hudson. It is satisfactory to see that the case in due course received the attention of the Incorporated Law Society, with the result that Mr. Coaks's conduct was last week brought under the notice of the Lord Chief Justice and Mr. Justice Lawrance. It was urged that Coaks had already made restitution to the bankrupts' estate to the extent of £15,000, but their lordships refused to consider the repayment of the moneys he had wrongly obtained as an expiation of his misconduct, and he was accordingly struck off the roll of solicitors. To a man who has occupied such a prominent position as Coaks has occupied this is doubtless a heavy penalty. On the other hand, considering the nature and magnitude of his fraudulent transactions, about which Lord Russell used some very strong language, it will seem to many people that this Norwich solicitor and Deputy-Lieutenant of his county should really thank his lucky stars that no harder fate has befallen him.

Amazing stories of the rapacity of those notorious usurers, Isaac and Leopold Gordon, continue to be narrated in the bankruptcy courts. At Kirkcudbright, last week, a bankrupt farmer gave the following account of his transactions with this brace of bloodsuckers. He had four different loans from one or other of the brothers, the amount advanced being in each instance £30. The first £30 he repaid in three months with £7. 10s. interest; the second in twelve months, with £60 interest; the third in seven months, with £40 interest; while for the fourth loan of £30 he paid £10 interest every three months, and the principal to be finally repaid was reckoned at £40 instead of £30. No wonder agriculturists become insolvent when they allow themselves to be preyed upon by such unconscionable rascals as the Messrs. Gordon.

By the way, somebody has sent me an extract from the Aberdeen Journal of July 19, 1796, which shows how effectively the ravages of sharks like the Gordons were checked in those days. It is the report of an action for usury in the King's Bench. The defendant, a man named Prager, had lent one Brown various sums and charged interest at the rate of 28, 55, and 58 per cent., "by which Brown had been plundered, and was now a bankrupt." Brown's creditors sued the money-lender to recover the penalties for usury, and the jury gave a verdict for three times the sums lent, £8,700. Compared with what is often exacted nowadays, 58 per cent. is a moderate rate of interest; and it is a pity the modern Shylock cannot be made to disgorge as this Prager was.

Manchester is happy in the possession of authorities who take a sensible view of that antiquated and asinine piece of legislation, the Lord's Day Observance Act of Charles II. There is an association of barbers in the city which desires to put the Act in force against half a dozen or so humble members of their craft who open their shops for shaving on Sunday mornings. Nothing could be more ridiculous than that a statute passed (according to the preamble) for the purpose of promoting "piety and true religion" should be thus converted into an instrument of trade tyranny, and it is gratifying to find that the Chief Constable and the Watch Committee are opposed to such proceedings. The associated barbers have somehow managed to induce a majority of the City Council to take their side, and the Watch Committee have accordingly been asked to reconsider the question; but I hope the Committee will stick to their original decision, as they have a perfect right to do, without regard to the opinion of the Council. In any event, the associated barbers would probably not gain much by the institution of prosecutions, for hitherto whenever attempts have been made to enforce the Act in Manchester, the magistrates have refused to convict under it.

By way of contrast to the scandalous sentences for the so-called crime of sleeping-out which figure in my Legal Pillory every week, it is pleasant to record an incident which occurred at Over Police-court the other day. Four homeless and destitute wanderers pleaded guilty to sleeping out at some salt works, but instead of committing them to gaol the magistrate discharged the poor fellows and provided each with a plate of food for breakfast. I commend the course taken by this "model magistrate," as the Chester Chronicle rightly calls him, to the attention of the Shallows at Chichester, Bath, Malmesbury, and Sleaford, whose rigorous methods of dealing with such "offenders" are exposed in the following list. As to the other pilloried cases, it may be noted that, according to Judge Colston's eccentric decisions at Edinburgh, it is a more heinous offence to beg for a dinner than to steal one, and that at Macclesfield a man merely suspected of poaching (he was found in possession of a net "containing leaves, &c.") is mulcted in a penalty ten shillings heavier than that imposed on another defendant for atrocious cruelty to a horse. At Derby and Harlow also animal-torturers have been very inadequately punished, while at Bridgnorth, Maryport, Chorley, Wednesbury, and Coatbridge outrageous assaults have been treated with a lenity which is perfectly astounding. The case at Bridgnorth is a particularly glaring one, for a constable convicted of such wanton brutality towards an unoffending citizen ought unquestionably to have been sent to prison without the option of a fine:—

Macclesfield County Police-court. Before Messrs. C. E. Thornycroft, H. C. Yates, H. Philips, G. C. Greenwell, Colonel Thorp, Colonel Stancliffe, and Major Beck. Samuel Mottershead, charged with cruelty to a horse. He was driving an old worn-out horse which an inspector said was "simply skin and bone," and "could scarcely hobble along." Defendant severely flogged the wretched animal with a whipstock, leaving a number of marks on its body. Fined 40s. and costs.

Derby Police-court. Before the Mayor, Messrs. J. P. Doherty, S. Whitaker, W. G. Norman, W. Williamson, W. Hall, and T. Mawbery. Joseph Brailsford, charged with being drunk and disorderly, and with cruelty to a pony. Defendant beat the pony violently with a heavy stick, and the sides of the animal were "horribly wealed" and bleeding in several places. Fined 5s. for the first offence, and 20s. and costs for the cruelty.

Chorley Petty Sessions. Before Colonel Silvester, Messrs. D. Marriage, and R. L. Crosse. William Bolton, convicted of assaulting Thomas Hatch. Without any provocation, defendant battered complainant's head against a wall, and also kicked him, so that he was unable to work for a week. Fined 40s. and costs.

Macclesfield County Police-court. Before the same magistrates. Thomas Brocklehurst charged under the Poaching Prevention Act with being found in possession of a net. A constable said the net "appeared to have been recently used, and it contained leaves, &c." Fined 50s. and costs.

Bath County Police-court. Daniel Watts, charged with wandering abroad and sleeping out. Fourteen days.

Bakewell Petty Sessions. Before Mr. W. Fenton and other magistrates. Henry M'Gregor and John Bond, charged with trespassing on the estate of the Duke of Rutland in search of rabbits. Fined 40s. each and costs.

Bridgwater County Police-court. Charles Stone, charged with stealing a pair of boots. Fourteen days.

West Penwith Petty Sessions. Before Mr. G. P. Bazeley and other Justices. Philip Taylor, charged with begging. He called at a house where a policeman lodged, and asked for something to eat. Seven days.

Sufferers from all liver and gouty complaints, unable to visit the Spa, reap great benefit from taking the Carlsbad Waters or Sprüdel Salts (Löbel Schottländer, Carlsbad, on wrapper). Of all Chemists, and Ingram & Royle, Ltd., 52, Farringdon-street.

Bridgnorth County Petty Sessions. Before Rev. F. H. W. Whitmore, Colonel Wakeman, Messrs. W. L. Southwell, and J. R. Cartwright. Thomas Evans, a policeman, charged with assaulting John Houlden. It was proved that the constable committed a brutal and unprovoked assault upon the complainant, throwing him upon his back, pressing upon his body with his knees, and bumping his head against the ground. He subsequently renewed the assault, again knocking complainant down. Fined 10s. and costs. After being summoned for the assault Evans brought a charge of drunkenness against Houlden, but the Bench dismissed the case.

Edinburgh Police-court. Before Judge Colston. Thomas Keddie pleaded guilty to the theft of a dinner. He ordered the meal at a restaurant and consumed it, but had no money to pay the bill. Discharged with an admonition.

Harlow Petty Sessions. Before Messrs. J. Todhunter, H. Broke, C. J. Bury, and R. G. Johnston. Henry Walker, charged with cruelty to a horse. Defendant put the chain end of a "chap rein" in the horse's mouth, and galloped it across some fields. The horse's mouth was cut, and about two inches of its tongue torn out. Fined 20s.

Maryport Police-court. Before Messrs. J. Ritson and H. Carr. William Holliday, summoned for assaulting Mary Ann Grieveson. Defendant seized hold of complainant, threw her down, put his hand over her mouth, and attempted to commit a more serious assault, but she managed to get up, and he then ran away. Defendant did not appear in answer to the summons. Fined £3.

Coatbridge Police-court. Before Bailie Pettigrew. Samuel Simmons, convicted of assaulting his father and mother. The accused went home drunk and struck his mother, an old woman, on the face with his fist, and hit his father with a poker, knocking him down. The Bailie said it was a most cruel and cowardly assault. Fined 10s. 6d.

Wednesbury Borough Police-court. Before Lieut.-Colonel Smith and Mr. C. Southern. John Vincent, his wife, and his son, charged with assaulting Martha Palmer. The assault was of a brutal character, complainant being pulled to the ground and kicked and punched until she was rendered insensible. She was taken home in a cab, and had to be attended by a doctor. John Vincent, fined 5s. and costs; the other defendants 10s. and costs.

Bridgnorth Borough Police-court. Before the Mayor, Dr. Thursfield, and Mr. J. Anderson. John Donoghue, charged with being drunk and disorderly. Fourteen days.

Elizabeth Harrison, charged with a similar offence. Ten days.

Malmesbury Police court. Before the Mayor. Edward Reeder, charged with sleeping out in a cart shed. Fourteen days.

Edinburgh Police-court. Before Judge Colston. Margaret Butler, charged with begging in the street. Forty days.

Luton Borough Police-court. Before the Mayor, Messrs. F. J. Brown, and W. R. Phillips. John Bunyan, charged with stealing two pennyworth of potatoes from a garden. Two months.

Sleaford Police-court. Before Captain Reeve, Messrs. H. Smith, C. Kirk, C. Sharpe, and W. Pattinson. George Aynscough, charged with sleeping out. Seven days.

Birmingham Police-court. Before Messrs. Johnson, Follows, Chance, and L. Parker. Thomas Wall, a youth of 17, charged with stealing coal from a canal boat. One month.

Cranbrook Petty Sessions. Before Colonel G. J. Courthope, General Scrase-Dickens, Colonel Ready, Major T. Neve, Messrs. E. Hardcastle, T. B. Dobson, and J. R. Diggle. George Bradley, George Smith, and Robert Hurley, charged with stealing a fowl. One month each.

Chichester City Police-court. Before Messrs. J. Caffin and S. Garland. Sarah Crumpler, a middle-aged woman, charged with sleeping out in the recreation-ground. She pleaded for leniency, it being her first offence, and she having tried, she said, to get a lodging. Seven days.

Before the same Bench, George Spareham, a wretched-looking man, charged with sleeping out in a churchyard. He said he had tried to obtain a lodging. Seven days.

Penrith Police-court. Before Sir H. R. Vane and other magistrates. Tristram Lowther Montgomery, charged with assaulting his wife. He beat her with an umbrella and also with a stick. The Chairman said it was "a brutal assault," and could not be overlooked. Fined 10s. and costs.

Here is another proof of the evils attaching to the present pernicious custom of street collecting. Two boys, under ten years of age, were recently brought up at the South-Western Police-court by a detective officer, who had watched them collecting by means of a box from pedestrians. When money was placed in the box they disappeared round a corner and abstracted it. Charged with the offence, they admitted it, and confessed to spending the money in sweets. The boys were supplied with the box by the Secretary of the Howard-street Gospel-Mission Sunday and Ragged School, New-road, Wandsworth-road, who deposed to the fact of the box being firmly pasted over with paper before he gave it to the boys to prevent its being opened. The magistrate ridiculed such a flimsy precaution, and remarked that, in his opinion, a great deal of temptation was thrown in the way of boys by this custom of street collecting, which, moreover, taught them to beg. The Home Secretary has given us to understand that street collections require and will receive "careful watching." I wonder if this case has come under his watchful eye; and, if so, what he thinks about it.

When writing last week on the subject of the poisoning of dogs by a "vermin-killer," I had not before me the terms of the statute which regulates the sale of poisons. I now learn that the Pharmacy Act, 1888, includes among its scheduled poisons vermin-killers that are preparations of any of the poisons expressly enumerated in the schedule. Strychnine being a scheduled poison, it follows that any vermin-killer compounded of strychnine is subject to the provisions of the Act. It can, therefore, only be sold by a properly-qualified chemist, who must keep in his poison-book a record of the date of the sale, the name and address of the purchaser, and the other prescribed particulars. These facts will probably be of interest to those people at Mildenhall who have had their dogs destroyed by vermin-killer. Some chemist in the district, in all probability, has in his books a record of the sale of the article, and it ought to be possible by this means to trace the offender.

It is the sport to have the engineer hoist with his own petar; and it is hardly less amusing to have a J.P. arraigned at Petty Sessions, convicted and fined on police evidence, and protesting forcibly that his brother magistrates have done him a grievous injustice. Mr. W. C. Sparrow, J.P., of Albrighton Hall, Salop, found himself in this position at Worcester County Sessions last week, when he was summoned for riding a bicycle at night without a lighted lamp. Mr. Sparrow called his daughter, who was riding with him, to prove that the lamp had been duly lit, and that it was still warm when the policeman stopped them, so that it could not have been out long. A servant also proved that the lamp had been duly filled and trimmed before starting, and Mr. Sparrow contended that having done his best to fulfil the requirements of the law, and not having noticed that his lamp had gone out, and having at once lit it again when the defect was pointed out, he ought not to be dealt with as a wilful law-breaker. The Bench, however, seemed to think that they must make an example, and fined him five shillings and costs. Perhaps they feared that they might appear in the Truth Pillory if they did anything which might expose them to suspicion of undue tenderness to a brother magistrate. I am bound to say, however, that I think they were unduly hard on the bicyclist. Lamps will go out accidentally, and no amount of police-court fines will prevent them doing so. When there is reasonable doubt as to whether the offence was accidental, the cyclist is entitled to the benefit of the doubt, whether he is a J.P. or a day labourer.

Some few weeks back the cheaper class of newspapers were full of an advertisement headed "Watizit?" The answer, as was pretty obvious, should have been "a swindle." The swindle was started on much the same lines as the "Cash for Brains" trick, which brought a party of enterprising Americans within the clutches of the law last year. The reader was invited to guess half a dozen or so of household words, like "Beecham's Pills," or "Sunlight Soap," thinly disguised by the suppression of two or three letters in each. Any one sending 1s. 6d. for "Watizit" was free to solve these problems, and it was announced that "£60 in prizes," would be distributed among the successful competitors, the first prize being £20, the second £16, and so on. Needless to say, a large number of fools at once entered for this competition, solved the problem, and sent 1s. 6d. for "Watizit?" in order to qualify for the £20 prize. They received in return a little cardboard puzzle introduced years ago, which might be sold at a profit for 2d.

The party running this trick took the name of "Miss Edith Hamilton," and carried on operations from "2, Arthur-street, Bloomsbury, W.C." "Miss Edith Hamilton" has now issued a statement of the "result of the £60 Free Prize Distribution." This is to the effect that 20,128 purchasers of "Watizit?" (out of 20,217) solved the puzzle correctly; that as an equal division of £60 among these competitors would give less than ¾d. each, Edith Hamilton, "acting upon the advice of her solicitors" (a fine touch this!) "has decided to meet the difficulty by sending ½d. to each competitor," and to make the balance up to twenty guineas and hand it over to Mr. Charles Dibdin, Secretary of the National Lifeboat Institution, a copy of whose receipt she appends. By her own showing, therefore, "Miss Edith Hamilton" has taken in gross some £1,500 odd, of which probably not less than £1,200 is clear profit. I do not know whether any of the idiots who have contributed to this little haul will feel disposed to stir themselves further in the matter; but it seems anything but creditable to our police administration that such a gigantic "ramp" should be perpetrated without interference, and I should hope that some attempt is being made to set the law in motion. The worst difficulty in the way is likely to be that by this time "Miss Edith Hamilton" and the rest of the gang have probably disappeared. The circular is headed "E. Hamilton, English Toy and Puzzle Manufacturer;" but there is no evidence of any such business being carried on at the address given.

Two points chiefly strike me in connection with this business. The first is that dozens of newspapers, professedly respectable, should connive at the perpetration of a fraud of this kind on their readers by publishing advertisements the nature of which is obvious. The other is that Mr. Dibdin should allow the National Lifeboat Institution to be dragged through the mud by being mixed up in such a dirty business. It is as clear as daylight that the gang working this swindle are endeavouring to cover their retreat first by stating that they are acting on the advice of a solicitor, which may go down with one class of fools; secondly, by showing that they have given the undivided balance of 20 guineas to a charity, which will influence fools of another class. Mr. Dibdin may say that if 20 guineas are offered to the Lifeboat Institution through him, it is his duty to take the money without inquiring where it comes from. If he does say that, I still think he makes a mistake. In this instance he would, to my thinking, have shown a wiser appreciation of his duty by refusing to allow the Lifeboat Institution to be used by the "Watizit?" swindlers—even at the price of £21.

Mr. Henry Crispe, "late a member of the Royal Agricultural Society of England, the School Board, and other London and county clubs," and still later a resident in one of H.M.'s prisons, is once more at large, and is again calling attention by post to his "lamentable, distressing, heart-breaking, and exceptionally sad case." Crispe now asks for money to enable him to emigrate. A full account of this old reprobate's career was given in Truth of April 23 last, and without going over all the facts again, it is sufficient to warn those gentlemen whom he applies to that he has been for years past a professional mendicant, and is, in every respect, a most undeserving character. As there is not the slightest prospect of his ever emigrating, and still less that he would turn over a new leaf if shipped abroad, the best thing that can happen to him is that he should go back to gaol; and I would suggest to any one who may receive his begging letters the propriety of taking immediate steps for that purpose.

Inquiries having been made of me respecting certain heartrending appeals issued by an old lady named Annie Labone, now of 36, Fowler-street, Liverpool, I think I cannot do better than reprint the following remarks on Mrs. Labone's case which I published some two years ago :—

In her epistles, Mrs. Labone states that she is "an old lady whom the Lord has heavily afflicted," and she gives distressing particulars of her afflictions, on the strength of which she hopes you will purchase recipes for a cough mixture, and a cure for rheumatism at the price of 6d. [To these she has now added a cure for neuralgia at 1s., further cures for rheumatism at 1s., a recipe for rhubarb wine for 2s. (described as "most excellent"), for lemon and potato cheese-cake at 6d., and for Grantham gingerbread at the same price, the latter being "also excellent."] She encloses tracts suitable to the comprehension of children and adults. Her history, however, does not seem to qualify this lady for the cure of souls any more than for the cure of bodies. If those who receive her appeals will apply to the Charity Organisation Society, they will find that that body has been issuing warnings against Mrs. Labone ever since 1877, and that the lady has been in the begging-letter business for over thirty years past. If it be true that "the Lord has heavily afflicted her," she has also good cause to be thankful for His mercies, by which during all these years she has been delivered from the hands of the police.

As I see from a letter just received that the impudent rascal Stockham is still keeping up his house-agency swindle in Chancery-lane, it may be well to give those who have houses to let a warning against him. Stockham has no bonâ-fide business as a house-agent. He occupies a room in the basement of a block of Chancery-lane offices, and calls there for his letters, when he has made sure that there is no one on the look out for him. The form which he invites property-owners to fill up and sign is an ungrammatical rigmarole which (in its latest form) entitles Stockham to be paid a sovereign on the receipt of instructions. When any one who has walked into the trap declines to pay the sovereign, Stockham writes impudent post-cards threatening county-court proceedings if the debt is not settled. No one, however, need be intimidated by him, for the only time he ever ventured to show his face in court the judge treated him as a swindler, and since then he has contented himself exclusively with threatening.

The so-called "Carlton Bank, Limited," is still circulating the objectionable circular addressed to clergymen, to which attention was called in TRUTH a few weeks back. In this circular the "Bank" offers to the clergy a commission of 5 per cent. for disposing of any of its £1 six per cent. preference shares. The pernicious character of this bribe, for such it is, is well brought out in a letter that I have just received from a clergyman who has been favoured with one of these circulars. "I know at least half-a-dozen people," says this gentleman, "who would buy a thousand of these shares, or any others you like to name, on my personal recommendation; so that if I chose I could earn a commission of £50 at the expense of each one of them." Exactly so; and it is because clergymen possess this sort of influence over a certain class of people, who know nothing about business, that this "bank" addresses to them this offer of a commission. The "bank" knows also, of course, that many of the clergy are in the last stage of impecuniosity, and for this reason peculiarly open to temptation—to say nothing of the fact that the majority of them know as little about the comparative merits of investments as those whom they are likely to advise. A more iniquitous proceeding than this attempt to make the clergy agents of a joint-stock money-lending concern I have never come across.

When lovely woman stoops to money-lending, she shows a wonderful mastery of the familiar dodges of the male usurer. There has lately been an extraordinary development of lady Shylocks in all parts of the country, and the provincial newspapers are studded with their little advertisements. Here is a sample, issued by "Mrs. Gertrude Hall," of Manchester :—

A lady of means, knowing the very great difficulty in obtaining assistance from so-called "Banks, Accountants, Private Gentlemen," and money lenders generally, has decided to invest a large amount of money in sums of not less than £20 to £1,000, to ladies, gentlemen, professional men, farmers, tradesmen, and all responsible householders, &c., &c.

It only remains to add that there are "no sureties, deductions, or preliminary fees," and the reader will see that Mrs. S. is quite as deft a hand at the business as Shylock himself.

Mr. "Hubert de Burgh" continues to hawk about his serio-comic tale of "the daughter of the late gifted Thomas M'Nevin," and apparently he still finds Irishmen soft-hearted enough—or soft-headed enough—to send him cash on the strength of his pitiful narrative. The latest of his efforts is dated from 38, Great Charles-street, Mountjoy-square, Dublin, on July 27, and recites that Mr. de Burgh has received gifts of £5 from the Marquis of Conyngham, the Earls of Listowel and Gosford, Lord Iveagh, Lord Plunket, Lord Rathdonnell, and several others. Did these noblemen read TRUTH regularly, they would see the foolishness of allowing themselves to be humbugged by the tricks of a professional begging-letter writer like the brother of the daughter of the late gifted Thomas M'Nevin. But if people are so wilfully blind to their own interests as not to read TRUTH regularly, little sympathy can be felt for them when they reap the consequences.

A fortnight back I published a letter from Mr. Henry Grain, of St. Martin's-lane, in which that gentleman called upon me to retract certain statements which I had made about his clients, Messrs. Perrin, Dunn, & Co., and informed me that if the retractation was not forthcoming, he, Mr. Grain, "must take such proceedings as may be advised for the vindication of his clients' reputation, and the prevention of a repetition of my remarks." To this I replied by pointing out that my statements were perfectly accurate, and founded upon evidence which could not be disputed, and that I was prepared to defend my opinion upon the facts wherever necessary. Since then I have been waiting with considerable curiosity to see what steps Mr. Grain might be "advised" to take under the circumstances. Up to the present I have not heard anything. Am I to take it that Mr. Grain has been "advised" to let the matter drop? If so I would suggest to Mr. Grain and all other solicitors who may be consulted under similar circumstances, that they should take whatever advice is necessary before, rather than after, writing their letters.

This is the third time within about six months that I have been threatened by solicitors, either with an action for libel, or with these mysterious "steps," if I did not withdraw something that I had said, or if I said something which the solicitor did not wish me to say. In none of these cases have I paid the slightest attention to the threats, and in no case has any result whatever followed so far as I am concerned. It is right and necessary, of course, that there should be a law for the redress of any wrongs committed by newspapers; but it does not seem to me right, or even expedient, that attempts should be made to intimidate editors by threatening them with the terrors of the law when there is little or no intention of setting the law in motion. This sort of thing seems to me to be an unjustifiable interference with the liberty of the Press, and an abuse of the law—an abuse to which an honourable profession should not lend itself.

The following characteristic letter has been addressed to me in reference to my remarks on the proposed railway extension from Ballater to Braemar:—

> I may tell you there was considerable correspondence on this matter in the Aberdeen Evening Express in January and February of this year, from which you could gather local people are sufficiently wide awake to the advantages Braemar enjoys in its isolation, and that they are determined to oppose tooth and nail the making of their highly select place a resort of cheap trippers and vulgar people. It is well, I think, that there are still a few places in the country in which one can depend upon being rid of vulgar neighbours. Braemar assuredly is one, and long may it remain so!

Hoity, toity! What a nice, amiable sort they seem to be at Braemar! Unfortunately, being a vulgar person myself, I desire to go to Braemar, and I feel I have quite as good a right to go there as the unspeakable snob who could write the above lines. Let us vulgar people, then, unite and storm this stronghold of conceited exclusiveness. As to its being "well" that any place in the kingdom should be reserved for the private use of my correspondent, or any one like him, my view is that there is no room for such people in this country, and that the sooner they are crowded out of it by their "vulgar neighbours" the better it will be for everybody.

From all that I hear, Mr. Bryan, the boy orator of Nebraska, is likely to be defeated in the Presidential contest, although his defeat is by no means a foregone conclusion. The Silver Kings will provide the sinews of war, for the free coinage of silver would quadruple the value of their mines. Agriculture in the Western States is not thriving. Most of the farms are mortgaged, and it commends itself to the farmers to pay off their indebtedness in a depreciated coinage. Both Western and Southern States are debtors to the Eastern States, and this new way of paying old debts is not without a charm to them. If the Democrats were united, it is very possible that, with the aid of the northern Populist votes, they might beat the Republicans. But they are not. Some Silver Republicans will vote for Mr. Bryan, but against this a vast number of Democrats will either vote for Mr. McKinley, or for a second Democratic candidate.

I wonder that some "platform" is not put forward reducing the interest on mortgages upon farms. These mortgages are practically rent. If owing to the fall in the price of agricultural produce, the farm does not enable the farmer to live, after paying full interest, a general reduction in that interest would be as legitimate as has been the enforced reduction of rent in Ireland. This would be far more reasonable and far less injurious to the country than tampering with its currency with the assumed object of partial repudiation. Bimetallists started the silver craze, but bimetallists have always contended that a fixed ratio could be established between gold and silver without lowering the buying power of the currency. This is true, provided that the ratio were such as to make the amount of silver given for gold equal to the value of the gold exchangeable for it; the objection to bimetallism being that a fixed ratio between the two metals is impossible, and that the cheaper of the two would drive out the dearer.

But the proposals of Mr. Bryan and his friends are very different from this. They amount to this, that a man who has lent a dollar of 100 cents is to be paid back with a dollar of 60 cents. Such a scheme would kill all credit for many a day, and it would be killing the goose with the golden eggs. Individuals might temporarily benefit, but the community would be permanent sufferers. There would soon be a second scaling down of the dollar; for once admit that this scaling down is legitimate, and eventually a dollar would only be worth one cent; indeed, I am surprised that its advocates make two bites at the cherry. I do not care what the coin of a country is, but that coin should be fixed and immutable. This is not so much a question of ethics as one of well-understood self-interest. There is nothing new in scaling down. Kings before now have done it by the simple process of mixing alloy with the gold or silver coinage. But invariably this has been productive of so much financial disaster that they have had to go back to the old values. The Liberals in America are only treading in the steps of these kings, notwithstanding that they have before them all the experience of the lamentable effect of such questionable practices.

Reading a day or two ago some of the comments of the Press upon the answer of Mr. Chamberlain respecting the position of a Hebrew of the name of Sampson and an Australian of the name of Davies, who were concerned in the attempt at revolution in Johannesburg, I asked myself whether there is something in a connection with the Press which renders it impossible for many Pressmen to look at facts impartially. It is claimed by these two worthies that they ought to be let out of prison by President Kruger without being called upon to petition for their own release, because Sir Jacobus de Wet had declared that no one would be imprisoned if all the revolutionists laid down their arms. Sir Jacobus denies that he ever gave such an assurance. But supposing that he had, unless he had had the assent of the Transvaal Government, such an assurance would not be binding on the Transvaal Government; and unless he had had the permission of the British Government, it would not bind us. Supposing that there were a colony of French in England, and they were to break out in rebellion against the British Government. If a French Consul assured them that they would not be punished if they laid down their arms, would any one say that this Consular pledge was binding on the British Government, or that the French Government ought to enforce it? The reason why Sampson, Davies and Co. surrendered was that the Outlanders in Johannesburg were not prepared to fight for them, nor were they inclined to fight for themselves. Do not these silly fools see that by declining to ask for their release on the ground that this would be dishonourable to them, they bring a charge of dishonour against all their friends who did petition?

Li Hung Chang is a gentleman who, having come over to Europe for information, rather than to give information, asks questions instead of putting them. When talking with Mr. Chamberlain in the House of Commons, I understand that he examined the Colonial Secretary as to our precise relations with our Colonies; who appointed the Governors; whether Mr. Chamberlain or Lord Salisbury; whether they contributed tribute to us or cost us money; who paid for the garrisons, &c.

It would seem that he is not really the decrepit person physically that appears to have been assumed from his either being wheeled in a chair or leaning on the attendants when he walks. All this is mere etiquette on the part of so eminent a personage.

There is fair ground for his demand that the rate of duties on English goods imported into China should be altered. The duty is now 5 per cent. ad valorem; but this, owing to the fall in silver, has become a little above 2¾ per cent. Li would have the duties 10 per cent., and as this is for revenue purposes, we can hardly decently refuse his request.

The anti-opium crusaders have always asserted that we force the Chinese to receive our opium, and that to this the Chinese object. The reply has always been that the Chinese have no objection, and that if they wished it, they might forbid the import of opium. I hope that some one will draw his Excellency on this subject, and that we shall learn on the best authority what view the Chinese really entertain on this matter.

On Thursday, last week, I passed a pleasant evening listening to the Lords digging their own grave. Some of the Unionists near me seemed pleased that the Lords were showing that they are not—as is sometimes alleged—mere pawns of a Conservative Government, but that they can act independently when impelled thereto by their consciences. For consciences, read pockets. A more indecent spectacle I never witnessed. Eighty-three of these conscientious gentlemen owned property in Ireland. The English landlords, in the main, helped by their absence. Out of the one hundred and five supporters whom Lord Salisbury could rally, there were about thirty who had taken the Salisbury shilling, and who would have lost their salaries had they gone against him.

The opposition was led by Lord Londonderry and by Lord Macnaghten. The former is a clear and ready speaker; the latter is a species of Mrs. Gamp, always jumping up with a "which I wish to say." Their troops consisted of Irish landlords, helped out by a few English territorial magnates. The Irish were strange-looking beings, and their oratorical efforts, with the exception of Lord Dunraven's, were wretched trash. One of them rightly said that the question was one of pounds, shillings, and pence, and most of those who took part in the debate talked of "I" and "my property." They seemed about as fitted to be legislators as the pigs feeding on the bogs over which they sought to maintain the blighting spell of landlordism. One Bishop remained to vote with the Government. He was sat upon, not metaphorically but actually, for I saw a Peer plump down on the episcopal lap. The next evening, these Irish cormorants appear to have been frightened into quasi-submission, for they had entirely changed their attitude. What a crew!

I trust that this orgie of landlordism will serve as an object-lesson to the country. The Peers and their friends perpetually tell us that they more truly represent the country than those whom the country elect as legislators, because they act without fear or favour in the interests of all. The elected of the nation had passed a Bill, almost unanimously, which the Irish landlords opined might have an injurious effect on their proprietary "rights;" they, therefore, opposed those of its provisions which they deemed might have this effect on personal grounds. If all this does not strengthen the conviction that it is full time to abolish such legislators, it will be surprising. Out of evil, therefore, good may come.

SCRUTATOR.

THE ISSUES BEFORE THE S.A. COMMITTEE.

We are to have a Parliamentary Committee next Session to inquire into all and everything connected with the career of the Chartered Company of South Africa. A good deal of discussion has taken place as to the relative expediency of a Royal Commission or of a Committee. The main objection to the former is that it is not clear how the case against the Company could be brought before it. Whilst counsel would appear before a Commission to defend all and any, it is not the business of any one to brief counsel to take the opposite view. When it was decided that there should be a Committee, the Rhodesian Press suggested that it should be packed, and that no person who has expressed an unfavourable view of the Company, or of any of its officials, should be allowed to serve on it. To this, of course, the House of Commons would not listen, and, so far as I can see, the outcome has been a Committee which will insist upon sifting to the bottom the issues that have been submitted to it, so that the public may have the facts clearly put before them. This it will be able to do, as the reference enjoins it to inquire into the administration of the Company in its territories in South Africa, into its raids upon neighbouring States, and into its financial career.

Public opinion in regard to the Company and its doings has been somewhat prejudiced owing to the attitude of some of our leading newspapers. I do not suppose that these newspapers have been bribed with cash. Most of them are as ignorant as they are dogmatic in respect to everything outside London. They are given to advocate all extensions of Empire, whether the extension be advantageous or the reverse, and so indiscriminate is their laudation of any one who directly or indirectly has added to our obligations some bog or desert, that I verily believe that, no matter what the crimes of a man may have been, they would make a hero of him, if he could show that, by an admixture of ruffianism and trickery, he had performed this feat. I suppose that they consider that in this fashion they achieve a reputation for patriotism, and that, as "Society" is Jingoist, they also show that they belong to it. They had elevated Mr. Rhodes to the rank of a demigod, and they assumed that all that their divinity did must be well done. When the Transvaal raid took place, they evolved everything respecting it from their imagination, aided by bogus telegrams from their correspondents and from news agencies in South Africa. When all this nonsense was exposed, they were not prepared to admit that they had been led into error, and sought to fool their readers by means of articles, in part implying that all these detected lies were true, and in part endeavouring to shelter themselves under frothy rhetoric. Naturally they have objected to any serious inquiry, for, whatever this may prove or disprove, it will at least give all the opportunity to form their judgment upon the solid ground of fact. At present, these newspapers are labouring to show that Mr. Rhodes, Herr Beit and all connected with them are patriots actuated by no personal motives, and that if guilty of any wrong-doing, their aim was so unselfishly patriotic that it almost justified the means that they employed. If this can be proved to be the case, so much the better for the gentlemen concerned; but not only has it not been proved, but the presumption from the facts already known hardly leads to this conclusion. Nothing is more compromising than over-zeal. One reason why public opinion has veered round in regard to the Chartered Company and its officials is to be found in the reckless falsehoods that have been published by their defenders in the Press, and the endeavour, when these falsehoods were exposed, to ask for a verdict in their favour without any real inquiry. Had I been a Jingo, I should have made a merit of necessity, and have thrown over men whose action has done more to weaken the cause of Jingoism than any general homilies against it that might be preached.

After having made clear what really has occurred in South Africa under the auspices of the financial ring, which secured a concession from Lobengula, and subsequently a Royal Charter in order to give effect to that concession, the Committee is instructed to report upon any changes that are deemed desirable in regard to the Government of Rhodesia. I confess that I do not attach myself much importance to this expression of opinion in regard to the future, for it is a matter that concerns rather the Executive and Parliament than a Committee. My own view is this: the Chartered Company ought to remain possessed of all rights in regard to property secured by their concession and confirmed by a Royal Charter. They ought, on the other hand, to be deprived of all civil and military administration in Rhodesia, both of which should be assumed by the Imperial authorities, or by the Cape Colony if it is ready to take over the territory under these conditions. But in either case, the Company ought to pay for everything connected with putting down the native outbreak and all administrative charges as a quid pro quo for their proprietary rights in the territory. My impression is, that so soon as expenditure has to be met from revenue, and subscribed capital is exhausted, the Company will go to that bourn to which so many Companies have already gone. There seems to be no paying gold in Charterland, and a more undesirable place for agricultural colonists cannot well be conceived. This, however, is a matter which concerns the shareholders and not the community. Our business is to see that the country is properly governed, and that so long as the Company retains its concessions, it shall pay every farthing of cost incurred.

As regards the natives, I trust that the Committee will closely inquire into their condition. They were the owners of the soil; they would still be the owners, were it not that gold was expected to be found in it When vanquished they appear to have been deprived of all ownership in the soil, and of the greater portion of their cattle. That they were ill-treated by these victors is probable, for in the main these victors consisted of men attracted to their country by the auri sacra fames, whose idea of natives was that they should work for their conquerors. There ought, most unquestionably, to be some sort of "native bureau," entirely independent of these speculators, to see that the natives have not only fair but generous treatment.

I quite understand that a war against savages cannot be conducted on the same lines as one between two civilised nations. At the same time, I think that all must desire, on grounds of common humanity, that the war now being carried on against the natives should speedily be brought to a close. When I read of kraals being burnt, of women and children being taken captives, of grain being destroyed, and cattle being looted, in order to starve the natives into submission, and of "battles" in which several hundred ill-armed blacks are killed, against the loss of two or three men, or two or three horses, by the whites, my soul revolts against such "military operations." There is too much "extermination" about it, and all the more is this "extermination" horrible, as the object seems to be to enable a few thousand gold prospectors to wander about without let or hindrance over a country larger than France and Spain combined, in order to bring out Companies, the majority of which are more or less bogus. In Zululand, the natives under their own laws, but under our paramount authority, live and thrive. Why should this not be so in Rhodesia? Surely some scheme of settlement might be devised which the natives would accept. As it is, their resistance seems to be the result of a belief—justifiable in a great degree—that they are either to be slain as noxious vermin, or to be deprived of all local independence, and of all property. Into all these matters the Committee will have to inquire; but in the meantime I should be glad to see some one sent out as High Commissioner, charged with the task of putting an end, if possible, to the abominable slaughters that are now taking place under the name of war.

I am, of course, charged with being a Little Englander. It is true that I do not believe in expansion of the Empire, unless some very strong reasons can be shown for this expansion in any particular direction. I do not believe that indiscriminate expansion adds to our strength. But we must accept facts. Clearly we cannot give up Rhodesia. It does, and therefore it must, form part of the Empire, whether it be treated as a Protected State or as a State within the sphere of our influence. Without entering into the general question of the advantages and disadvantages of government by Charter, that government has proved in this particular case a dismal failure to all except to a few individuals, who have made money, not by the development of the country, but by manufacturing shares, and selling them at a huge premium to the unwary. Not content with warring against natives, this Company has kindled a racial feud in South Africa by a filibustering expedition into a neighbouring State. The question to be decided is whether such an imperium in imperio ought to continue. It may be that the Company, or Mr. Rhodes, or Mr. Beit, will be able to show that it ought. It may be that they will not be able.

DEGREES, WHOLESALE AND RETAIL.

It may interest those who have not enjoyed the advantages of a University education to know that the man Sayer, alias James, is still touting from 7, Westwick-gardens, West Kensington Park, as the agent over here for the sale of the degrees of the "Universitas Nationalis Illinoiensis" of Chicago. In a recent article entitled "Academic Honours from Porkopolis," I mentioned that Sayer seemed to have retired from business, inasmuch as another individual, calling himself sometimes "the Rev. J. Rogers," and sometimes "G. Elliott," was advertising as the authorised representative of the "Universitas Nationalis Illinoiensis" in London. This inference, however, turns out to have been erroneous, and the fact that there are two of these gentry on the job is a remarkable proof of the thriving trade which is done over here by the retail agents of the Chicago degree-factory. Sayer, alias James, appears still to entertain, as he has always done, a wholesome dread of undue publicity. In one of his latest letters in response to an inquiry about the degrees he writes:—

> All communications will be held in the strictest confidence, and which (sic) also I expect, also that you will give a pledge of bona fides, for my time is too limited for correspondence with any other intention.

The bona fides which James looks for is evidently that form of honour which is said to prevail among thieves. I prefer myself the form of bona fides which leads those who come across gentry of the James type to do their best to enlighten the public respecting their little games; and I am much obliged to the gentleman who has done so in this instance by forwarding me another budget of Sayer's correspondence and trade circulars.

Among the rest of his business literature, Sayer or James, whichever his name may be, issues an amusing leaflet on "The Current Value of University Degrees," under the highly original title of "Verbum Sat Sapienti." The author of this compilation describes himself as "Flavel S. Thomas, M.D., Ph.D., Professor of Medicine and Surgery (U.S.A.)." The object of the treatise is apparently to prove that if you want a good degree you ought not to mind paying a good price for it. "I am a firm believer in the degree system," says the Professor of Medicine and Surgery, U.S.A.; and, judging from the array of letters after his own name, his faith in the "system" has been shown in the practical form of dollars. In order to induce others to become firm believers in the degree system, he goes on in this strain:—

> But has a degree any pecuniary value? Clergymen will readily reply in the affirmative to this question, as far, at least, as degrees in Theology are concerned. A Church will willingly pay a greater amount to a minister holding the degree of D.D. than to any other; not only because it is considered as a proof of superior learning and merit, but, like a lofty and elegant spire or richly-painted window, it is an ornament and attraction, and therefore a benefit to the cause of the Church.

The true value of spires and stained-glass windows as advertising mediums was probably little understood by the original designers of these decorations. It has been reserved for the modern American to discover the utilitarian basis of Mediæval art. A church spire, to translate Flavel S. Thomas into everyday language, is simply an ecclesiastical "sky-sign;" and a stained-glass window a piece of high-class furniture which helps to let the pews, and, possibly, to raise the rent. On the same principle a University degree becomes a sort of trade-mark, indicating the market price of the bearer's services. Whether the trade-mark is forged or genuine is evidently a matter of no consequence. Caveat emptor is the recognised principle of trade, and is apparently to be the rule of the clerical tradesman. His congregation will pay him so much a year for the letters "D.D.," and if they are such fools as not to know the difference between a D.D. of Oxford and a D.D. of Porkopolis, that is their look out.

But Thomas is careful not to limit himself to the clerical degree market. "Any degree," he says, "conferred by a University of good standing" (such, of course, as the "Universitas Nationalis Illinoiensis") "will ensure for an energetic person a certain income of thousands of dollars a year." Accordingly, "EVERY MAN and every WOMAN, too, BOTH BEING ELIGIBLE, should strive to obtain a degree," not only with a view to obtaining thereby many thousand dollars a year, but for the following excellent reasons:—

> It will give rank and position, which will afford them much pleasure and profit. It will admit them to circles from which they might otherwise be excluded. It will command a deference from others, which is very pleasing to most of us; and it will be a good investment, as it cannot be lost nor its value lessened. . . .
> Not only are all persons urged to possess a degree, but also to use it when possessed:—
> Some writers pretend that an academical degree should not be appended to a signature unless it is at the same time professional, as, for instance, M.D., &c. But would it be worth the trouble and expense of earning a degree that is not to be used? . . . . My advice, therefore, is to obtain the title and use it, if you would attain to the success to which you aspire.

I need only add that the "Universitas Nationalis Illinoiensis" will do the thing for you at £12. 10s. if you are content with a "B.A." and "B.L.," or £15. 15s. for an "M.A.'" and "B.D.;" while if you aspire to become a "D.D.," "LL.D.," "Lit.D.," or a "Ph.D.," the charge is twenty-one pounds sterling. Is it not dirt cheap at the price? And could there be a more impudent fraud on the public? Applying to it the simile used above, if those who forge commercial hall-marks and trade-marks are amenable to the criminal law, is it not high time that the public had a similar protection against those who forge the hall-marks and trade-marks of education?

WACHTMEISTERISM IN HELIGOLAND.

On July 30 an English sailor named Ebbett, one of the crew of a Hull sailing-boat, was walking on the pier at Heligoland, when he was peremptorily ordered by a policeman to join his comrades, who had just embarked in their boat. Ebbett replied that he wished to remain on shore for a time, and some sort of altercation ensued, each party speaking his own language, and neither understanding the other. While this was going on, the chief constable, Wachtmeister Stoffer, came up, and the sailor was marched off to the police-station. On arriving there, he refused to enter, upon which Stoffer drew his sword, and gave him a cut across the head, felling him to the ground. Ebbett remained in the police-station, severely injured, until August 4, when he was brought up before a magistrate; and, after evidence that he had resisted the police and defended himself with his fists, he was sentenced to four months' hard labour, besides having to pay the costs of the prosecution. He had no legal assistance at the trial. Ebbett, who is a native of Grimsby, was sober at the time of the occurrence, and his captain gives him an excellent character.

The foregoing facts have come to my knowledge in rather a curious way. My informant is a German lady on a visit to Heligoland; and she is so indignant at what she has seen and heard of the case that she writes to beg me to use my influence on Ebbett's behalf. I may say that she wrote in the first instance immediately after the man's arrest and the assault by the Wachtmeister, being even then of opinion that the sailor had been grossly ill-treated. It would seem, too, that the lady is not inspired solely by sympathy for the English sailor. Wachtmeister Stoffer, she says, has been for three years a curse to the island and a terror to the inhabitants; and the assault on Ebbett is the third case in which he has drawn his sword and inflicted severe wounds on the very slenderest provocation.

Now, it is not my province to supervise the actions of German policemen, nor have I any intention of opening a pillory for the benefit of German J.P.'s. But when German police-officers commit wanton assaults on British subjects, and slash their heads with swords; and when German magistrates follow this up by imposing on the victims such outrageous sentences as four months' hard labour for the most flimsy offences, then any English journal has a right to criticise this method of administering justice. Our countryman in this particular instance may possibly have been a little indiscreet in not doing what he was told, and in violently resisting when he was taken prisoner. But, so far as I can see, the local authorities were absolutely in the wrong all through. When Lord Salisbury bartered Heligoland the Germans in exchange for certain more or less visionary rights in Central Africa, he did not surrender the right of his countrymen to land on the rock in future. So long as he behaves himself properly, a British sailor is entitled to go ashore there, and for a policeman to order him off the island without any sufficient reason is a breach of international comity. Before the Englishman was arrested and taken to the lock-up, the Herr Wachtmeister ought at least to have satisfied himself that the man understood what had been said to him and what was required of him; and, however much he struggled for his liberty, that is no excuse for laying his head open with a drawn sword. As for the ultimate punishment, seeing that the man had been already five days a prisoner and had suffered heavily for resisting the police, the sentence would be unjustifiably severe in any case, and it becomes a monstrous one in the case of a foreigner, who neither understood clearly what the police had said to him, nor could open his mouth in his own defence when before the Court.

The question now is, can anything be done for this unfortunate sailor, who, I understand, has a wife and children dependent upon him at Grimsby? The individual ultimately responsible for the whole affair is Lord Salisbury, to whom it is due that Heligoland is to-day a German instead of a British possession; and on this view of the matter, I certainly think that it is the duty of his lordship to come to the rescue of Ebbett with all the power of the Foreign Office. The townspeople of Grimsby would do well to bestir themselves on the subject; and it might have a good effect if the worthy Alderman who represents the town at Westminster were to call attention to the affair in Parliament before the Session terminates. Lastly, I trust that the German Emperor, in making his weekly study of the columns of TRUTH, will have his Imperial attention called to the facts. This I hope, not solely on account of our countryman Mr. Ebbett, but for the sake of the whole population of Heligoland—till lately our fellow subjects. With all respect, I would point out to his Majesty that the honour of his Crown and Government is very much at stake in this matter. It is not to the credit of the German Empire that the Heligolanders should have cause to regret the cession of their island by the British Government; still less that German subjects should be appealing to a London editor to redress they wrongs which they are suffering at the hands of German officialdom. Herr Wachtmeister Stoffer is evidently what would be called in this country a "very harbitrary gent," and officials of that stamp are not seen to advantage in small stations, remote from the control of superior authority. The Wachtmeister would probably do better in a position of less freedom and greater responsibility, and I humbly suggest to his Imperial master the propriety of removing him accordingly.

NOTES FROM PARIS.

FELIX FAURE AND THE FIFTY-FIVERS.

It was a funny idea of the Town Council of Brest to have a committee of citizens of the same age as M. Faure to receive him at the top of the landing stairs. The original design was to have fifty-five of them. This would have made a committee-man for each year that has passed over since January 31, 1841. But enough could not be found who were born on that date. Those who were culled represented all classes, from the dock labourer to the pharmaceutical chemist. All were the worse for their hard struggles for life, and looked quite their age if not older. M. Faure was not forewarned. His reception by birthday confrères was kept as a surprise, and startlingly surprising it proved. The President makes a brave fight against the encroachments of time. He is well aided by his valet and tailor. He can, in surveying himself in his armoire à glace, feel that he has not yet ceased to be le Beau Félix Faure. Fancy how he must have been affected as the members of the Fifty-Five Committee were presented! They were a rude reminder of the flight of time. No better object-lesson could there have been of the falsity of horoscopes drawn from the stars. M. Faure, a Fifty-Fiver remarked, was born to luck. Possibly. He was in a way the architect of his own fortune. But it was luck that enabled him to erect the building. Luck drove him to Amboise, and made him an acceptable suitor for his employer's niece, Mlle. Bellnot. Her £4,000 dowry enabled the journeyman to set up as a master tanner, and launch out in business at Havre. As a franc-tireur in 1870 he won popularity; as an agent at Tours of Licesne of Havre, and Remington, he minted money by the sale of arms. What was more important, he made the acquaintance of Gambetta, who ever afterwards pushed him, and got him into Parliament. There Faure's bluff, business manners and a business readiness to split the difference stood him in lieu of eloquence. In committee-rooms "il y avait toujours moyen de s'arranger." Thus he was everybody's friend. Luck served him in bringing him into the Ministry of Marine. He was able to befriend the reactionist families of naval officers there who afterwards were for him at the Presidential election. The ladies were on the side of le Beau Félix Faure.

Talking of ladies, that interview with the Empress Dowager of Russia in the railway train secured, it seems, the promise of a visit from the Czar and his Consort. Whether owing to chance or design, it is to come off on September 18—the twenty-sixth anniversary of the investment of Paris. It is disappointing that Versailles cannot be made ready in time for the Imperial visitors. The German Empire under William I. was proclaimed there twenty-five years ago. To have the Emperor of Russia at Versailles as an ally in the silver jubilee year of that proclamation would be a nice tit for all the tats given in 1895 by the German Emperor. But the palace and gardens are too much out of repair to be made habitable for a Court in seven weeks' time. Symbolism will take refuge at the French Foreign Office. If Nicholas I. still takes an interest in European affairs, what may he not feel should Nicholas II. date a ukase as the friend of the French Republic at her Ministry for Foreign Affairs? It would be a mistake to think the heads of the South German States dislike the Russo-French alliance. They look to Russia to moderate France in regard to South Germany and to the effect at Berlin of the pact to secure Particularist independence. Würtemberg, Bavaria, the Hesses, and Saxe-Coburg have found Prussian overlordship irksome. They did not feel it so much in the old Emperor's time. He was the most unassuming Prince of his time, and bore himself modestly, though with Imperial dignity. He was more the Imperator, that is to say, supreme head of the German Army than the Emperor, as the title is now understood. The overweening self-assertion of his grandson has been the great factor in European changes now going on. It threw the late Czar—whose ruling power was jealousy—on the French side. The Russo-French union aiding, it now acts as a dissolvent on the German Empire under Prussia. Saxe-Coburg, so devoted to Berlin under the late Duke, shows South German affinities. Baden alone does not chafe. But the coming Grand Duchess is a Nassau, and her husband is not a man to stem a strong current. The German Emperor may perhaps be explained by the extraordinary elation of Queen Victoria in the early period of her reign.

It did not quite skip the Princess Royal, who is impetuous and self-willed. But it blooms out in her son. Latent germs were powerfully stimulated by his accession to the Imperial crown when Bismarck, in its name, was overbearing the rest of Europe. Paris is next September pretty sure to bring forth events calculated to tame this elation.

The Court of Appeal stamps Lombroso as a plagiarist. His advocate pleaded plagiarism for the advancement of science. This did not do. Does it take from the scientific value of a quotation to give the author's name in a footnote?

Lombroso is of the Max Nordau school, or Max Nordau of the Lombroso. The Italian doctor is industrious and sensational. He rides to death in unemotional Turin the Greek notion of hereditary fatality. Fatalism is an awesome power in human affairs. There is, I think, no denying it. But I should be sorry to believe it cannot be averted. There never was, and never will be, a Rougon-Macquart family overborne in seventy or so branches by a hereditary névrose. Could a Lombroso of that day, staying at Naples when Lady Hamilton reigned there, have foretold what paragons of perfection Queen Caroline's daughters would grow up to be? They were four, and scandal never touched them. One was second wife of the Emperor Francis II. and mother of the Empress Marie Louise. The other was La Bella, or the Beautiful Queen of Sardinia. She was adroit and politic, but pure as snow. The third, La Dotta, or the learned, was Princess of Asturias, and was said to have been poisoned because her correct life gave umbrage to her parents-in-law and husband. The fourth was Marie Amélie, Queen of the French. If ever there was a domestic saint, perfect in all respects, it was that Royal lady. Her three daughters followed her example. The Queen of the Belgians, who had at once un triste mari, et un mari triste, devoted herself to needlework and piety. The Princesse Marie, who married a Würtemberg, devoted herself to art and her nursery. She died young. Her mother wrote, on learning she was no more, "I have lost a child and God has another angel." The Princesse Clémentine in countenance resembles her maternal grandmother, and is, like her, a maîtresse femme, but is untainted by her vices. These vices were Lorraine vices. The Dukes of Lorraine, on whom the Hapsburgs were grafted, seemed to take their models from the Greek mythology. James I. of England and the womanish Philippe, brother of Louis the Fourteenth, were among their remote and near ancestors. Caroline could no more help herself than could Phædra. But by careful education she managed to release her daughters from hereditary fatalities.

There has been, I concede to Lombroso, here and there reversion in the third generation. It does not always show itself, however, in the peculiar Lorraine névrose. Thus, Prince Philippe of Würtemberg is a morning-noon-and-night worshipper of the god Hazard. His own fortune (a seventh of Louis Philippe's) and his wife's enormous fortune were not too much to sacrifice on the altar of that divinity. The Palace on the Ring, now an hotel, was also sacrificed. The Princess Philippe is only daughter of the late Archduke Albert, the richest Lorraine-Hapsburg that ever was. Charlotte, widow of the ill-starred Emperor Maximilian of Mexico, is another of the neuropaths. Her first cousin, Prince Philip of Saxe-Coburg, was the companion at Meyerling of the Crown Prince Rudolph in his final and most tragical revel. There is something abnormal in the Prince of Bulgaria. His behaviour at Carlsbad after Stambouloff's murder showed at least inconscience. Another member of the third generation adorns a far-off Court. It is a staid Court, with which her whims and fancies do not accord. H.R.H. is Colonel of a fire-brigade. When her husband a few years ago was at some grand Royal marriage, she sallied out in uniform. At the head of her brigade, hydrant in hand, the Coloneless led the way at a fire. One of her self-appointed missions is to rescue lambs from butchers. She returns to her rooms in the palace with the lamb she has saved clasped to her breast. When it becomes a sheep, her interest in it ceases. In short, she is the incarnation of étourderie, but means well. Strange to say, her eyes are devoid of all expression. The complexion, however, lights up. It is beautifully fair, and with golden hair and a nice figure makes her a highly attractive Princess.

I cannot imagine the Prince of Naples mating himself with any Princess of Montenegro. He is a tiny tenorino, with, in speaking a falsetto voice, and has long delicate hands, with the long nails of an artificial flower maker. His nice discrimination of hues and shades of colour ought to relieve him from the stigma of degeneration. Degenerates are more or less stricken with Daltonism. All the Montenegro Princesses are vigorous beauties. They have their mother's splendid black eyes that remind one of a smouldering fire ready to blaze out.

LETTER FROM THE LINKMAN.

IDLENESS, dear Lady Betty, is the mother of invention.

. . . . .

The celebrated composer, Rossini, had contracted to write an opera which was to be produced upon a certain night. Three days before the time appointed for the production of the opera, the impresario called upon Rossini and inquired how far he had proceeded towards the conclusion of the work. "I have not written a line of it yet," replied Rossini. It is said that the impresario then locked the latter in his room, and the opera was composed in time to be performed upon the night that had been arranged for it to be produced.

I, however, am not Rossini. Having left London for the country, I delayed writing this letter until the last minute, and now that the last minute has come, I have little to say, and find it difficult to extricate myself from so painful a situation with some semblance of dignity.

* * * * *

In three days I have made several startling discoveries. I have always imagined that milk, eggs, meat, butter, fruit, and vegetables, and other commodities of the same sort, came from "the country." The experience of three days in the country has taught me that butter comes from Brittany, eggs from various parts of the Continent, fruit from France, matches from Sweden, milk (condensed) from Switzerland, and meat from Australia. Even the flour they sell in the country is foreign! Cream, which in London is common, is almost impossible to procure in the country! How can the farmers prosper when almost every article that they consume is imported, and their exports are few and of little importance?

* * * * *

Mr. Fox, the Registrar of the Croydon County Court, is a philosopher. One day last week the defendant in a case which was being tried before this Registrar complained that he had been "done." "It is impossible to live in this world a day without being 'done,'" Mr. Fox replied; "and the sooner you resign yourself philosophically to being 'done,' the more comfortably you will get through life, the longer you will live, and the better will your digestion be." It would be well if the majority of men and women recognised the value of these remarks. If a man injures you, if he treats you unfairly, or if a friend proves false, why trouble yourself to be revenged upon him? As he has treated you, so will he certainly some day treat another whose mind is less well balanced than yours is, and who is of a more reckless temperament than you are. The latter will savagely pursue your enemy, and you will probably obtain the revenge you desire without having to run any risk. Those who treat us unfairly invariably treat others in the same manner, and sooner or later they are punished.

Why is it that generation after generation has to learn by experience the elementary circumstances which those who came before them have learnt? Wisdom of the world is all but the most important branch of knowledge, and the elementary principles of it have been known almost since the beginning of the world. I suggest that there should be in every school a professor of worldly wisdom; a man trained in the best society, possessed of much experience, who should teach boys and girls the unchangeable principles of this important branch of knowledge. It does seem strange that generation after generation of men and women should have to learn the same things by bitter experience when it could easily be so arranged that in this matter one generation should begin where the other left off. For instance, the boys of to-day commence to learn science where yesterday the old men of science left off; why should it not be precisely the same as regards wisdom of the world?

There has recently been published a book which pretends to mention and to give a short account of the history of every important club in London. It is singular that in that work no notice is taken of "The Club" which was founded by Sir Joshua Reynolds in 1764. In the early part of this year two members were elected to "The Club," they being the 215th and 216th that have secured election since the creation of the institution. By the regulations of "The Club" the number of members is limited to forty. Sir Joshua Reynolds, Dr. Johnson, Dr. Oliver Goldsmith, Mr. Burke, Mr. Boswell, Mr. Charles Fox, Mr. Gibbon, Mr. Gladstone, Lord Leighton, Mr. Huxley, Lord Salisbury, Lord Rosebery, Mr. Goschen, the Duke of Argyll, Mr. David Garrick, Lord Herschell, Lord Dufferin, Lord Wolseley, Sir Mountstuart Grant Duff, Mr. Arthur Balfour, Lord Peel, Mr. Asquith, and Mr. Poynter are amongst those who have been or are members of "The Club." Notwithstanding the importance of this institution, the existence of "The Club" is scarcely known. Indeed, when the Turf Club was being founded, it was proposed to call it "The Club," and it was some time before the promoters of the former institution became aware that the name was already in use.—Believe me to be, very truly yours,

SPORTING NOTES.

ONE of the sporting papers has been so bold as to print a list of the "probable starters" for the St. Leger, upon which race not a single bet was laid last week. The aforesaid list contains eighteen names, but I shall be vastly surprised if there are more than half a dozen starters on September 9 if the favourites go on all right. It is positively difficult to make up half a dozen runners without including such utterly hopeless candidates as Bucephalus and Nouveau Riche. I have reason to believe that neither Regret nor Helm will oppose St. Frusquin and Persimmon, and Earwig's inferiority to the favourites having been conclusively demonstrated at Epsom, he is more likely to "go for" some good handicap. It is probable that M. E. Blanc will be represented by Trébons instead of Arreau, who has a valuable engagement in France just about that time, which he ought to win on his Grand Prix form.

Utica did very well in winning the Brighton Stakes with a heavy weight on her back, and she is probably beginning to recover her form. Canterbury Pilgrim, having been eased in her work since she won the Liverpool Cup, did not start for the Brighton Cup, a race which is really converted into a handicap by an elaborate arrangement of penalties and allowances. Bradwardine had such an advantage in the weights that he was bound to win. The fatal accident to Jest was unfortunate, as she was a really smart filly, and invaluable for home trials.

The Duke of Westminster was represented by Brooch in the Astley Stakes at Lewes, in preference to Bluewater, who would probably have won. Odds were laid on Brigg, but he was cleverly beaten by the American colt Draco, to whom he was giving 8 lb. Ugly proved a good thing for the De Warrenne Handicap, which at one time was a minor Stewards' Cup, and he ought to have been backed by all who had noticed how well he ran at Goodwood for five furlongs.

Gulistan has been tipped by several of the papers for the Three Year Old Stakes at Redcar, but I understand the colt is in reserve for the Baden Grand Prize on the 27th.

Rampion will win a good race before the season is over, but the colt requires to have a man on his back, as no boy can properly get him out. I do not fancy, moreover, that Rampion can really stay for more than a mile.

It is now quite certain that Mr. Leopold de Rothschild will head the list of winning owners, as he has already been credited with upwards of £43,000, and St. Frusquin and Galeazzo are tolerably sure to add largely to the total before the season is over, to say nothing of Goletta and the other two year olds and his handicap horses. Mr. de Rothschild headed last year's list with nearly £21,000, but in 1893 he secured only £2,062, although he had quite as large a stud as at the present time, and it was being managed with the same care and liberality. I hear, by the way, that Goletta will miss her engagement in the Champagne Stakes (where she would meet Velasquez at even weights) and will run for the Rous Memorial Stakes, the Clearwell, and the Criterion Stakes, all at Newmarket.

After Santa Maura had been only just defeated by Thais for the One Thousand, which race she would have won if there had been another dozen yards to go, it was thought that Mr. Baird's filly would carry off the Oaks, but she fell lame, and could not run at Epsom. Then she was talked of as a likely filly to be a dangerous candidate for the Leger, but she had to be stopped in her work, and now I hear that she will not stand training again, so that her turf career is at an end. This is a tragical result of the high expectations as to Santa Maura's future which were entertained during the spring.

It is the same story with Sir James Miller's Roquebrune, who has not run since she made her successful début last year in the New Stakes at Ascot. Roquebrune is put into work, and does well enough for a few weeks, but then she invariably falls lame again. It is impossible to keep her sound, and unless a miracle occurs it will never be possible to prepare her for any race, so that I shall be disposed to anticipate her retirement to the stud at the close of the season. Roquebrune cost 4,100 gs. as a yearling, and she has won only £1,894 in stakes, but she is worth every shilling of her original price as a brood mare, being by St. Simon out of St. Marguerite, the dam of Sea Breeze.

Lord Zetland's two-year-old filly, Puff Ball, by Petronel out of Gale, has won a trial at Newmarket, and she is expected to win a race at Redcar or at Stockton, meetings at which her owner's popular colours are usually worth following.

Last autumn, when many people were thrown into paroxysms of enthusiasm about the superlative excellence of Omladina, of whom it was asserted that she would sweep the board of this year's fillies' races, I pointed out that the produce of Geheimniss have not up to the present time improved with age, and expressed the opinion that we should very likely see the best of Omladina as a two-year-old. The Duke of Westminster's filly conclusively demonstrated her inability to stay by her running in the race for the One Thousand, but it was then hoped that she would do well over short courses, a belief which was strengthened by her easy victory in the Coronation Stakes at Ascot. I hear, however, that the last has been seen of her on the turf, as the Duke of Westminster has decided to turn her out of training, and she will probably be sent to Orme next season.

Mr. G. Dawson's colt, Welbeck, was well galloped at Newmarket last week in the presence of Lord Londonderry, and it is hoped that he will win the £1,500 stake at Kempton Park this afternoon, in which Galeazzo has to give him 18 lb. Welbeck was a smart colt during the spring of last year, but he went amiss, and had to be thrown up for a long time. During the last few weeks he has been going remarkably well in his gallops and, with such an advantage in the weights, he ought to win the Kempton Park race if Galeazzo is not quite in his best form, and I hear that Mr. de Rothschild's colt is not nearly fit.

A writer in the Standard states that the "nominal value" of the Jockey Club Stakes at Newmarket is £10,000, but that last year "it was actually £1,000 less." Any one reading this would suppose that the race in question is not really what it is represented to be, i.e., a stake of £10,000. If the writer had taken the trouble to "verify his references" he would have discovered that the Jockey Club added £1,277 to the owners' subscriptions in order to make up the promised £10,000, and that the winner received £8,990 (including his own stake of £110), simply because £700 went to the owner and nominator of the second horse, and £200 to the owner of the third, in accordance with the published conditions. It is probable that a still larger sum will have to be added to this year's Jockey Club Stakes from the Newmarket Fund. The Stewards of the Jockey Club profess to add £1,000 to the Cesarewitch and Cambridgeshire, but in reality they do not give a farthing to these handicaps from the Newmarket Fund, as the entrances (£5 each) amount to £1,075. The entries for both handicaps are most satisfactory, both in numbers and in class. Among the three-year-olds in both races are St. Frusquin, Galeazzo, Gulistan, Thais, Balsamo, Earwig, Labrador, Rampion, Shaddock, Arlequin, Pas de Danse, Tambour, Knight of the Thistle, Spook, Bournemouth, and Dosser, while the list of doubly-entered older horses includes Contract, Marco, Count Schomberg, Briardale, Bard of Avon, Filepa, Omnium II., Portmarnock, Victor Wild, Bride of the Sea, Sir Visto, Indian Queen, Ramapo, Cypria, Laodamia, and Dormeuse. Portmarnock has been for some time favourite for the long race at the lists, and Indian Queen has been most in demand for the Cambridgeshire. St. Michael, who has been a public fancy for the short race, is not entered. It is odd to find Ramapo entered for the Cesarewitch, as he has been proclaimed a non-stayer, and nobody can have expected to find Laodamia in the list for that race.

Among the animals which are only in the Cesarewitch are South Australian, Aborigine, Love Wisely, Mademoiselle de Limermont, Trébons, Rock Dove (who won the race last year), The Rush, Fiesole, and Son o' Mine.

The following are only in the Cambridgeshire:—Canterbury Pilgrim, Helm, Red Heart, Paris III., Ghislaine, Clorane, Galop filly, Regret, Zébre, Vigoureux, Champaubert, Encounter, Arreau, Raconteur, Kirkconnel, Bay Ronald, The Tup, Kilcock, Laveno, Speedwell, Quarrel, Avilion, Hebron, Teufel, La Sagesse, and Roquebrune. Of course, Victor Wild will be the topweight in both handicaps as a matter of certainty, and it will be interesting to see how Major Egerton handicaps St. Frusquin and Regret with Canterbury Pilgrim and Thais. It is a fact worthy to be noted that M. E. Blanc has put Arreau, winner of the Grand Prix, only in the Cambridgeshire, while he is represented in the Cesarewitch by Trébons. Vigoureux won a race at Deauville last week, while some other French horses which are entered for these handicaps were beaten there. It is odd that Persimmon has not been entered for either race, and the names of Whittier and Keelson are also missing. Mr. Russel's horse, who is unsound, has been one of the early fancies for the Cambridgeshire. Speedwell's name was not expected to appear, and I fancy there is very little chance of his standing a preparation.

Any alteration at Newmarket must always be forced upon the authorities, who have certainly shown themselves to be among the most determined enemies of every species of salutary change. It has been over and over again pointed out that the conditions for the Cesarewitch and for the Cambridgeshire should include a penalty for the winner of any weight-for-age stake after the publication of the weights. At present the Leger winner has to carry a fixed weight, and there are penalties for winners of handicaps. If, however, an animal wins the Doncaster Stakes, or the Park Hill Stakes, or the Great Foal Stakes, no penalty is incurred. Still more preposterous is the idea that the winner of the Jockey Club Stakes of £10,000 would have to carry no extra weight, although the penalty for winning a trumpery handicap of £450 is actually 10 lb. The fact is that these penalties should be for winners of any races whatever, and it may be hoped that this obviously-desirable alteration will be made next year.

Lord Londonderry will very likely win the Wilton Plate at Redcar this afternoon with Helen Mary, by St. Serf out of Helen Mar, which did well in a gallop at Newmarket last week.

Next week there will be racing at Stockton, Wolverhampton, and Nottingham. There is always some interesting sport at Stockton, which is a meeting that is fortunate in being zealously supported by several powerful stables. The Wynyard Plate of £600 will probably be won by Lord Londonderry's Cyrenian, by St. Simon out of Daisy Chain, who has had a fairly good trial. There are ninety-nine entries for the Hardwicke Stakes of £500, and the name of Cyrenian again appears in the list. The Great Northern Leger of £1,000 has fifty acceptances out of an original entry of eighty-seven. A very moderate lot of animals are engaged in the event, not one of the Derby or Oaks placed lot having been entered. Lord Durham will very likely win with his filly Drip, by Barcaldine out of Drizzle, who has been specially prepared for this race. Lord Derby will be near winning the Stockton Handicap with Dingle Bay, who is very well in; and Mr. Lambton has a good chance of securing the Steward's Cup with Red Hat, as the horses engaged in that race are a very moderate lot. Son o' Mine is fully prepared to run for the Stockton Handicap, but Lord Durham's beast cannot now be trusted to do his best. He has grievously degenerated since his two-year-old days.

The richest event in the Stockton programme is the Durham County Breeders' Produce Plate of £1,250, for which event there were originally 117 entries, and sixty-four three-year-olds are left in. They are a very bad lot; the best being Nicholas, Amaryllis, Serfdom, and Nenemoosha; their previous running at Stockton and also at Redcar should indicate the winner of this race.

I hear that Nouveau Riche is to run for the Great Fakenham Stakes on the 17th, and it will be interesting to see whether he can beat Regret over this course, which is three-quarters of a mile further than the best distance of the Duke of Westminster's colt. There is no object in reserving Nouveau Riche for the Leger, as he can have no chance for that race while the favourites are well.

IS THE "PRO." WORTHY OF HIS HIRE?

There seems to have been a lot of unnecessary excitement over the conduct of the five professional cricketers who refused to play except on certain terms for England against Australia. In the absence of the publication of the actual correspondence between the parties, all that took place appears to have been that the five men were invited, without any conditions being named, to play, and they said they would if they were paid £20 for the match and expenses. Thereupon the Committee of the Surrey C.C., in high dudgeon, wire to other men, who agree to play on the ordinary terms of £10 for the match and expenses. At the same time, the papers are placarded with "Strike of English Professionals," and in most cases a tirade of editorial wrath is poured upon their benighted heads, and many correspondents have written asking me to give them, the cricketers, a bit of my mind. I am ready and willing to do so. The facts I have stated are drawn from a bare official letter. The arguments used against the professionals are that by not speaking until the last moment they have attempted to corner and coerce the Committee; that they should have chosen some more opportune moment for speaking; that their conduct, especially in the case of Lohmann, who has recently had a benefit, is very unsportsmanlike; that their demands were not couched in a sufficiently deferential tone, and finally that the Surrey C.C. was bound on principle to reject the demands.

Now to deal with these arguments in their order. First, as to the charge of coercing, it must be borne in mind that the invitation to play was only received on the Saturday week before the match, and as soon as it did come the reply of the players was at once despatched. What else could the players do? If they had intimated that they expected certain terms before an invitation came the obvious answer would have been, "Wait until you are asked. It is scandalous that the players of England should take up the position you have done and practically select yourselves for the team." They asked for the terms to which they considered themselves entitled as soon as they possibly could do so. This first argument is, in short, about as rotten as the next one that they should have chosen some other time for speaking. Goodness only knows when they ought to have spoken. The fact that no one considers the remuneration they ask excessive is evidence of their extreme moderation in not asking before, and it is obvious from what has been said that they could not have asked before so far as this, the final test match, is concerned. These considerations dispose at once of the charge of unsportsmanlike conduct. As to Lohmann, his benefit was a well-deserved reward for work done, and it is extremely unsportsmanlike to regard it as a reward for favours to come, and to make it a basis for refusing him and others the payment that is their due. The last argument—that of principle—is advanced in all seriousness by the Surrey Committee and Mr. Alcock, their secretary. Apparently the principle of loyalty to other clubs is the basis of this argument. It is said that if they had offered other terms than those given in the other matches, they would have been accused of attempting to buy over players. I suppose Surrey, with its large means, has never been able to buy, nor has, in fact, ever been guilty of buying other players. The argument will not hold water. The only antagonism would have been with the clubs that have the test matches on their grounds. Are the M.C.C. and the Lancashire County so near the brink of bankruptcy that they could not have afforded the same terms, and would have been ruined by the opulent generosity of the Surrey Club? Really, one would have expected more reasonable arguments to justify the tirade of abuse that these players have been subjected to. The fact that they have since put themselves in the hands of the Committee merely shows that, rather than let the English team be weakened they are perhaps willing to forego their just demands. Their case is a very strong one. There is not the least doubt that they are paid, on the £10 scale, less than many amateurs receive either in cash payments for expenses or by holding sinecure offices. How much, too, will the Australian amateurs pocket by the tour and by the big gates at these test games? The "pros." have to make their living and put something by in a comparatively short lifetime. Considering the big gates they draw they are not over paid. In a representative match about which so much is written, and over which the public both here and in the colonies is most excited, the final and deciding game of the three test games, it is surely not too much to expect that the "pros." should receive generous treatment. As compared with this game, the other two played at Lord's and Manchester sink into insignificance. Cricket is with these men their business and their livelihood. Test their position by the same test you would apply to any other man in any other walk in life whom you employ to do something for you. The affair is an important one, and whether it be a case in the law courts or a piece of business to be negotiated in the City or an operation to be performed by a surgeon, your ordinary business instincts tell you that you must pay your leader, surgeon, or City man handsomely if you want the best of his skill, time, or attention. It is the same with these "pros." They will, no doubt, do their best. But the knowledge that they are being well treated cannot but fail to have a beneficial effect. Association Cup teams are very differently treated. Every "pro." who played deserved his £20.

These so-called strikers acted like business men. They were asked to play, no terms being mentioned. They at once replied saying they would on certain terms, which no one has considered unreasonable or excessive. To attempt, therefore, to justify the conduct of the Surrey Committee for its promptitude in getting others to play is clearly ridiculous. I have small respect for any "principle" that involves the refusal of an admittedly just demand. Perhaps the tone of the "pros'." letter was not so deferential as the communications which the Surrey Committee are accustomed to have addressed to them on all occasions; for example, when their fellow-members criticised their ruling that no football should be played on the ground. In consequence of which decision their printer sued the club in the County Court for damages. The claim, except as to amount, was in law irresistible. But the committee had to go to the County Court before they did what they protested they were always so anxious to do, namely, only what was just and fair, and then they consented to a verdict against them for £25 and costs. If there be any truth in the saying Ex uno disce omnes, one cannot, from that example, be very favourably impressed by the tact of a committee which, at all events, in the case under consideration, never saw the men whose demands they admit to be reasonable, but which they, on principle, refused.

Additional facts which have come to light since the foregoing was written show that after the match at Lord's a request for further remuneration was made and refused. After the game at Manchester Abel and Richardson asked for five pounds for expenses. This request has not been acceded to, and the letter containing it was not considered until the Thursday before the final game. In the meanwhile no hint was given that its form was unsuitable. What tact this shows! Finally it is proved that the Spa, Belgium.—Cercle des Etrangers, with Roulette, &c. For details apply to Secretary. Racing, tennis, and pigeon shooting. Theatre and concerts. Superb bathing establishment.

"pros." are paid no more than certain amateurs receive for expenses. All of which strengthens the "pros.'" case enormously.

No wonder the partisans of Essex are triumphant. People thought their victory over Yorkshire a fluke, but now there is the little victory over Surrey to be explained away. Fane played most correctly, and the experience he is gaining is standing him in good stead. Russell hit vigorously, and Owen batted most steadily. Then the bowling of Mead and Bull, backed up by as good fielding as one could wish to see, settled the Surrey men. No wonder the crowd went wild with delight; and if the financial position of the club is not now assured, there are no sportsmen in Essex. Certainly my Essex friend is justified. At the beginning of the season he wrote: "You may smile, but we shall be much higher up than many think." Gloucester have every reason to be pleased. Grace made a huge score against Sussex. It is twenty years since he made 300 in a first-class match, and this gave his team a victory. The Middlesex men, for whom O'Brien played two good innings, and Lucas at last showed his old form, looked like making a draw. But Jessop hit tremendously hard and won the match. Sewell and Champain, the Cheltenham boy, also played excellent innings, and the latter's hitting all round the wicket showed great promise. The Canterbury week was not a success for Kent. At the same time there was some good cricket. The fine innings of Rashleigh and Mason made Lancashire follow on, and then MacLaren showed his best form, and was not out with a big score, the game being a draw. Against the Australians the county batting was disappointing, Burnup alone doing anything worth mentioning. Of course Trott had won the toss, and the team gave its usual exhibition of batting strength, Jones's hitting being most vigorous. Then Trumble's bowling proved fatal, and the Colonists kept their unbeaten record in county games with ease.

At the council meeting of the Football Association it was decided that in cup competitions disputes shall be referred to the council, and that each club may call witnesses, but no barrister or solicitor shall represent a club at the hearing of a protest unless he be the secretary of the club concerned. No doubt, the Bar Committee and the Incorporated Law Society will at once make representations to the Lord Chancellor as to this unwarrantable limitation on their services. At the same time enterprising but briefless juniors might apply for secretaryships to these larger clubs, and, no doubt, their services would soon be worth a large retainer.

The report of the Amateur Athletic Association meeting, at which Bradley, Downer, and Bacon were suspended for receiving cash payment, is not pleasant reading. At the same time, in justice to the men themselves, further details should be given. All the public is told is that well-known northern clubs and five or six well-known London clubs paid moneys. Blair's defence was that he was only nineteen, and, being offered money to run in London by honorary secretaries of prominent metropolitan clubs, he did not think he was doing wrong in taking it. He was then reinstated as an amateur. But who were these honorary secretaries? They are the real offenders, because they hold the money bags. They are well known. But neither they nor their clubs are suspended. It is farcical to whitewash the devil and whip the sinner. But this is exactly what the A.A.A. is doing.

The Royal Yacht Squadron produced its annual farce in the squadron race for the Queen's Cup. It is true Meteor and Britannia entered, but then the handicap is framed to give all yachts, save the mark, a chance. The result was Mohawk won with eighty minutes start. It was in a pretty piece of work to windward that the Prince's yacht beat the German Emperor's, which next day lost her bowsprit, but as all the other yachts mistook the sailing instructions the race was off. This in the way of blunders was a remarkable coincidence. In the other races Ailsa with a good whole sail wind more than held her own with Britannia.

MAMMON.

From MOSES MOSS to BENJAMIN BOSS.

Sunday.

MY DEAR BEN,—The hopes which had been rife in some quarters that matters would improve to some extent after the Bank holiday have been disappointed, chiefly owing to another of those disagreeable accidents which sometimes alter the whole course of the market. A heavy failure in Chicago furnished fresh evidence of the dangerous condition into which the United States are drifting, and it appears to have knocked away some of the chief supports of the Yankee market, already weakened by the dismal prospect of the Presidential election and the precarious position of the currency question.

The Position on the Stock Exchange.

The firm of Moore Brothers, of Chicago, would, no doubt, have come to grief sooner or later. This has ever been the fate of daring speculators who monopolise some particular stock, and rig it to an absurd price. In the present instance the growing discouragement with regard to the political future of the country, and the consequent aggravation of the financial position, sufficed to prick the bubble. It could hardly have burst at a worse moment, in view of the holiday season and of the utter indisposition to undertake new commitments at present prevailing. The complete demoralisation which followed in the Yankee market, and which culminated in a fall of the active list of prices 2 to 7 dols., has unfortunately affected the whole of the other markets adversely—unduly so, to my mind. Why should Home Rails, with improved dividends and excellent traffics, follow the lead of Yankee Rails? Why should the Kaffir Circus be troubled by this American collapse, when affairs in the Transvaal generally are mending, and an important increase in the output of the Witwatersrand mines is only a question of months? Foreigners have a little trouble of their own in the shape of the upheaval in Crete. But the Eastern Question has always been with us, and there is every prospect of the difficulty being again patched up without any fear of the disruption of the effete Ottoman Empire just yet. With other South Americans, Argentines have eased off, although the gold premium is lower, and the unification scheme is now certain to become law. The fact is that the American scare has caused a number of timid operators to throw over their holdings of other securities prior to the settlement, and, unless other untoward events should happen, a marked recovery may be anticipated in all stocks which are not directly affected by the débacle in the States. The West Australian market, by the way, has withstood the various weakening influences remarkably well, and an active business has in many instances been accompanied by a rise in prices. It is needless to say that the unusually promising position of the gold-mining industry in that colony fully justifies this manifestation of exceptional strength.

Home Rails Unduly Depressed.

If there were in existence a big "Bull" account in American Railroad stocks one could understand a sympathetic downward movement in Home Rails. But the account in Yankees is unusually small, and the position of Home Rails is remarkably favourable. The announcements of the North Western dividend at the rate of $6\frac{1}{4}$ per cent. per annum, against $5\frac{1}{4}$ per cent. last year, and of the Great Western dividend at the rate of $4\frac{3}{4}$ per cent. against $3\frac{1}{4}$ per cent. last year have just completed the list of favourable dividends, and both were fully up to expectations. It is true that prices have experienced a marked advance, owing to a strong investment demand, but the causes which produced this demand, the dearth of good investment stocks, and the plethora of money continue in operation. Again, something like £900,000 more is available for distribution as dividend on the Ordinary stocks of the English and Irish lines than for the first half of 1895, and traffics are still showing considerable increases, although the comparison is now with better returns in 1895. Least of all can I consider the relapse in Brighton "A" and Dover "A" as justified, and I have no doubt that these stocks will recover sharply in the near future. The reaction in the stocks of the Heavy lines was in part due to the disappointment felt by certain operators at the abstention on the part of the Directors of the North-Western and Great Western Companies from any remark concerning the splitting of the stocks in question. The subject is to be brought up at the North Western meeting, but present indications seem to show that a great deal of pressure will yet have to be exercised upon the respective Boards before they will accede to the wishes of that section of the shareholders which is so strongly in favour of the sub-division of stocks. Interest now chiefly centres in the Scotch stocks, as their fiscal year has come to an end, and dividend announcements may shortly be expected. I have repeatedly pointed out that the Caledonian and North British have both done exceedingly well. The Caledonian increase for the six months amounted to £107,212, that of the North British to £96,649, so that a substantial increase in the dividend for the past half-year is assured. Now that the issue of new Caledonian stock has been announced, and the amount issued is shown to be small, the only unfavourable feature affecting these lines has passed away. Again, the opening of the Central Glasgow Railway will greatly improve matters, and "Coras" (Caledonian Deferred Ordinary) might easily have an important rise. Why North British Deferred should lag behind at about 50 is one of those things no "fellah" can understand. There is, I am told, no immediate intention of issuing new North British stock, while dividend prospects are very good indeed. I maintain the view that there is more room for a rise of a good many points in North British Deferred than in "Coras." For the last ten days the passenger traffic on both lines has been enormous, and I am told on very good authority that it will be good (even with last year's traffic to compare with) for the whole of this month. Dividend estimates in the current issue of the Glasgow Herald put the Caledonian dividend for the past half-year at the rate of 5½ per cent., as against 4½ per cent. for the corresponding half of 1895. The same authority estimates the North British dividend for this period at the rate of 5¼ per cent., as against 4 per cent. for the first half-year of 1895.

The Collapse in Yankee Rails.

I have for some time expressed the opinion that the unsettled condition of the American Railroad market would continue up to the Presidential election. I also said last week that the time for making speculative purchases had hardly come, as political accidents might any day counteract a moderate advance, which had then come about. This anticipation has only too soon been fulfilled through the failure of Moore Bros., of Chicago, which appears to have disorganised the Chicago Stock Exchange, thereby giving the Grangers a knockdown blow, which has brought Milwaukee down to 62⅝, against the highest price touched this year of 81⅝. Again, Louisville have been down below 40, as against 56¾, the highest price reached during the present year; while other declines, although perhaps not in the same proportion, are heavy enough in all conscience. I have said all along, when commenting upon the remarks of my New York contemporaries, who were relying so much upon the alleged London purchase of American stocks, that these were not effected for account of the public here, but were chiefly transfers of stock from New York, so as to create the impression that English investors were buying. The only exception of which I know was the operations of the South Africans hailing from the Angel Court Club. These gentlemen have, however, been so well peppered in their attempt to retrieve their fortunes in Yankee Rails, that they are not likely to touch them again for a good long time to come. The market is at present receiving a very severe shake-out, and the demoralisation is so great, that even the big houses are afraid to interfere. It is, moreover, their policy to give the Democratic politicians, who are responsible for the general collapse, a severe object-lesson. While I still consider investment purchases inadvisable, I yet would strongly urge holders of American stocks not to throw them away now, as we cannot be far from bottom quotations in most stocks now. The 'Bears" have, moreover, become so venturesome, that they run the risk of being caught some day. In the meantime the bankers in New York, who are doing their utmost to maintain the Treasury reserve, may be considered as good men struggling with adversity. What would have become of the market without their aid it is difficult to say, as the strain on the stock market was becoming intense, and something was needed to check the flood of liquidation, which unfortunately, however, has now again broken all bounds. Canadian Pacifics have suffered with the Yankee Market, although not in the same proportion, and have so far dropped to 56½; while Grand Trunks have displayed great steadiness amidst the general slump.

Foreigners and South Americans.

The Foreign market has been chiefly affected by fears that the Cretan difficulty might assume large proportions, and bring about a general international scare. There is, however, so far nothing in the attitude of any of the great Powers to indicate a wish on their part to force a disruption of the Ottoman Empire, and it is probable that the evil day will again be postponed. All the same, I should be very sorry to hold Turks to any extent, as they must sooner or later experience a very severe spasm. Ottoman Banks have also been under a cloud, and the speculation in Rio Tinto has suffered another collapse. Spain is again in the throes of a financial dilemma, brought on by the very heavy expense of the insurrection in Cuba, and the only surprise to me is that Spanish still maintain themselves at 62⅞. The weakness in interbourse securities has also spread to Argentine Government stocks, notwithstanding the further fall in the gold premium in Buenos Ayres to 176, and the passing of the unification scheme of the Argentine debt. Uruguay bonds are also lower at 49⅛, and the new Five per Cent. loan, which has now received a settlement and a quotation, stands at 69 for the scrip all paid, at which it is a remarkably cheap investment. Mexican Sixes have also eased off slightly, and there has been no movement in the various Central and South American rubbish stocks. Even Colombians remain at 18½ only, although it is reported that the proposed settlement of the Colombian debt is based upon the capitalisation of the overdue coupons in full, and the issue of new bonds in exchange for the old bonds to the amount of the latter. It is almost too good to be true, and there would always be the fear that the interest on the new bonds might at any time stop again.

Stagnation in the Kaffir Circus.

It may be assumed that the holiday season is in part at least responsible for the continued stagnation of the Kaffir Circus, which certainly is not justified by the present position in the Transvaal, which is distinctly improving. President Kruger has given further proof of his intention to introduce the necessary reforms, as the Volksraad has passed the new Bill making provision for the education of Uitlanders' children in their home language. Again, the principle of the Rand Municipality Bill has been approved by the Volksraad, and the measure prohibiting the sale of intoxicating liquors to the natives has become law. If the Transvaal Government continues in this path of reform, it will greatly benefit the country and stimulate the mining industry, while gradually extinguishing the smouldering discontent. A fresh sagging movement in South African gold mines has been ascribed to the semi-panic in Yankee Rails; but this would be a most illogical movement. The Wall-street papers have all along taunted the English financial journals with being in the pay of the South African financiers to run down American stocks, so as to induce English investors to give preference to the Kaffir Circus If, therefore, Yankee Rails should become yet more unpopular, it would naturally follow that South Africans would not suffer by the movement. Mr. B. I. Barnato's return to London has not so far benefited the Barnato group of stocks, and he has been singularly reticent as regards any communications to the Press, or other public utterances. In due time, no doubt, he will speak out, but he evidently proposes to choose his own time and place. Holding the view as I do, that sooner or later, and undoubtedly in the course of the present year, a strong recovery will take place in sound South African mining and land shares, I can only advise my readers to stick tight to such shares and where possible to average the same. This applies more especially to such Barnato stocks as New Primrose, Glencairn, Buffelsdoorn, Rietfontein, Johannesburg Consolidated Investment, Barnato Banks, Barnato Consols, as well as to the leading stocks of the Robinson group, such as Randfontein and Langlaagte Estate. It also applies to all the well-known dividend-paying mines on the Rand; and certainly includes, as I have said on several occasions, Knights, now quoted 6⅛. Of this mine I find that the Statist gives some interesting particulars, in the course of which the opinion is expressed that it will attain to a leading position on the Rand. The auriferous ground consists of 443 main reef claims, and at £7 per share the property is valued at only £5,000 per claim. Sixty stamps will be at work in a month's time, and a second sixty have been ordered, and are expected to be running about the end of the present year. From the Woodstock (Transvaal) very favourable advices are to hand. A well-known engineer has just visited the mine, and expressed the opinion that it will prove one of the richest mines of the district, and will eventually rival the celebrated Sheba. Oceana shares have been steady at 1 5/16, pending the consummation of the amalgamation. Consolidated Goldfields of South Africa, on the other hand, have been flat at 11 9/16, and the whole of the Wernher-Beit group, seems to be in a depressed condition. I dare say there is good reason for this state of things, and I certainly do not think that the explanation suggested in certain quarters can be correct—viz., that the big financiers connected with this group want to freeze out the weak holders. Rand Mines are down to 29⅛, and East Rands have dropped to 6 11/16. This is still a very high price when it is considered that the real merit of the properties owned by this concern is a matter of great doubt; and that so far the New Comet is the only sub-Company which has reached the crushing stage. But even in this case the 23,000 tons crushed yielded an average of but little over 11 dwt. of gold per ton, against the estimate of 13½ dwt. The East Rand Company is, moreover, compelled to raise more money, especially for the financing of the subsidiary Companies. With reference to the Bantjes Deep I have already expressed an unfavourable opinion, which is confirmed by the following letter which I have received from a correspondent in South Africa, who signs himself "M. E.":—

Roodepoort, S.A.R.,
July 4, 1896.

Sir,—Kindly allow me through the columns of Truth to give investors a few particulars with reference to the "Bantjes Deep, Limited." This ground is situated between the "Marie Rose" and "Marie Louise" mines, and over a mile from the outcrop of the main reef. As the working capital is only £100,000 (about sufficient to equip an outcrop Company), I conclude they intend working the reefs outcropping on the property, none of which are payable. Through this property runs the low-grade reefs known as the "Kimberley Series," which is very much broken up here, and in places disappears altogether; in fact, there is hardly 100 ft. of reef without a break. Several prospecting shafts have been sunk on this reef, two or three over 100 ft., and drives put in from which samples were taken, which assayed something under 2 dwt. per ton. This would never pay to work, if treated direct by cyanide; the working expenses would be at leaft 3½ dwt. per ton. About 9,000 ft. south of the main reef the so-called "Red Reef" outcrops on this ground, which was formerly worked by a French syndicate. After sinking and driving for over two years on this reef, they threw it up as worthless; the remains of their workmen's quarters, &c., are still visible. The best assay I ever obtained from a picked sample of this reef was 3 dwt. On the west of this ground there is a prospecting cutting, about 800 ft. N.S. and 10 ft. deep, which cuts about six banket reefs, one only of which shows traces of gold. Should the Directors of this concern have the temerity to sink for the main reef on their ground, they might, by a little perseverance and a few re-constructions, reach it in about ten years. The working capital they have in hand might possibly pay for timbering.

If the statements made by my correspondent are borne out by results, the promoters and shareholders of the Bantjes Deep will certainly not be the recipients of any congratulations. The increase of the capital of the Anglo-French Exploration Company by the issue of £350,000 in Six per Cent. Cumulative Preference shares of £1 each, is now notified; and amalgamations and further issues of capital are quite a feature at the present juncture. In some cases this strengthening of resources is doubtless justified; in others it will merely be throwing good money after bad. Chartered shares have again fluctuated, and at somewhere above 2½ inside support is apparently being given. While I should be sorry to advise a purchase of these gambling counters, I should not be one whit surprised if the shares were, on any favourable developments in Rhodesia, to be hoisted by the wirepullers, who can do pretty well what they like with them. In view of a number of options which are running at present, it would, in fact, be extremely incautious to make "Bear" sales. Sales for Paris account have again been a source of weakness in the Kaffir Circus. They seem to betoken a further weeding-out of the weak elements, which should in due time prove a source of strength to the market generally. I have recently had a conversation with some of the leading French operators, who took a very favourable view, and expressed their conviction that when once the trouble in Rhodesia was over, some big French buying will come along again. It is to be hoped that our French neighbours will not wait too long with their purchases, or else they will certainly miss their opportunity. With reference to the Chartered Company, it is being continually asserted that Messrs. Rhodes and Beit had agreed to make a very generous sacrifice by bearing the cost of the war in Rhodesia and of compensation of the mining companies, &c., in connection with the struggle, and to take over the liability of the Company concerning the indemnity to the Transvaal. It might be as well that these two gentlemen should openly state their determination to make this sacrifice, or the reverse, so as to dispose of these rumours one way or the other. Amongst new Companies in which it is sought to interest the public is the Hex River Exploration Company, which appears to hold certain property in the Heidelburg district, and the capital of which has recently been raised to £160,000. This concern is, of course, entirely en l'air, and this is also more or less the case with the Daspoort Proprietary Syndicate and the French Rand Gold Mining Company, to which attention is being drawn by interested parties. I have received a number of complaints from shareholders in the Umtoli Reefs and Abercorn Reefs (which are sub-Companies of the unfortunate African Gold Concessions Company), concerning a communication which they have received from the Secretary, giving notice that, unless they pay on or before the 18th inst. the final call of 1s. per share, the shares will be forfeited. Why do not the shareholders in these two Companies at once combine to resist this demand, and institute a thorough investigation of the whole history of these concerns? Just as the shareholders of the African Gold Concessions took matters in their own hands and turned out the objectionable Directors, so the shareholders in these two Companies ought to take immediate steps to save what they can out of the wreck; and this last call should certainly not be entrusted to the Directors before a thorough investigation has been made. If some of the leading shareholders will undertake to act for the others, I should be pleased to place my various correspondents in communication with them. By the way, one of my correspondents who became a shareholder in the Umtoli Gold Reefs Company, on the urgent and glowing representations of a Mr. Arthur Reis, stock and share broker, Broad-street House, Old Broad-street, London, E.C., has sent me a whole collection of the communications upon which he finally took those shares; and he directs my attention also to the strong puffs which Mr. Arthur Reis now devotes to Doric Gold Mines, Limited. He suggests that if these are no better than Umtoli, investors had better keep their money in their pockets. Diamond shares have also caught the infection, and are distinctly weaker, De Beers being quoted 29¼, New Jagersfontein 10½. The strongest shares in this section are Leicester Diamonds and New Bulfontein. By the way, I hear favourably of a new Transvaal Coal Company, called the Penshaw Collieries, which has acquired properties on the Molteno coalfields. A number of Kimberley and London capitalists have combined to take this property up, which seems to be one of considerable promise. Since writing the above, the figures of the output of the Witwatersrand Mines for July have been published, and they show that the total of 203,873 oz. marks another record, being 300 oz. more than the previous highest return, and 10,233 oz. above the June output. Some of the individual crushings just issued are also very favourable. The New Primrose production for July was 10,752 oz. against 9,786 oz. in June; the Glencairn yielded 3,824 oz. against 3,468 oz. in June; the New Crœsus 2,577 oz. against 2,454 oz. in the preceding month. Again, the output of the Langlaagte Estate was 9,253 oz. against 9,131 oz. in June; the Langlaagte Block B yielded 3,075 oz. against 2,511 oz.; and the Langlaagte Star 1,816 oz. against 1,491 oz. in June. It is evident that the more favourable conditions prevailing in the Transvaal, to which I have repeatedly drawn attention, are already bearing fruit.

Golden West Australia.

The one exception to the general weakness which settled upon the markets as a consequence of the collapse of American Rails, and of the general holiday feeling, has been that for West Australian gold mines. Nor is this to be wondered at! Mail after mail brings the most encouraging advices as regards new discoveries and the development of the existing mines; while a number of cablegrams came to hand during the past week announcing excellent crushing returns. That is the one thing which the public had been waiting for. It naturally takes some time before an important goldfield can make large returns, and in the case of Western Australia especially, there were great difficulties of transport and water to be got over. This is now being accomplished, and actual results will gradually and surely creep up; while the measure which has just been approved of by the West Australian Assembly, authorising the expenditure of £2,500,000 in connection with the Government scheme for the supply of water to the Coolgardie Goldfield, will eventually develop the resources of that field on an enormous scale. The crushings are now supplying the missing link for which the public had been waiting, and with actual results confirming the favourable views which had been expressed, the way is now open for a very active and favourable market movement. Amongst the crushings which may be considered extremely satisfactory is one of the Ivanhoe Gold Mining Company of 210 tons yielding 1,420 oz., the tailings assaying 16½ dwt. per ton. The Island Queen mine of the British Coolgardie Company has obtained from 2 tons 15 cwt. of ore as much as 444 oz. The Maori (Menzies) mine obtained 200 oz. from 63 tons, and the Great Boulder Proprietary has again had a fortnightly crushing of 847 tons for 2,773 oz. From the Gimlet Lease of the Ninety-Mile Proprietary Gold Mine there was a crushing of 130 tons for 122 oz., and 75 tons on the Ashbourne Gold Mine of the West Australian Mining Company have yielded 115 oz. of gold. On the Star of the West 33 tons are stated to have yielded 914 oz. Thus, the production is gradually extending, and although the export in July from Western Australia was only moderate, it is evident that the next few months will show much larger figures. What is greatly wanted is that a regular return of the production of each goldfield should be made monthly by the Wardens, and I trust that the Minister of Mines, who is, I am fully aware, doing his utmost to facilitate the development of the goldfields, will give instructions for such regular statements. A great feature of the week has been a further advance in Lake View Consols to £9. My readers will remember that I strongly recommended a purchase of these shares four or five weeks ago at 4, and again a fortnight ago at 6½. There is now every prospect of a further important rise, in view of the very favourable developments at this mine. The engineer in charge, Mr. Charles Kaufman, has cabled a further crushing of 390 tons for 1,266 oz. on the ten-stamp mill running fifteen days; and I hear that it is proposed, in view of the additional enormous deposits of gold which have been discovered there, to increase the stamping power to 100 stamps. The latest news is to the effect that in the shaft, a distance of 500 ft. away and quite distinct from present workings, at a depth of 108 ft. they have struck a large body of ore in the crosscut, 40 ft. in width, 5 ft. of which runs 8 oz. to the ton. It is not surprising that under these circumstances there is a talk of the shares going to £15. Mainland Consols of the same group are now quoted 3 7/16, Paddington Consols stand at 2, Golden Crown at 2⅛, Wealth of Nations at 1⅜. Another splendid crushing of the Mainland Consols of 295 tons for 1,422 oz. has just been announced. On my statement concerning the large profits made by the London and Globe Finance Company out of the Lake View deal, these shares have risen to 4⅜, and West Australian Exploring and Finance are but little lower at 4¼. I still hold the view that Hannan's Golden Group and Hannan's Golden Treasure, both quoted at 1 9/16, have the best chance of a sharp advance in the Whitaker Wright group. The Venture Syndicate has, I hear, also been very active of late in Western Australia, and a good deal will be heard of new Companies issued under their auspices before the end of the year. They have acquired some valuable properties in the Joker and Lake Darlôt districts, one of which, I am told, will prove as rich as the Joker itself. Under these circumstances, it appears to me that the shares of the various Exploration Companies connected with the Syndicate would well pay for picking up. The amalgamation of the Bayley's Reward with Bayley's No. 1 South, Bayley's No. 1 North, and Ford's Hill Leases, does not appear to produce any enthusiasm. The question is whether the £36,000, which will be obtained under the scheme as working capital, will be large enough, considering the extent of the area of the new combination. At last week's meeting of shareholders of the London and Western Australian Investment Company some very favourable statements were made; and Mr. C. A. Moreing more especially sang the praises of the Hannan's district, also of the Hannan's Brownhill, and of the dry process which he has perfected there. It remains, however, to be seen whether this process will come to the front as "the survival of the fittest." There is another claimant in the field in the shape of the Atomic Reduction process, of which Mr. Goodman, of the W.A. (Gold District) Trading Syndicate, spoke so very favourably at the recent meeting of shareholders; and I dare say we shall hear of a good many more dry processes. The Cardiff Castle Gold Mine reports that they have started crushing. This has been hitherto a silent mine, and it is to be hoped that results will be sufficiently favourable to deserve publication. The shares of the W.A. Joint Stock Trust group have been steady, the shares of the parent Company standing at 3⅜ premium, the Founders' shares at 52½. Associated Gold Mines of Western Australia have also improved to 3⅝, and Associated Southern are quoted 1⅝. Whenever the Northern Territories Company makes its appearance, this group will doubtless brace up. The Stoneham group has been quiet, but when Mr. Stoneham returns from the short stay at the seaside which was necessitated by his recent indisposition, these shares should also go ahead, notably West Australian Goldfields now quoted 9⅛. Amongst low-priced shares which might be picked up with great advantage, I may mention Gladiators, now quoted ⅞ to 1, and Princess Royal, 7s. 9d. West Australian Gold Concessions have been firm at 1¾. The manager reports as follows concerning Meteor (Black Flag), Limited:—"A very large amount of work has been done upon a very fine-looking solid reef. The men are at present driving along its course, and a rich chute may be struck at any time." The Burbank's Birthday Gift Mine has crushed 130 tons for 360 oz., exclusive of tailings, in a fortnight with the four-stamp hired battery. This should also prove encouraging for the Burbank's North and Burbank's Consols Mines. Advices from Hannan's Lode and Hicks's Gold Mines are also satisfactory. In the latter a rich reef has been opened, the stone going up to 10 oz. to the ton. At the statutory meeting of the Kurnalpi Gold Exploration and Development Company satisfactory statements were made concerning the development work which is being carried out, gold having been struck in three shafts. It will thus be seen that all the news from the goldfields points to a very satisfactory state of things, to great auriferous wealth, and numerous as well as permanent reefs. The prospectus of the Hill End Consols, Limited, which I mentioned some weeks ago as about to be placed before the public, has now been issued by the West Australian Trust, Limited. The lease of about twenty-four acres acquired is situated in the vicinity of the famous Hill End Mine, and adjoins the well-known Pride of the Arrow mine. It is, in fact, in the neighbourhood of some very successful mines, while an average sample taken by Mr. Fearby is stated to have yielded 5 oz. of gold to the ton. A good deal of development work has already been done, and I am told that the issue has been well received. The fact that £25,000 has been reserved for working capital is satisfactory. The Board of Directors is influential and businesslike. By the way, it may be stated that Mr. T. Harrison Davis, who is the Managing Director of the West Australian Trust, has, after arduous exertions, piloted the Trust (which had temporarily suffered by the decease of Mr. W. F. Thompson) into smooth waters; and it is fully expected that it will prove the success which had originally been anticipated when it was formed. I hear that the Gold Lands, Limited, has carried out some excellent strokes of business in connection with West Australian mines. In addition to the Hannan's Kalgoorlie, it has recently successfully floated the Mona Gold Mine, Limited, and also another property in connection with the West Australian Goldfields. The shares are at present quoted from ⅜ to ½ premium, but in view of the ample profits already secured, a much higher price would be justified. I should like to say a word with reference to the practice which some promoters connected with the West Australian market are making of touting for underwriting by circulars offering very large underwriting commissions. I know of a recent case where as much as 35 per cent was offered to underwriters; and not only do such practices throw discredit upon the whole of the market, but they also defeat the objects of the promoters, as they throw doubt upon the merit of concerns which require such heavy commissions to be floated. I have before me circulars issued by the London and Westralian Mines and Finance Agency, Limited, sending prospectus, underwriting letter, and application forms, for the North Star Gold Mines, Limited, in which 10 per cent. in cash and 10 per cent. in fully-paid shares is offered as commission for underwriting. I should also think that in this instance such circulars would not achieve the object for which they were intended.

Indian, New Zealand, and Other Mines.

The Indian section shares with the West Australian market the distinction of having shown a strong front, notwithstanding the surrounding depression. When the excellent crushings for July are considered, it is indeed surprising that prices have not advanced more. Mysore Gold are firmer at 8⅛, Champion Reefs at 7⅞, Nundydroog at 3 9/16. Coromandel have been strong throughout at 2⅛, and Mysore Goldfields, which had been temporarily neglected, are also firming up at 25s. The two last-named shares have all the possibilities of a big rise in them. Amongst Australian mines (other than West Australian) dealings have not been active. Aladdins have, however, been firmer at 1⅞, and Wentworth Proprietary are quiet at ⅞ to 1. In Charters Towers shares Day Dawn Block have improved, while Day Dawn P.C. have eased off. British Broken Hill are firmer at 15/16, and in Broken Hill Proprietary business has been transacted up to 2½. Croydon Consols are in favour at 5s. 3d. to 5s. 6d., and it is understood that crushing is proceeding uninterruptedly. In fact, a circular just issued gives the last return as 263 tons for 1,306 oz., or 5 oz. to the ton, and announces another dividend of 3d. per share, while in future it is intended to declare dividends of 6d. only. Mount Lyell have eased off to 7⅞, but other Tasmanian Mines have been firm, notably Curtin Davis and Mount Reid. New Zealand Mines have moved irregularly; Waihi Silverton being firmer at 2⅝, Woodstock at 2¼, Hauraki at 18s. 6d., while Waihi, Tokatea, and Thames Hauraki have eased off. In the General Foreign section, De Lamar, La Yesca, and Golden Feather have improved, but Linares, Pestarena, Burma Ruby, and Victory are down. At the statutory meeting of the Lucky Guess Mine, Mr. Samuel Jennings was able to make some very favourable statements as regards this Cripple Creek property, good dividends being apparently in sight.

New Enterprises and Issues.

The prospectuses of the following new Companies and issues have been placed before the public during the week:—

The Hill End Consols, Limited.—This Company proposes to acquire, further develop, and work the Hill End Consols Mine, consisting of about twenty-four acres, held on a lease from the West Australian Government. The property is situated in the Broad Arrow district of the Coolgardie Goldfields (W.A.), and the capital is £125,000 in £1 shares, of which £25,000 will be reserved for working capital; while the necessary working capital has been guaranteed.

This property is situated about half a mile to the east of the famous Hill End Mine, and to the north and adjoining the block is the well-known "Pride of the Arrow," the reef of which, according to Mr. Fearby's report, goes through the centre of the Hill End Consols. The same engineer states that from a shaft sunk on the Hill End Consols to a depth of 70 ft. an average sample of the lode gives 5 oz. to the ton, and that the stone obtained on the adjoining property gives as much as 9 oz. 15 dwt. per ton. This is, therefore, evidently a mine of considerable promise.

The Dunlop Pneumatic Tyre Company (France), Limited.—This Company has been formed to acquire as a going concern the whole of the assets and undertaking known as "La Compagnie Française des Pneumatiques Dunlop," which is the most prosperous of the subsidiary Companies established by the Pneumatic Tyre Company, Limited. The following are the agreements which have been secured for the use of Dunlop tyres exclusively in France:—La Société des Cycles Gladiator, including Phebus, for twenty years; Humber & Co., Limited, Rue de Quatre Septembre, Paris, for five years; The Coventry Machinist's Company, for ten years; the Singer Cycle Company, Limited, for eight years; the John Griffiths Cycle Corporation, Limited, for eight years; the Trent Cycle Company, Limited, for eight years. The share capital is £650,000, in shares of £1 each.

This Company comes before the public under the same auspices as its parent, the Dunlop Pneumatic Tyre Company, Limited, the Directors being both influential and capable. This French business has been greatly fostered by M. Adolphe Clément, the oldest and largest cycle manufacturer in France, and M. Clément's support has been assured. The total sum paid in royalties since the first introduction of the business in France is stated to be £64,129 9s. 2d. The profits are to be derived both from the large cycle works at Levallois-Perret (Seine), and from the carriage-tyre department; and in view of the great popularity enjoyed by the Dunlop tyre in France, and the ever-increasing demand for cycles in that country, where the movement in favour of cycling is quite as strong as in this country, the new French Dunlop Company should prove successful. The capital is under the circumstances moderate, and there is every prospect that it will be largely over-subscribed.

The Anglo-French Motor Carriage Company, Limited (Roger's System).—This Company has been formed for the purpose of acquiring and taking over as a going concern the established business of E. Roger & Co., as at present carried on at 52, Rue des Dames, and 4 and 6, Rue Mariotte, Paris, for the construction of motors for application to all types of mechanical carriages, and for extending the existing works in France.

The Goldfields of Mexico, Limited.—With a capital of £100,000 in shares of £1 each. This Company has been formed to carry on business as a promoting, financial, and mining company. Its first enterprise will be to purchase and deal with the auriferous district of Huruapa, Chihuahua, Mexico, a well-known mineral area. The Ordinary shares are entitled pro ratâ to four-fifths of the net profits, and the first issue is of 60,000 Ordinary shares at par.

The City of London Joint Stock Trust.—This Company is formed for the purpose of carrying on the business of a Finance Corporation, and as such of acquiring interests in sound industrial or mineral concerns, &c. Capital £150,000 in £1 shares, of which 50,000 are Preference shares. These Preference shares are now issued.

The New Zealand Minerals Co., Limited.—Capital £250,000, in £1 shares. This Company has been formed to conduct the business usually carried on by an Exploration, Development, Finance, and Agency Company, more particularly with regard to Gold Mining in New Zealand.

My Letter Box.

The following are replies to inquiries from various correspondents:—

Government, &c., Bonds.

Beaulieu.—The description of the Uruguay Scrip which you have bought is quite correct, with the exception, however, that the settlement took place on the 6th inst.

Banks, Trusts, and Financial.

Captain A. C. F.—I quite agree with you that the position of these debentures is very dangerous, and as requested have forwarded in your envelope the address of a smart firm of City solicitors. Aaron.—I think this is a very adventurous scheme, and should advise you to have nothing to do with it. L. S., Ashford.—Your young friend should certainly try to get his money back from these "infallible" syndicate-touts; but he will find this exceedingly difficult. You must be aware that I have always warned my readers against these people. F. H.—I advise you not to avail yourself of this three-monthly settlement system. You should deal under ordinary conditions with a member of the Stock Exchange. Zaro.—1. A fair Eastern bank of good standing. 2. One of the best Australian banks; no reason to sell. Tottie.—These bank shares have absolutely no market value at present in view of the reconstruction; but the deposit-notes are worth about 15s. in the £. The shares will probably again become valuable later on. R. S.—You cannot be a regular reader of TRUTH, or else you would not have so foolishly sent your money to a syndicate tout. I mentioned the touting circulars of William Simpson & Co., 66, Finsbury-pavement, E.C., a fortnight ago, and am again referring to them in this issue. The documents are returned, and you had better place the matter in the hands of a smart firm of City solicitors. Marvell.—I cannot reply by letter. I cannot advise on the solvency of outside stockbrokers, but should recommend you to deal through members of the Stock Exchange only. M. S. M.—You may be able to dispose of the building lots in question by putting yourself in communication with the Town Properties of Western Australia, 28 and 29, St. Swithin's-lane, London, E.C. I cannot reply by letter.

Home Rails.

F.T.—Yes, Dover "A" are a good speculative purchase. L.N.—No reason to sell North British Deferred; on the contrary you should buy more to average.

American and Foreign Rails.

Wellington.—No option but to hold these Gold bonds, which are not affected by the position in the United States. Ubique, Eastbourne.—It is not advisable to sell your American Gold bonds, Nos. 1 to 5, at present. They are all well selected. Paccha.—No option but to hold the American stock in question, and average on a further reaction. Central Argentine should be held. J. L. B.—No reason to sell the American Gold bonds, Nos. 1 to 5, mentioned. J. T. S.—There is every prospect of the Argentine Railway bonds in question recovering again; hold. It is not likely that the Gold bonds, Nos. 1 to 3, will be affected, even should the silver "plank" eventually be adopted in the States. T. W., Brighton.—No option but to hold your Atchison stocks now. Verax.—No option but to hold your stocks, Nos. 1 to 5, for the present.

Mining Shares.

Gothamite.—I do not advise purchase of Abbotts at present; but I think it is advisable to pay the call on Balkis Eersteling after the reconstruction. Inshallah.—While I consider the New Bulfontein Company a prosperous one, I do not hold the same opinion of the other Bulfontein concern mentioned by you. West Cliff.—London and Globe (1), West Australian Exploring and Finance (2), as well as Austin Friars Syndicate (3), are most promising finance companies, and likely to rise to a higher level. Amongst the gold mines of this group, Hannan's Golden Treasure (6) and Hannan's Golden Group (5), are also likely to go much better. Gladiators (7) are quoted from ⅞ to 1, and will no doubt go much higher. No. 8 is also a promising cheap share. Berksdale.—1. There is no option but to exercise patience and await developments; I should certainly not advise sales now. 2. Yes. A. M. S.—I do not like Monastery Diamonds at all. Moth.—1. It is impossible to say when the Langlaagte Estate will declare the next dividend, but the mine is pulling round splendidly. 2. I think there is every prospect of an improvement in Barnato stocks. You must be aware that the Jameson raid has interrupted the whole of the business in South African shares; but if you bought fifteen months ago you must at one time have been able to take a big profit. Chercheuse.—1. There is no particular reason for this decline, and you should hold. 2. Yes. 3. I have already expressed an opinion about this amalgamation; the matter has been represented in far too favourable a light. 4. I do not think that these are as promising as most of the mines mentioned by me under "Golden West Australia"; and you know my opinion of brokers' recommendations. 5. See remarks concerning Paddington Consols in last week's issue; an investor in mines must have patience. 6. Very soon. Purveyor, Clapham.—1. I do not advise a further purchase; you had better clear a handsome profit on the next improvement. 2. No. 3. No reason to sell Associated Southern. 4. Certainly hold Randfontein and Wealth of Nations, and exercise a little patience. A.A.—I am not in love with the Jackson Goldfields reconstruction, but in such cases it is advisable to join the reconstruction and sell after. Domino.—At the present low prices the West Australian shares Nos. 1 to 3 appear to be fair mining risks. Senex.—No, I do not advise the purchase. Knerschner.—The West Australian Trading Corporation shares are high enough. Hold Graskop Exploring (1), and there is no option but to hold No. 2 for a possible improvement. Ibyeus.—1. Buffelsdoorn are a steady market, and should be held for a rise. 2. Yes. You should hold both Glencairns and Johnnies. Doonside.—1. You should certainly hold Barnato Banks for a rise. 2. I do not like Gordon Diamonds, and have so often said so that I must refuse to advise you on the subject. Caster.—The mine is stated to be developing satisfactorily; but until crushing commences you will have to exercise patience. Lake View Consols are still a good purchase for a further advance. West York.—The paper in question is irresponsible. Amongst West Australian finance companies, London and Globe Finance and Exploring and Finance are some of the most promising. Amongst the lower-priced shares of this description, New Explorers' Syndicate at ⅜ premium, and Explorers' and Finance Founders' shares at about £25, are also a good purchase. Spera, Somerset.—Your shares Nos. 1 to 9 should all be held for an improvement, which is probable. A. Yes. B. More or less doubtful, partly owing to the trouble in Matabeleland. C and D. Yes. Coombe.—1. Both Hannan's Group and Hannan's Treasure are equally good for a rise. 2. A fair mining risk. 3. No particular catch. Dum Spero Spiro.—1. It is no use giving you the name of a stock jobber, as these are not allowed to deal direct with clients; you can only operate through brokers. 2. You cannot effect this saving. 3. Not just yet. Girlington.—I should think that the dividend is due to you, and you should call upon the secretary for an explanation. Cam.—If the Directors of the Imperial Corporation of Western Australia do not give satisfactory news, you should insist upon this being supplied to you as a shareholder. The Secretary is bound to give you all reasonable explanations. G. W. B.—The W.A. Joint Stock Trust seems to be in a very promising position. Finance, Mullingar.—1. Hold Rhodesia Limited. Nos. 2 and 3 should also be held for the present. No option but to hold No. 4. I do not think much of No. 5, and I have frequently commented unfavourably upon the African coal shares (6). Hold Nos. 7 to 16, and realise your profit on Nos. 17 and 18. Replacement.—I think you had better stick to your exploration shares; they are likely to rise again. Italiano.—As regards South African shares, an improvement is probable in the course of the present year; you should hold your shares, even though they be not well selected. Dennis.—No, I do not advise you to take shares in the West Australian Loan Corporation in question. There are other W.A. finance Companies referred to in my letter, which are far more promising. I do not think the shares were ever quoted at that price; at all events, there is no market for them now. Buttermere.—Yes, your shares Nos. 1 to 3 should be held for an improvement. Amber.—You should join other shareholders in the Abercorn Reefs in order to resist the call of 1s. per share, which should not be paid in view of the extraordinary action of the Directors. 2. Yes, join and sell after. L. S. D.—The mining shares, Nos. 1 to 5, mentioned are fair mining risks; but you had better make your selection from the shares recommended by me under "Golden West Australia," which, upon the whole, are more promising. Midlothian.—Yes, hold for the present; the South African market will have its turn again. Brutus.—Yes, Croydon Consols are a good investment, and you might with advantage make your other selections from "Golden West Australia." Wivenhoe.—You are quite right. The silence maintained by the Directors of the Rhodesian Mineral Properties, Limited, is altogether unjustified, and you should insist upon full information being furnished. You ought to combine with other shareholders to resist these proposals, and the call of 7s. 6d. per share which is now being made. R. H. R.—Great Boulder South should be held for a fresh advance, and you might average. Croydon Consols are a good purchase as a more permanent investment. I do not care so much for Nos. 1 to 4; and you had better make your selection from my letter under "Golden West Australia." Heene.—I do not advise selling Nos. 1 to 3 now; when the South African market revives they should go better. I have a favourable opinion of Golden River Quesnelle (4). Cherry.—Hold Nos. 1 to 5 for an improvement. Salisbury.—I am informed that a report and accounts will shortly be issued, and if you are really the largest shareholder you should easily be able to satisfy yourself by applying to the secretary. Pico.—1. The Hampton Plains report will disclose a very favourable position and large profits earned; but whether a dividend will be declared I cannot tell you. 2. Probably. 3. I do not advise purchase of Bechuanaland Exploration. 4. A very promising South African mine. 5. Yes, Nundydroog should be held for an advance. 6. Yes. W. A., Fal.—1. There seems to be nothing for it but to await the publication of the report; I know nothing about the underwriting. 2. The Bushmans' circular is certainly very unsatisfactory, and the vendors should be called to account for the misstatements in the prospectus if these can be proved. The documents are returned. Gwalian.—1 and 2. No. Hendersons.—I still have a very favourable opinion of Henderson's Estates, and think that these will go better; but nothing can improve in the present state of the South African market. I cannot tell you anything about the Bocksburg Gold Company. Caster (second letter).—1. I think it will last a little longer as regards the crushing of the Golden Crown. 2. No option but to hold. Umtoli.—You should join other shareholders in the Umtoli Reefs in order to resist the call of 1s. per share, which should not be paid in view of the extraordinary action of the Directors. Innocent.—Your shares Nos. 1 to 9 should be held for an improvement. W.A. Exploring and Finance and London and Globe Finance are now of equal value. Foster Reay.—Fair mining risks. J. F., Ayr.—Hold Hampton Plains, and buy more to average; the report which is to be issued shortly will be favourable. Also hold Nos. 1 to 6 for a rise. Batch.—When the South African market generally improves, your shares Nos. 1 to 3 should recover. E. B. C.—Hold Nos. 1 to 5 for an improvement. I still think favourably of Barnato Banks. Carousal.—Yes, Oceana would be a good purchase. Sillwood.—1. The Langlaagte Estate dividend was declared on June 30, and is payable at the end of August. 2. The New Bulfontein dividend has been paid. 3. No, not yet. E. P. W.—No reason to sell Hannan's Proprietary. J. H. McK.—I cannot undertake to act for the purchase of shares. I must leave you to make your selection from my recommendations under "Golden West Australia," and employ a broker to buy them. Culpepper.—I do not advise purchase of Nos. 1 to 6 as an investment; you should make your selection from my letter. Link.—I am glad you are doing so well in Lake View Consols. 1. No. 2. No reason to sell now. S. W. F.—What I meant to convey is that I have not seen my way of late to recommend Hainaults. I made a favourable remark on them a year ago, and they have since, as you say yourself, touched 4 twice; but times alter, and it is quite impossible for me to maintain the same opinion of individual mines for twelve months in all cases. I am glad you are doing well in South Kalgurli. Why did you not buy Lake View Consols on my advice, as you would have doubled your money? 2. Not now. Impatient.—Yes, New Explorers' Syndicate shares are a good purchase. I do not like the Faith Gold Mines. Doric.—1. I do not like Dorics. 2. Neither do I like the Friendship Gold Mine. Nos. 3 and 4 had better be held for the present. Ajax.—The Londonderry has been a most unfortunate affair from beginning to end; but I do hope that Colonel North's trustees will return to the Company the £70,000 which he wished to give back to the shareholders. Ooregum Prefs. are a fair mining risk. Lombard.—1. I never have recommended W.A. Minerals and Finance, and really cannot advise you; I do not care for the Company. 2. Instead of hesitating, you ought to have bought Lake View Consols at once; since then there has been a big rise. 3. I have no particularly favourable opinion of these. 4. I do not advise purchase of Chartered. Tempted.—I should advise you to be cautious.

Industrial Shares.

Shamus.—1. I do not approve of the Standard Oil Company of Galicia, and should not advise you to put your money into it. 2. The price of Beeston Rims is nominally par; but there are no buyers, and you should take an opportunity to get out. W. T. W.—I do not like these Preference shares as a permanent investment, as newspaper property is subject to great and sudden changes. Osborne.—I think you had better take your splendid profit of nearly 50 per cent.; the rise seems to be overdone. You might still buy Lake View Consols, with every prospect of a further important improvement. A. W. P.—I do not see how you can refuse to pay the calls. Not only would you forfeit your holding, but you would afterwards be compelled to pay up. Your only chance is to get out of these shares when an opportunity offers. Investor, Paisley.—Your inquiry was replied to in last week's issue, and I cannot answer by letter. I do not see that you have any option but to keep these oil shares for the present. Deferred.—It is quite correct that the special settlement of the Dunlop Tyre Company has not yet been appointed, and whenever that is fixed you will be able to get a settlement of your account. Paris.—I am very much surprised that the secretary of the Wynaad Tea Company, 23, College-hill, E.C., should not have replied to your inquiry. He certainly ought to do so, and you should write to him again. I cannot tell you yet about the Argentine Railway bonds. R. R. M.—I quite agree with you that it would be advisable for the National Company for the Distribution of Electricity by Secondary Generators, Limited, to be wound up, as it seems to have a useless and unremunerative life. You had better interest your co-shareholders in a movement to that effect. Phonographer.—I cannot answer questions as regards the bona fides of Hire-furnishing Companies. Truth.—1. No; I do not like the Larne Air-Tight Inner Tube Company, and do not think it will be a success. 2. No. Heartsease.—A small industrial concern and very speculative. No reason for selling Trustees and Executors' shares now. Chester Confederate.—The new departure seems to be somewhat risky; but I suppose that almost your only course is to take the shares in the new company and then sell. Impransus.—I do not think much of either of the two electrical shares in question. Persimmon.—I do not like the Roller Bearings Company, neither do I hold a favourable opinion of Simpson's Lever Chains. R. A.—I cannot send you the name of a stockbroker, but you might obtain this through your bankers. I forward the name of a firm of smart City solicitors in your envelope, as requested. The cycle shares in question are not likely to go much higher, and you had better sell. Eblana.—No option but to hold these shares, as the Company is by no means in the desperate condition which has been suggested to you.

Mixed Investments.

Harp.—No reason to sell the Brewery shares Nos. 1 to 3, or No. 4 after the heavy decline. Nemo Black.—I have repeatedly stated that I disapprove altogether of these three-monthly accounts. Some of the stocks you hold have been bought altogether against my advice, such as East Rands at 7⅝ (now 6⅝), Consolidated Goldfields at 12½ (now 11⅝). Neither have I advised speculative purchases of American Rails at such prices as you have paid for them. The Home Rails might be held; but altogether your prospects are not promising. Black Diamond.—1. I do not like the intermediaries, and I should advise you to try and get out of your bargain. 2. On receiving notice of the change of name of the Dunlop-Truffault Company, you ought to have at once cancelled your subscription; but in any case you should join the movement for removing your name from the register. Cestrian.—1. I do not think much of this transfer. 2. I suppose you have no option but to do so. 3. Yes. 4. Do not sell now; there is every prospect of the Lagunas Nitrate Company now being pulled right. 5. I do not like Mazawattee Tea shares; they are quite high enough. 6. Fair prospects; but no particular catch. Nos. 7 and 8 had better be held. Orillia.—Metropolitan Ordinary have had a big rise; why not take your profit? You will be quite correct in holding the Colonial bonds (a), Caledonian Preferred Ordinary (b), and Grand Trunk Debentures (c). Inspection.—All your mining shares Nos. 1 to 6 are well selected, and I see no reason for selling any. I do not like Singer Cycles (7); but there is no reason to sell No. 8, or Westralia, Limited, now. Caudebec Caux.—1. Take a fair profit on Mysore Gold. 2. No, too speculative. 3. No particular catch. 4. I do not care much for Tharsis. 5. The Langlaagte Estate has a long life before it. Clerieus, Cambridge.—1. I do not like Claremont Cycles (a) or Singer Cycles (b); and if you are a regular reader of Truth, you must be aware of this; c is a fair mining risk. 2. No option but to hold these South African shares for the present. Belgravia.—1. Bradbury Drills are promising; but I certainly do not advise investment in No. 2, of which I have already expressed a very unfavourable opinion. Ubique, Queenstown.—1. Take your profit. 2. West Australian Trading Corporation shares are quite high enough. 3. No reason to sell these New Zealand shares. 4. West Australian Joint Stock Trust shares are likely to further improve. 5. I do not like the Standard Oil Company of Galicia. 6. I do not like Corsairs. 7. A fair mining risk. 8. Yes. Spa.—I do not recommend Russian Humbers; and the West Australian mines mentioned are not nearly so promising as those referred to in my letter under "Golden West Australia." Larry, Cahill.—Your West Australian shares Nos. 1 to 3 are well selected; but I do not like No. 4 (Golden Cliffs); Nos. 5 to 7 should be held, but No. 8 is somewhat doubtful. No. 9 is rather speculative, but promising. No option but to hold No. 10; and I do not care for Simpson's Lever Chains (11). Beginner.—No reason to sell Nos. 1 and 2 now. The Cycle shares (3) are high enough. No reason to sell Nos. 4 and 5. Sell No. 6 at a small profit when an opportunity offers. I do not care for No. 7; but No. 8 is promising. J. E. H.—1. The present quotation of No. 2 is 97, and No. 3 is 93½. I do not see any reason for nervousness with reference to these. 2. I have not heard of the gas in question. J. E. W.—Possibly they will recover again; but the management does not appear to be satisfactory. I must refer you to my letter as regards South African shares. J. J. G.—1. I spoke out as soon as ever I had an opportunity of doing so, and still retain my opinion with regard to Singer Cycles. 2. No reason to sell these now. 3. No; they are high enough. 4. You have done quite right in buying London and Globes. W. D. R.—I consider Mexican Sixes and the new Uruguay Five Per Cent. Loan a promising purchase. Nova Castella.—I think that under the trust deed in question the proposed selection, Nos. 1 to 9, would be suitable. It is just a question whether you should not substitute some of the investments, Nos. 10 to 20, for some of the American Rails Nos. 2 to 7. Better leave Nos. 23 and 24 alone just now, and Nos. 25 to 29 are quite high enough. Neither do I see much advantage in investing in Nos. 30 to 33. West Riding X.—I do not think much of the concerns in question. Trust.—No option but to hold the bulk of your investments Nos. 1 to 26, many of which (especially the West Australians) are likely to go much higher; but there is also a prospect of the others coming right in time. Pakeha.—Hold No. 1. I do not think much of Nos. 2, 3, and 4, neither of which are quoted in the official list. E. E. L.—1. You will get a higher price for your London & Globe Finance shares. 2. No. Flageolet.—1. Full particulars have been published. 2. A fair mining risk, but no catch. Amongst low-priced Indian gold mining shares, Goldfields of Mysore and Coromandel are the most promising. Medicus, Dublin.—1. No option but to hold these bonds. You had also better hold Murchison New Chums. Evidently some more satisfactory discovery has been made, although the Directors are always backward in giving publicity to their news. Phonetic.—If you are content to run a moderate risk in connection with these industrial undertakings, I see no reason why you should not buy Nos. 3 and 4; but No. 2 is decidedly risky, and I should prefer the New Uruguay loan. T. T.—Lagunas Nitrate shares should now be held, as measures have been taken to put the Company in a sound position. Mere.—No reason to sell the American bonds now; and you should also hold the South African shares.

Charles Heidsieck Champagne.—Original Brand.—Extra dry or brut. Vintage 1889. One quality only shipped. To be obtained of all Wine Merchants and Stores.

Various Investments.

Money has hardened but slightly, and there are still large surplus funds ready for investment; although in view of recent events they will not be immediately available for such highly speculative stocks as American Rails, &c. High-class investments generally have been steady; but in sympathy with the general weakness there has been a decline in Consols to 112$\frac{11}{16}$. Silver, too, has eased off to 31¼d., while Rupee Paper has improved to 64¾. The annual report of the Brewery and Commercial Investment Trust, Limited, recently issued, fully bears out the favourable opinion I had formed of it; and the Ordinary shares seem attractive at their present price of £6, which includes the balance dividend at the rate of 4½ per cent. to be paid in a few days. The results of the year are extremely satisfactory; they not only permitted a dividend at the rate of 7 per cent. to be paid on the year, but £6,900 to be added to the reserve fund, and £2,209 to be written off for doubtful investments; so that the net earnings on the capital employed for the year approach 14 per cent. The Company has a large appreciation on its investments over their capital cost amounting to upwards of £20,000; whilst so conservative is the management that upwards of 41 per cent. of the valuation are in Debentures, and 82 per cent. in Debentures, Bonds, or Preference shares. The Company has issued a full list of its investments, which can be obtained by intending investors on application to the secretary at 12, Moorgate-street, London, E.C. Home Brewery shares still continue in demand. A cheap and safe Preference share appears to be Buckley's pre-Preference. The Debenture capital is £70,000; the pre-Preference shares (quoted at 11⅜) only amount to £60,000, and bear interest at the rate of 5¼ per cent., behind which there is £110,000 of Preference and Ordinary share capital. Allsopps have maintained their price very well at about 180; but a sharp relapse has taken place in Guinness to 600 on the announcement of the dividend, which is no better than last year; while the sanguine section had expected an increase in the distribution. Nitrate Rails have been dull at 6¾; and the shares in the various Nitrate-producing Companies have also been inactive, holders awaiting the result of the Lagunas litigation. Cycle shares have been steady, but business as usual at this period has been slack. Dunlop Pneumatic shares have, however, upon the whole, maintained prices remarkably well, the Deferred being quoted ⅝ premium, the Preferred par, the Ordinary ¼ premium. Humber Extensions have been firm at ⅜ premium, and Humber Ordinary have remained at 1$\frac{5}{16}$. I hear of a coming amalgamation in Cycle Tubes, which are firmer at 1⅛. Grapplers are dull at 1⅛, and Beestons at 4¼. The new Dunlop Pneumatic Tyre Company (France) is likely to meet with an excellent reception, as the capital is fixed at a comparatively moderate figure; while there is no doubt that the business in France which the Company will take over is a most important and growing one; our French neighbours having taken quite as enthusiastically to cycling as we have ourselves. It is therefore expected that the shares will be many times over-subscribed, and will at once be quoted at a big premium. Amongst coming flotations are, I hear, some conversions of West-End trading firms and some Music Halls. I also understand that a Company has been formed privately under influential auspices with a present capital issue of £120,000, out of a total of £200,000, to purchase the patents and rights for the whole of the world except the United States and Canada for the Baron Cigarette Machine, which is at present on view at room No. 20, Billiter-buildings. It is a triumph of ingenuity, and makes round cigarettes, thick or thin, long or short, also oval-shaped cigarettes as turned out by the Egyptian and Turkish Companies with equal facility, also printing name of the cigarette upon the paper. Speed and work are first-class, the average being 450 cigarettes per minute, equal to best hand made, while the smallness of the lap is also a feature. As the trade has expressed strong approval of the machine the Company is expected to do a large business. My readers will recollect that I have warned them repeatedly against the syndicate touts, who are again lifting up their heads regardless of the punishment which was some time ago meted out to some of their fraternity, and are again scattering their circulars broadcast over the country. One of these men against whom I have repeatedly warned my readers is T. Hemming Custance, stock and share dealer, late of 50 and 51, Lime-street, London, E.C., who tried to bamboozle the public into his "special guaranteed mutuals," which he described as "guaranteed with a net profit of 50 per cent. within six weeks." A correspondent informs me that he has been victimised to the extent of £52 10s. paid as "cover," not counting profits amounting to £20. Of course it is the usual tale. Custance refused to close the stock, and when finally a solicitor was set to work, the 'syndicate tout's' offices had been closed for ten days, and no trace of his whereabouts could be discovered. My correspondent wishes me to help him now to get his money back; but as the man has levanted, I do not see how I can do so, unless one of my correspondents can, by chance, inform me where Custance, or the man who adopted that name, is hanging out. I really cannot sympathise much with the complainant, for if he was a regular reader of Truth, he has altogether disregarded my advice, and if he was not, why should he bother me now? William Simpson & Co., stock and share brokers, 66, Finsbury-pavement, E.C., are still on the warpath with what they call "our co-operative joint deals." Of course, they also boast of having made magnificent profits on all their deals without a single loss, and they also guarantee their clients against loss. Can human credulity go so far as to think that these men would prefer to make profits for the public, if they could do so without any risk themselves! The Investors' Syndicate, of 9, Union-court, Old Broad-street, E.C., is, according to circulars which have reached me, formed to carry out on a more extensive scale than has hitherto been pursued, the backing of horses during the present racing season. I should think that the purpose which would certainly be achieved by the public will be to lose money on a more extensive scale; and I should advise my readers to have nothing to do with it. Who are the persons behind the Promotion and Investment Trust, Limited, of 83, Wool Exchange, London, E.C.? They are sending out circulars, stating that they have had placed in their hands for immediate disposal forty-five shares of £5 each, bearing a guaranteed minimum dividend of 6 per cent. per annum, in the British Electrical Manufacturing and Engineering Company, Limited, at £4. 15s. per share. The reason of the offer is, according to this "Trust," that "the vendor is sadly pressed for funds." I wonder who the vendor is?—Your affectionate Uncle, MOSES.

QUEER STORY;

AN EXHIBITION EPISODE.

"WELL, Amy, this is a pleasant surprise!"

"Ditto, dear old Gladys. Fancy our meeting here too, of all the places in the world!"

"Yes; but we always had a spice of independence in our respective compositions. So our both happening to join this club was nothing so very improbable, after all. Are you living in town?"

"Yes; my husband is at the Bar, you know."

"Ah! I was very interested to read the announcement of your marriage in the papers. You always used to say that you would never marry—if you remember."

"So did you. And yet you lost no time in following my example, it seems."

"True; I was like the man in the 'Honeymoon,' my dear—

I made a very silly vow,
But was not quite so foolish as to keep it."

"Do you find matrimony agree with you?"

"Oh, yes; capitally. I go my own way a bit, of course. I'm not an absolute slave to my husband."

"No more am I. I put down my foot from the first. Robert was inclined to be absurdly exacting."

"Did he make a fuss about your joining this club?"

"Rather! But I insisted on having my own way. Did your husband raise objections?"

"Plenty. However, I overruled them all."

"That's right. In fact, it strikes me, Gladys, that though we are both married, we are, nevertheless, doing full credit to our early principles."

"Just so. After all, the being married or not married is a mere detail. It is the being free, or not free, that really matters."

"And if one was not married, one could not belong to this very excellent club?"

"No. And what a miss that would be! Oh, thank goodness! Here comes our luncheon."

The two ladies engaged in the above dialogue were seated at a small table in the dining salon of the Aspasia Club. Everybody has heard of this institution, which is one of the newest and most successful of ladies' clubs in London. It was especially founded to encourage and foster the freedom of married women; and so matrons only are eligible for election. Its motto is descriptive and characteristic: "Liberty, Equality, Maternity." And the principles which it upholds are the most advanced principles of wifely emancipation. Nor are these principles a mere matter of words—a simple question of theory. The conditions of membership are stringent, and are rigidly enforced. The founders of the club had no belief whatever in faith without works. They required the members of the Aspasia to show their faith by their works—to act, not merely to subscribe to, their creed of emancipation.

Pursuant to this requirement, each member agreed to perform, at least once in the month, some decided act of wifely independence; and such act she was obliged to record in a book of blank forms—provided by the club for the purpose—and at the month's end to send in her form to the secretary, duly signed and filled in with particulars. If the secretary did not consider that the act, or acts, recorded were sufficiently assertive of wifely liberty, she submitted the form to the committee, who, if not satisfied, would call upon the defaulting member for an explanation. It will thus be seen that a very strict eye was kept by the Aspasia upon its members.

"How long have you been a member of the club, Gladys?" her friend inquired, as they discussed their luncheon.

"Only a fortnight, dear. How long have you?"

"Rather less than a month."

"And have you done your first task, as enjoined by the regulations?"

"Well—yes; I did it only last evening."

"And what form did it take, dear?"

"I went alone to the Indian Exhibition after dinner."

"By the piper, Gladys" (expletives were rather encouraged than otherwise in the Aspasia Club), "what a very extraordinary thing," Amy exclaimed, with a half-laugh. "It just shows what kindred spirits you and I are I did my task only three nights ago; and I went alone to the Indian Exhibition after dinner."

"You don't say so. And how did you get on?"

Amy hesitated a minute, and looked rather embarrassed.

"I—I——" she began. "At least—well, I may as well confess to you, Gladys, my—my—visit resulted in a rather unfortunate occurrence."

"What was that?" inquired her friend, looking interested.

"Why—why——" said Amy, lowering her voice, "I—was quite alone, you see, and—and——"

"Yes? yes?"

"I—I—didn't know my way about very well, and—and—I happened to ask a—a—gentleman if he would kindly direct me to Elysium. He said that he was going in that direction himself, and that he would act as my guide. He—he—was quite a gentleman, and seemed very agreeable, and—and—nice-looking. And—and—I could not very well refuse his civil offer."

"Go on—go on," interjected Gladys, eagerly.

"W-w-well, he walked by my side as far as Elysium, and was most polite and pleasant. I—I—couldn't very well help talking to him, you know, and—and——"

"Of course not. But what happened? I'm dying to hear."

"He—he—kept with me for quite a long time; and he was really very nice-looking and amusing, and I had found it rather slow by myself, and—and—altogether I saw no harm."

"Why should you, my dear? But how did it end?"

"We—we—strolled about Elysium for nearly an hour, and—well then he said he must be going. He—he—began to—to—talk dr-dreadful non-nonsense then: said he'd never appreciated the name Elysium before, and as he wished me good night, he put his arm round my waist and—oh, Gladys!—he—he—kissed me."

Amy spoke almost in a whisper. Her cheeks were the colour of a geranium.

"What cheek of him!" ejaculated Gladys, whose face gave the impression that she was full of a certain suppressed excitement. "And yet," she added, "it will look very well in the report, especially the kiss."

"I—I—it may have been weak of me, but—but—I didn't put the kiss in the report," faltered Amy.

"Look here," exclaimed Gladys, with great eagerness. "This is a most extraordinary thing. It is the most extraordinary thing I have ever heard of. I may as well tell you—I myself had a—a—very similar experience when I went alone to the Indian Exhibition. A—a—strange man got into conversation with me. He was very nice-looking and agreeable, and—and—it ended the same way as your experience did."

"Did he kiss you?"

Gladys nodded.

"And was your man fair, with blue eyes, and a flaxen moustache?"

"No, dark, and clean shaved."

"Ah, then it wasn't the same. But what an extraordinary coincidence!"

"Most extraordinary. It only shows what these men are."

"Yes, the wretches. And—and—did you put down the kiss in your report?"

"N-no. I was like you, my dear. I thought it read sufficiently strong without. But—but—something worse happened to me, Amy. If my experience had—had—ended where yours did, I should not so much mind. Some one saw my man kiss me!"

"Oh, how dreadful! Who was it?"

"The last person I could have wished to do so, except my husband. One of my own domestics."

"I say! How did that happen?"

"Well, it chanced to be the cook's evening out, and by the most unlucky coincidence in the world she was spending it at the Indian Exhibition with her young man. I—I—was not aware at the time that she had witnessed the—the—unfortunate occurrence; but this morning, when I complained to her about the—the—dinner, she spoke to me most impertinently, and upon my giving her notice she told me what she had seen, and threatened, unless I withdrew the notice, to report matters to my husband. I—I—had to give in to the woman in the end. I was never so humiliated in my life. And the worst of it is she still has it in her power to expose me to—to—Tom."

"Oh dear! That is dreadful. I am sorry for you, Gladys."

"Well, it is most uncomfortable for me. Of course, you know, I'm not in the least afraid of Tom; but still I shouldn't quite like him to—to—"

"Exactly. And, of course, I'm not in the least afraid of Robert. But I shouldn't quite like him to—to—"

"Precisely. Men are so hasty."

"And so unreasonable."

"They make no allowances."

"And always believe the worst."

"That comes of judging others by themselves."

"Yes; but we must not blame them too much. Look at the matter the other way round. We should be righteously incensed, my dear, if we found our husbands kissing strange girls in places of public amusement—shouldn't we?"

"I—I—should like to catch Tom kissing a strange girl in a place of public amusement, or anywhere else," exclaimed Gladys, bridling.

"And if I caught Robert, he should have good reason to remember it."

"Besides, my dear Amy, we occupy a totally different position. We were kissed, involuntarily, against our wish."

"Oh, of course. Quite against our wish."

"We didn't like it."

"Simply hated it."

"Just so. Whereas, men—the wretches—kiss voluntarily, of their own initiative, and—well, of course, they do not hate it; else they wouldn't do it. That makes all the difference."

"To be sure it does; I didn't think of that."

"But, coming back to the point, I can't think what I am to do about cook. I wish you could advise me."

"I—I—really don't know what to suggest. I—I—tell you what it is. "Why shouldn't you place yourself in Robert's hands? He's considered very clever at the Bar, and I'm sure he could help you if anybody could."

"Do you think he would?"

"Oh, I'm certain of it."

"That would be awfully kind. I do want a m——I mean some clever person's assistance."

"Well, look here. Come home to tea with me by and by. Robert generally drops in for a cup of tea at about five o'clock, and then you can see him and talk to him confidentially."

"And you will back me up, and assure your husband that my—my—little escapade was perfectly harmless?"

"Of course I will. But you need not be afraid of Robert. He is strict in his ideas about me, his wife, you know—in fact, ridiculously strict; but he is very easy-going in his ideas about everybody else."

"I'm glad to hear that—the last part of it, I mean. Very well, then, dear, I'll come home with you to tea."

So shortly after four o'clock the two ladies quitted the Aspasia Club, and adjourned to Amy's home—a flat in the Cromwell-road. They had just settled themselves comfortably to the afternoon tea-table, when the sound of men's voices, laughing and talking, was heard in the passage outside, and just afterwards the master of the flat, accompanied by a friend, entered the drawing-room where the two ladies were seated.

Robert, the barrister, was a tall, handsome man, of imposing aspect, with dark hair and a clean-shaven face.

"I've brought in a friend," he said, "who is thirsting for a cup of your excellent tea. Allow me to introduce—why—Hilloa! Why—Good Lord!—my dear, I——"

Robert, the barrister, had suddenly turned very pale indeed; his face betokened extreme confusion and dismay. He stared angrily, yet shamefacedly, at Gladys, and then turned, deprecatingly, to his wife.

"My dear," he went on, "my dear—I hope you have not believed anything that this—this—young person——"

But his wife was not listening to him. Her eyes were fixed, in horror-struck dismay, upon Robert's friend, who himself seemed by no means at his ease. He was a fair man, with blue eyes and a flaxen moustache—a very prepossessing type of the Anglo-Saxon.

"How dare you, sir?" cried Amy, covering her face with her hands. "This is—too—too—mean and—and horrid of you, when it was all your fault, to come and—and—expose me l-like this."

"L-l-leave me, you—you wr-wr-wretch!" murmured Gladys at the same moment, her voice muffled by the sofa-cushion, in which she had buried her face. "How can you d-d-dare to rem-m-main in my presence, after forcing—literally forcing—a kiss from——"

"Oh, I say!" interposed Robert, the barrister. "It's too bad of you to say that; it is indeed. Why, you never resisted at all, and you—you actually seemed to like it."

At this point Amy suddenly started round. The shame had almost vanished from her look. She was full of righteous, wifely wrath. She had grasped the situation.

"Robert," she demanded, in an awful voice, "am—am I to understand that it was you who—who kissed and carried on with Gladys in—in a public place?"

"Well, you see, my dear——"

"Don't try to make excuses, sir. And you, Gladys" (rounding upon her unfortunate friend), "do you mean to say that you—you let him kiss you, and—you—actually seemed to like it?"

Gladys, however, was equal to the occasion, for she, too, had now grasped the situation.

"And you, Amy," she demanded, fiercely, "you dared to entice my husband to—to——"

"No, no! my dear. Not enticed," struck in the Anglo Saxon, mildly. "I can't say that she enticed——"

"Can't say that I enticed, indeed!" retorted Amy, heaving with indignation. "You know, you false wretch——"

"Am I to understand, Tom Jiffkins," thundered Robert, the barrister, at this point, "that you dared to kiss my wife in a public place?"

"And am I to understand, Robert Pilkington," retorted the blue-eyed Saxon, firing up, "that you dared to kiss my wife in a public place?"

"Damn it," said Robert, the barrister, "you needn't get excited. I didn't know she was your wife. And, besides, I was only carrying out the rules of the Alcibiades Club."

"So was I carrying out the rules of the Alcibiades Club."

"And I was only carrying out the rules of the Aspasia Club," said Amy, now beginning to whimper.

"Just what I was doing," sobbed Gladys.

"Do the rules of the Aspasia Club compel you to undergo kisses from strange men?" demanded Robert, the barrister. "Because if so——"

"No, no. Not that. Only to perpetrate some act of w-w-wifely independence. . . . . But what is the Alcibiades Club? I never heard of it before," questioned Amy, drying her tears, and again looking indignant and suspicious.

"Well, you see, my dear," explained Robert, "as you had joined the Aspasia—a club whose avowed object is to encourage the independence of wives—I and some other disgusted husbands formed a little club of our own, to encourage the independence of husbands. We called it the Alcibiades. And a necessary condition of membership is that every man in the club should kiss a pretty woman—not his wife, of course, but if some one else's wife, so much the better—at least once a week, and——"

"Robert," cried Amy, with flashing eyes and panting bosom, "if you don't leave that—that club at—at once, sir, I shall get a divorce."

"And if you don't withdraw your name, Tom, this very evening, I shall go home to mamma," threatened Gladys.

"Well, you see, ladies," answered Robert, the barrister, "we have an axiom in the law that no agreement is good without consideration. And if we agree to withdraw from the Alcibiades—for I have no doubt that my friend Jiffkins will back me up in this—you must withdraw from the Aspasia. That is the consideration which we demand. What do you say?"

* * * * *

It ended in both the ladies resigning their membership of the Aspasia. Jiffkins and Pilkington also threw over the Alcibiades—not a very difficult step, since the so-called club had never consisted of any more members than these two.

"I say," observed Robert, on meeting Tom a few days later, "we managed that little affair very neatly, didn't we?"

"Prime!" assented the other, grinning.

"But look here," inquired the barrister, dropping his jocular tone, and speaking rather anxiously, "my—my—little woman didn't—didn't really draw you on to kiss her, did she?"

"Not a bit of it, old man. She objected strongly to the liberty. And my wife, now—she—she—didn't really seem—seem—to—to like being kissed by you, did she?"

"Incredible as it may appear," confessed Robert, the barrister, surveying his comely person in an adjacent pier-glass, "she did—not!"

ART NOTES.

THE "banner with the strange device" which has been hung out upon the outer wall at No. 157, New Bond-street does not bear, unfortunately, the Longfellow-esque motto of "Excelsior!" It announces in letters aggressively large, on a background unnecessarily red, an exhibition of "Startling Pictures from the Paris Salons of 1896" to be seen within, and it is only fair to say at once that the adjective used is by no means too strong. For myself I should be inclined to select one with a less ambiguous meaning, for it is possible to be startled by bad pictures as well as by good ones, but more of this anon. Meantime, let me raise my protest against the new departure made by the proprietors of the "Continental Gallery." It is positively alarming to contemplate what Bond-street would become if their innovation were to be adopted and developed by neighbouring art galleries. From the flaunting red flag that waves over the portal of No. 157 it would be but a short step to a leather-lunged showman banging a big drum and vociferously inviting the public to "Walk up! Walk up!" and see the show. And another step downwards would result, possibly, in the hanging out of crude kakimos, illuminated by naphtha cressets, and depicting in exaggerated style the art sensations to be seen within, in accordance with the plan in favour with the travelling caravan proprietor. Thus might Bond-street, before the end of the century, be turned into a sort of up-to-date Bartlemy's Fair, in which, instead of Fat Ladies, Hottentot Venuses, and Spotted Wild Men from Borneo, would be seen the latest horrors of artistic realists and the eccentricities symbolists gone demented.

I said just now that "startling" was not too strong an adjective to apply to some of the paintings at No. 157, New Bond-street. Take, for instance, M. Tattegrain's "Les Bouches Inutiles." One might call this a "revolting" picture without the slightest risk of exaggeration. On a canvas, well-nigh as large as a tennis-lawn, the artist has crowded horrors enough to cloy the most morbid of palates. This is the ennobling and inspiriting subject: From a closely besieged fortress of the Middle Ages, all the old and useless non-combatants have been turned out into the midst of a severe winter by the hardly-pressed garrison, and we see a crowd of half-famished and maddened human beings fighting like carrion crows for such horrible means of subsistence as may be found on the snow-covered ground. The artist shows us emaciated wretches not only seeking dead dogs and gnawing at dead rats, but actually struggling like ravenous hyænas for the possession of the mutilated corpses, from which, in their extremity, they are hacking scraps of flesh. There is a group in the foreground of the picture which, once seen, it is almost impossible to forget. Its horrible features linger in one's memory like the gruesome details of Mr. Kipling's "Ride of Morrowby Jukes." "Les Bouches Inutiles," it may be remembered, was one of the sensations of the recent Salon. There were even critics who spoke of its "superb audacity" and "great nobility of motive and achievement." For my own part, I would rather not say what I think of such a prostitution of talent.

If in M. Tattegrain's picture we find so-called realism rampant, in M. Jean Veber's "L'Homme aux Poupées" we assuredly come upon symbolism gone mad. Here again masterly painting is perversely turned to most unsatisfactory account. We can all admire a colour scheme which recalls the brush of Eugène Delacroix; and approve the luminous modelling of the nude woman lying asleep in an attitude of abandonment on the couch in the middle of the picture, but when we try to get at the meaning of the artist, twenty interpretations suggest themselves, and not one of them conclusive.

A third of the "startling" pictures is M. de Laubadère's "L'Arène," another canvas in which artistic truth, and reticence, and good taste are wantonly sacrificed to the determination to excite sensation at any price. So resolute is M. de Laubadère to startle us that he has painted an assorted group of thirteen stalwart gladiators, nude Christian maidens, and dusky prisoners of war, all about to become the prey, apparently, of a single rather diminutive lion. Nay, he has even painted one Oriental satrap, who has been consigned to his fate wearing enough precious stones of enormous size about his neck and in his mitre-like hat to have made even the mouth of a Roman Emperor water. Possibly, captive kings were sometimes given to the lions in the Coliseum, but I venture to assert that they were always stripped of their regalia first.

It is but fair to add that there are pictures to be seen at the Continental Gallery, which, though they do not startle, most pleasantly impress one with their artistic strength. Amongst such I would include M. Gustave Wertheimer's noble study of lions and lionesses, "Le Tribut de la Reine," a most masterly piece of work, and M. Alberti's "La Loge de Mlle. Yvette Guilbert." The further end of the gallery is devoted to a collection of odd paintings by Herr George von Hoesslin, of Munich, who is as eccentric and enigmatic as M. Fernand Khnopff, without, however, a tithe of the skill which makes the latter artist's work so distinctive and distinguished.

MUSIC.

PROSPECTS OF AUTUMN OPERA.

AT one time it appeared likely that both Covent Garden and Drury Lane would be closed until Christmas. But suddenly the clouds seem to have lifted, and there is now every prospect of at least one, and perhaps two, important operatic enterprises this autumn. As to Covent Garden, there are a couple of schemes in nubibus, both by Italian speculators, though neither is ripe enough for discussion. The Carl Rosa Company, however, are fully prepared to take Drury Lane from early next month for an autumn season, and, unless somebody else speedily secures the house for an autumn drama, the Carl Rosa enterprise will most probably be carried out. Moreover, it ought to do remarkably well at this period of the year, when the middle classes have returned to town, and when, except as to the luckless Queen's Hall promenade concerts, it will have a complete monopoly of music in the Metropolis.

A good many absurd statements have been made as to this suggested season. The idea that only the death of Sir Augustus Harris has allowed the Carl Rosa troupe to give evening performances in London is absolutely preposterous. When the Company and Harris dissolved their association, Harris agreed not to run English opera in the Provinces, while the Carl Rosa Company undertook not to attempt Italian opera in London. As a matter of fact the Rosa Company would have given evening performances last Christmas, could they have found a London theatre; and they might have given such evening representations even at Daly's, if they had consented to take over Mr. Hayden Coffin and another of the leading artists. It is also absurd to say that the Company insisted upon the performance of his contract by Mr. Hedmondt in order that that gentleman should not give an autumn season against them. As a matter of fact, Mr. Hedmondt had already signed an agreement to sing exclusively for the Carl Rosa Company, and at no other operatic enterprise during the current season. Mr. Hedmondt will, of course, be their principal tenor at Drury Lane should they open there, and he will play Siegmund, Tannhäuser, Lohengrin, and other parts. "Die Meistersinger," one of the big successes of the last tour, will also be given, together with the successful opera, "La Vivandière," which has not yet been heard in London. All these arrangements, however, must depend upon whether the Company secure the house, and the London season, in any event, must be a brief one. The troupe open at Dublin next Monday, it consisting of Mesdames de Lussan, Elandi, Esty, Heenan, Macdonald (a new American soprano), and Kirkby Lunn; Messrs. Brozel, Hedmondt, Grover, Paull, Marsh, and Ludwig; with several other singers, and Messrs. Jacquinot and Eckhold as conductors.

The meeting on behalf of the Augustus Harris fund at Covent Garden last Wednesday came to rather a lame conclusion. Mr. Raleigh, it is true, was beaten on the proposition, attributed to Lady Harris, to devote the fund to a statue of the deceased manager. But although the meeting would beyond doubt have agreed to spend the whole amount in charity, after deducting a small sum for a medallion, or some other sentimental souvenir, they were not asked to do so, and instead, by some fatuity, it was resolved to divide the fund in two, and allow each subscriber to earmark his money for which branch he chose. The effect of all this will be to please nobody, for while a comparatively small sum will probably be subscribed towards the statue, a further squabble will, beyond doubt, arise over the money raised by the operatic and musical benefits.

Mr. Higgins, it is true, stated very frankly that the opera money (which, with the contributions of the wealthy subscribers, will probably nearly approach £1,000), must be devoted to charitable objects; doubtless upon the principle that the man who pays the piper should be allowed to call the tune. He further stated in his opinion, and in the judgment of many of the opera subscribers who acted with him, that not half a dozen contemporary persons were worth a statue. Most of us will be inclined to endorse this view, and the matter should have been brought to its logical conclusion by a vote to devote the cash to a more useful purpose. Mr. Randegger and Professor Stanford started speeches, but speedily demonstrated that, whatever their merits as musicians, they were no orators. The suggestion of Mr. Ganz, to found further scholarships at our music-schools, was very properly sat upon. The schools, even now, have an abundance of scholarships and exhibitions, without showing any very satisfactory results for them. Another proposition was to endow a bed at Charing Cross Hospital. Another was to set up a drinking fountain in Covent Garden Market. Nobody suggested an equestrian statue, but the idea would have been almost as ridiculous.

The rumoured hitch as to the arrangements for the opera season next year have only this foundation in fact: namely, that the "Grand Opera Syndicate"—the word "Royal" is objected to by the Board of Trade—have not yet arranged with the Harris executors as to the copyrights and as to the scenery and costumes brought over from Drury Lane. The copyrights are, perhaps, of less importance than the clothing, for we do not want to hark back to the Covent Garden dresses and scenery of the latter Gye and Lago days. But the idea that if Mr. Higgins—who, by the way, with Earl de Grey, has just been appointed irremovable Director of the Opera till the end of the present century—and Mr. Grau do not come to terms, the Harris executors will start an opera season at Drury Lane against Covent Garden, will cause those two particularly wideawake gentlemen no little amusement. Executors who will not even risk an autumn drama are not in the least likely to emulate Harris' operatic exploits in 1887 at Drury Lane, where, although M. Jean de Reszke then cost a week less than he now costs a night, the manager asserted he lost £15,000 in one season.

As to the copyrights, undoubtedly Sir A. Harris held performing rights in various popular operas. But "Hamlet" and "La Navarraise," it is understood, have lapsed, while "Lohengrin" and all the earlier Wagner operas such as "Tannhäuser," and "The Flying Dutchman," are out of copyright, and are anybody's property. Certain claims have been made as to Gounod's "Faust," though it is understood only the English version is copyright, a difficulty which Mr. Turner and others have avoided by making a fresh translation in place of the feeble adaptation of Chorley. The performing rights of "Carmen" are also stated to be secured, but Mme. Soldene played the opera freely in the Provinces, and the late Mr. Carl Rosa, although he had bought the English rights, did not care to fight the question.

A few years ago Sir A. Harris purchased—it is reported for the sum of £400—from Herr Goldmark, of Vienna, the performing rights for a term in certain of Wagner's operas, such as "Die Meistersinger," "Tristan," and "Der Ring." It is understood that these rights subsist, except that Messrs. Schott hold the right to license the performance of the music at concerts. The Harris executors also hold the performing rights in "Roméo et Juliette," "Philémon," and in a large number of Italian and other operas which Sir Augustus Harris from time to time produced, either at Covent Garden or Drury Lane. Many of these works are, undoubtedly, in the repertory, but an arrangement should not be a matter of difficulty.

I have had a courteous letter from the hon. sec. of next year's Newport Eisteddfod pointing out that London and Cumberland choirs have already been enthusiastically received at Eisteddfodau, and expressing a friendly wish that next year other London choirs will compete at the National Eisteddfod. My own opinion, that so essentially Welsh an institution as the Eisteddfod should as far as possible be kept to the musicians of the Principality, has more than once been stated. But it is only right to say that at Newport the Welsh are willing to challenge the choirs of "the City of Lud in Britain," and I am perfectly sure that any Metropolitan singers who may like to compete will receive fair treatment, and a generous welcome.

The last cycle of "Der Ring des Nibelungen" commences at Bayreuth next Sunday and closes on the following Wednesday, Dr. Richter temporarily breaking his holiday in order to conduct it. These performances will be attended by the De Reszkes and other artists. A good deal of nonsense is still being written concerning the "Ring" performances this year, and one of the most wonderful expressions, perhaps, was that telegraphed to a London paper by an enthusiast, "Miss Brema is certainly one of the greatest operatic artists in the world. She is worthy to be ranked with Mr. Bispham." The spe correspondents have, however, of late become more level-headed, and have discovered the absurdity of covering with eulogy at Bayreuth, German vocalists whom they unhesitatingly condemn when the artists come to London.

Even in Germany, too, there have been plain words spoken concerning the vocal deficiency of some of Mme. Wagner's artists. Herr Otto Lessmann, editor of the Allgemeine Musik Zeitung, has some hard words about the singers, and also severely criticises the costumes and stage management, being particularly sarcastic against the satin bodices in which the Rhine daughters disport themselves in the water. Herr Lessmann likewise wickedly inquires how these fair maidens manage to keep their hair in curl at the bottom of the Rhine, and he boldly states that the god Wotan's scolding wife Fricka is dressed like an Arcadian shepherdess.

LETTERS ON BOOKS.

MY DEAR MR. WYNDHAM,—Do you remember how pleased Sam Johnson was at the compliment paid him in the retort made to some parson's complaint that "in his parish they could only talk of runts"—"Sir, if Dr. Johnson lived in your parish, he would learn to talk of runts"? Mr. Henry James, like that superfine parson, complains again and again of the stupidity of the public with whom he has to do, as though it was to his credit that he was unintelligible to it. Is it then to the discredit of Shakespeare or of Scott that they "learned to talk of runts"? In the most ambitious of the four fine tales in his latest volume, "Embarrassments" (1), Mr. James re-states his grievance in an extreme form. A novelist of supreme powers writes only and always to convey a single idea to his readers.

There's an idea in my work without which I wouldn't have given a straw for the whole job. It stretches from book to book, and everything else, comparatively, plays over the surface of it. The order, the form, the texture of my books will perhaps some day constitute for the initiated a complete representation of it.

Upon this hint a critic who was as supreme in his own domain as the novelist was in that of fiction, gave his life up to the study of the Master's works, and to the discovery of the idea that inspired and underlay them. After intense and prolonged application he discovers it, and would have disclosed his discovery to the world but for the arrest of death. Without such a hint from the Master the critic with all his subtlety would never have suspected the existence of this organic base of all the novels, and, without a Newton-like intensity of application, he would never have discovered it. But this idea, even though it were as abstruse as the Kantian philosophy, or as well hidden as the treasure in Poe's "Golden Beetle," yet could have been, and but for the intervention of death would have been, revealed to the world by the critic. What is to be said, then, for the novelist who failed even to suggest its existence. Was his unintelligibility less to his own discredit than to that of his acutest critics, to say nothing of the ovine or bovine public? In another tale, "The Next Time," Mr. James returns to the charge, and represents a second novelist of genius, who, like a star, was too high above the world to enlighten it. In truth, Mr. James is never weary of making a complaint of which his public is quite weary; while the complaint itself is at once unreasonable and undignified. "He that will wryte well in any tongue," says Ascham in "Toxophilus," "must follow thys councel of Aristotle, to speak as the common people do, to think as wise men do." Mr. Herbert Morrah can write intelligibly and well, but the wise with whom he thinks are of the "Unjust Steward" tribe. In "A Serious Comedy" (2) he expects you to sympathise with two swindling adventuresses who by exploiting a Society for the Befriending of Young Women and by embezzling its funds, succeeded in achieving high social position and in netting aristocratic husbands. Poetic justice would have locked up his heroine and her female Fagin instructress for two years to pick oakum, and condemned his hardly less unprincipled hero to union for life with the ballet-girl he jilted so unconscionably. The author of "Mr. Magnus" (3), on the other hand, has so little sympathy with swindlers who have achieved flagitiously the highest social and political positions that he makes a ferocious attack on the two African fetiches of the hour, "Mr. Magnus" and "Mr. Benoni." In fact "Mr. Magnus" is in no sense a novel, but an exposure in the disguise of a novel of the gentlemen who have exploited Royalty, the Empire, Christianity and Civilisation to make for themselves colossal fortunes out of the bankruptcy of duped shareholders at home, and out of the slavery and misery of African miners. "Mr. Magnus" in the middle of an exposition of his methods of squaring people either by bribes or bunkum or flattery, is interrupted by the crash of the falling-in of a mine, and the news of the hopeless entombment of the miners:—

The news of such a disaster seemed to strike a chill through all. The only man who made a comforting remark was Hartmann, Mr. Benoni's factotum, who observed that it ought to send up the price of rubies. As, however, Mr. Benoni's firm had purchased the entire output for the year which was just expiring, the remark was hardly regarded as disinterested. The only person who had not made any movement was Mr. Magnus. As they were leaving, some one asked him what he was going to do? "Stay here," he replied, "and think in hemispheres. Boy! Another soda!"

No sooner, however, had his confederates gone off the ruined mine than Mr. Magnus stole away, ordered a special train, and left them "to face the music." "The Hero of Wynnum" (4) is the precise inverse of Mr. Magnus, since he is too conscientious to touch a treasure of untold gold and precious stones in heaps, because the house wherein he finds it is not his own. It was hidden in its wainscoting during the plague year, is covered by plague-infected cloths, and is revealed by the staring eyes of a picture opposite fixed with such intentness on the cache that the hero thereby divined its existence. These eyes, by the way, have such hypnotic power that the hero, having been once mesmerised by them, dared not look long at them again.

He pulled a chair into the middle of the room and sat down in it, and stared back at the picture. Had he remained (adds the author with all the emphasis of italics) in that position for many minutes he would have been hypnotised, and this story might never have been written.

Would that the heroes of half the hypnotic novels of the hour had been so hypnotised! The real hypnotist is the historical novelist who holds you with his glittering eye till

Nothing is
But what is not.

Mr. Standish O'Grady in all his stories shows this surprising power of conjuring up the past and making its dry bones live, but in none perhaps with such magic effect as in his latest romance, "In the Wake of King James" (5). While you read, the only realities to you are its sombre scenes, grim personages, its heroine, hero, and its hero who had something in him of the heroine in his virginal simplicity. Nothing finer than the closing scene of this vivid romance can be found in contemporary fiction.—Believe me, my dear Mr. Wyndham, ever yours very sincerely,

GIRLS' GOSSIP.

DEAREST AMY,—In a seaside place one can understand how it is that so many thousands of persons living in the country are content to let the great world go by without interesting themselves to any extent in its doings. In London we are all awake and alert, intent on the morning papers and their telegrams from all over the world, and expectant of the modifications and additions to be found in the evening papers. But down here the chief things that seem to matter are the sea, the sky, the prospects of the weather, to bathe or not to bathe, to walk or to drive, and other insignificant questions that, for the moment, assume an importance that does not really belong to them.

Is it that the rehabilitation of the body, after weeks of fatigue and late hours, makes the intellectual portion of us dwindle for the time? In London, our morning paper is more to us than breakfast, as a rule. But down here, breakfast is much—a real meal. That we cannot have our daily paper with it does not seem to matter. We look at the blue sea and the cloudless sky, nod to the white cliffs of Calais across the way, note the packet waiting for its passengers for Boulogne at the pier, and when the London papers at last arrive, the first thing we hunt out in them is very probably the weather forecast.

Selfish, isn't it? A sad confession, but an ower true one.

Folkestone is rough on skirts. Already we have had to invest largely in velveteen bindings, for though we wear our gowns quite short all round, as fashion, common-sensible for once, requires, yet we find them white with chalky dust and cut and frayed in a very short time. There must be an equivalent to capillary attraction in the matter of dust, I think. How else can one account for a quarter of a yard of chalk-trimming on a gown that never touches the ground except, perhaps, in going down hill?

There is the usual seaside mixture of almost all social classes here. On the Lees on Sunday, after church, there is a prayer-book parade, at which a most extraordinary hotch-potch of garmenture assembles. Some of the ladies are immaculately attired in orthodox seaside Sunday gear—foulards, alpacas, grass lawns, canvas plain or shot, and light summer cloth in tones of cream and tan and biscuit. But the town ladies stream forth, too, in silks and satins and velvets, with beady capes and jet-trimmed mantles; and their husbands' favourite costume seems to be frock coat and straw hat or bowler, with a small child worn on one arm.

Another contingent consists of visitors from the cheap parts of the town, who have carefully provided themselves with a variety of most unsuitable decorations for a sojourn by the sea; including ostrich feathers of the frugal kind, bright muslin flowers in black jet bonnets and black lace hats, tweed coats with lace collars turned down over them, and black satin capes with serge or tweed gowns and felt travelling hats.

We went to the theatre on Wednesday to see Miss Fortescue play Stéphanie in "Forget-me-not," and were interested in the variety of costume of the seaside audience. One girl wore a low bodice and short sleeves, and looked dreadfully out of it, for full dress is not usual at a watering-place. Others had quiet demi-toilettes of the usual kind when the London season has run its course. But quite as many of the occupants of the stalls wore bonnets and hats. So we had abundant variety of costume to study.

It was such a chilly, unresponsive audience. It reminded me of the old German Reed "congregation" as Corney Grain was known to call it, in its impassivity. When the orchestra played a lovely solo from "Shamus O'Brien," there was not the remotest sign of any pleasure having been afforded by it; but they woke up at Miss Fortescue's excellent acting; and she wore such lovely gowns and looked so pretty in them. The one I liked best was a corn-coloured satin, with a chené ribbon at the waist in cream colour with a design of pink roses. The black hat worn with this was tilted at a most becoming angle.

With her last dress, cream colour and poppy red, the latter arranged in long ends ending in gold tassels, with smaller ends hanging over the sleeves, Miss Fortescue wore a pearl necklace suspended from arm to arm above the front of the low bodice. It was a good idea.

It was a new sensation, by the way, to walk home at 11 p.m., and find the "snorting citizens," as Iago calls them, conspicuous by their absence. The world of Folkestone keeps early hours, and we felt quite dissipated in being amongst the minority who were awake a whole hour before midnight.

So sheath skirts are coming in again, with small bonnets and tight sleeves with no puffs at the top. We shall all be transformed by this time next year. Paris has decreed it, and a few yards may come out of our skirts with a very perceptible diminution of weight. There is always something good in every change, as we know from the old proverb about an ill wind. But we shall miss our gores and the floating fulness of our hems, shall we not? As to the puffs of sleeves, they were always out of drawing and extremely inconvenient. "De mortuis nil nisi bonum;" but there are cases in which this would mean perfect silence about the defunct, and the large sleeves are one of the cases.

But do not forget that I have given you fair notice of the coming changes, and do not invest in any more wide skirts. The new ones are only half the width of those we have been wearing.

There is some prospect of the revival of a very old fashion—that of jewelled gloves. Did not Richard Cœur de Lion wear diamonds in his glove? And had not Mary Queen of Scots a glove set with rubies, garnets, and pearls?

Bridegrooms who are at a loss to know what present to give bridesmaids can now fall back on jewelled gloves, pale pink kid sewn with seed pearls, or something of the sort. And what an interest it will add to one's small bets at sunny Sandown and elsewhere to feel that there is a possibility of the payments being made in gloves with the stitching of the points brightened by diamonds.

It has often occurred to me as a bad and wicked thing that men should monopolise the saloon on packet boats and leave their unfortunate wives and sisters to the horrors of the ladies' cabin. I see that this has attracted attention in print, and I sincerely hope that some refuge for women may be supplied in boats where the passage occupies the greater part of the night. I shall never forget the awful stuffiness of the cabin in crossing from Harwich to the Hook of Holland. And in the saloon were stretched in the full enjoyment of air and space the male creatures who were our privileged fellow passengers. Why can we not have some air and space as well? Will some one see to it for us?

We appreciate our Cravenettes this showery weather. And how suddenly the deluges arrive, too. At one moment we are all spruce and trim with skirts all gracefully falling and a red sunshade held aloft, and the next we are damp, dispirited, invaded by mud and grime, the wretched sunshade dark with rage at being wet through. Such a contrast as we present to our previous selves! It is too humiliating.

Clare sends me the following from Dublin:—

Dearest Madge,—Now that the rush of the season is over, you are all no doubt in full swing of the holiday rush. Oh! the crowded boats and trains, the overflowing hotels, and all the excruciating pleasures of the summer outing. Pleasures may be said advisedly, for who would have these things otherwise? However we may grumble at the overcrowding, to which we take good care, at the same time, to contribute, how much greater would be the lamentations over deserted hotels, trains and boats. The dreadful suspicion would then enter our minds that, through some ghastly chance, we were not "in it," that we were doing something for which there was no struggle; something nobody else wanted to do; in a word, something not worth doing. And so we crush and rush, and if being driven almost distracted by fuss and fatigue is a sufficient measure of the distraction of mind recommended by our doctors, there is no doubt that we do get it on the holiday tour of the summer season. One wonders if doctors who send their unfortunate patients careering about the Continent at this time have the crafty idea that by sending them to greater ills those they are suffering from will seem less. What opportunities for the wear of "sorrow's crown of sorrows" a passage across the Channel gives, with a brisk wind or a deceitful ground swell. Amidst rolling and pitching, the victim's mind turns landward with despairing regret; in his misery, the memory of any day on land seems a happy one. Did you ever try an entirely restful holiday? It has its drawbacks, too. A friend of mine, in a fit of world-weariness, took a month's rest from everything and every one—friends, relatives, newspapers, posts. It is some years since, but he has never recovered that month of seclusion. He emerged from it a kind of Rip Van Winkle. The whole world was changed; entirely new subjects—or the old ones under entirely new aspects—were engaging public attention. People and things which at the moment had seemed of such vital importance were almost forgotten. The worst of it was he never regained that lost month. No one dreamt of telling him of all the things which had filled the papers during that time. The assumption that he knew them produced very awkward situations in many a conversation, yet all attempts to gain enlightenment through others were met with suspicions of his sanity or sobriety. To be sure, he could have read all the back numbers of the newspapers for the month, but what evil would be terrible enough for such a remedy? A holiday, like everything else, ought to strike the just mean, and happily blend together activity and inaction, society and seclusion.

Lady Cadogan, with some of her sons, returned to the Viceregal Lodge last week. How lonely she must feel, being daughterless now that both her daughters are married. A Court is more lively, too, with a young lady element. Cricket is the chief pastime just now at the Viceregal Lodge, where there is a nice cricket field, with surrounding trees from under the shades of which one can watch the matches. The Zingari are to visit Dublin (play on several days in the week before the Horse Show. ey will be entertained as usual at the Viceregal Lodge. In er days a Zingari dance used to be an institution at the ceregal Lodge, and gave an opportunity for Zingari supper- le decorations, toilets, and bouquets. The military have n playing polo vigorously in the Phœnix Park. The Ireland Polo Tournament is yet to come, in which the litary also have a large part. It will be held just about e Horse Show time. All the arrangements of Irish Society e made at this season with a view to the Horse Show; is the centre round which all things social move. One wonders what temper with Lord Cadogan the Irish landlords will be hen they meet him at the great festival of the Horse. They oycotted Lord Crewe for doing a great deal less against them han their own Government has done. What an interesting, f not exalting, study of humanity the House of Lords afforded ast week! To have Lords Lansdowne, Ranfurly, and Ash- ourne ranged against the Irish Land-Lords! One could not but hink of Sir Robert Walpole's cynical "All men have their rice."—Yours ever,

CLARE.

Next week, dear, for recipes.—Ever your loving cousin,

MADGE.

CANCER WARDS of the MIDDLESEX HOSPITAL.—35 beds devoted to Hopeless Incurable Cases.
A FUND of £12,000 is being raised for the purpose of erecting a separate BUILDING for the accommodation of the FEMALE CANCER PATIENTS hitherto located in the hospital, an improvement which is urgently demanded on the ground of the health, comfort, and convenience of the patients. Towards the cost of the new building the sum of £9,000 has been paid or promised, and an URGENT APPEAL is now made for the balance of £3,000 still required. Patients are admitted without letters or any recommendation save that of necessity, and are permitted to remain until "relieved by art or released by death."—F. CLARE MELHADO, Secretary-Superintendent.

LONDON FEVER HOSPITAL, Liverpool-road, Islington, N. ADDITIONAL HELP is urgently needed.
Scarlet fever and diphtheria are very prevalent. Subscriptions and donations will be thankfully received by the Secretary at the Hospital.

A CARRIAGE MOTOR CONSTRUCTION COMPANY. A GOING CONCERN: WORKS IN FULL OPERATION.

The orders in hand on 1st June (from which date the Company takes over the business) from responsible parties are of considerable magnitude. The leading features of the Motor Carriages, as manufactured by M. Roger, are: Freedom from vibration when in motion; sensibility and steadiness of steering apparatus, facilitating easy guidance; practically instantaneous stoppage; arrangement for automatically stopping carriage in case of accident to driver; lightness and simplicity of construction; few component parts, lessening chance of disarrangement of machinery; complete independence of motor, which, though fixed to carriage, can be utilised for other purposes.

The Anglo-French Motor Carriage Company

Incorporated under the Companies Acts, 1862 to 1890.

CAPITAL, £300,000, divided into 300,000 Shares of £1 each.—Parr's Bank, Limited, in Great Britain; their Correspondents, La Société Générale in France; and the Belfast Banking Company, Limited, in Ireland, are authorised to receive subscriptions for an ISSUE of 258,000 SHARES of £1 each, of which the Vendor stipulates that at least 86,000 shall be allotted to him as fully paid in part payment of the purchase-money, being one-third of the whole issued capital. The balance of the capital (42,000 Shares) will be reserved for the further requirements of the business. The Shares are payable as follows: 2s. 6d. on application, 5s. on allotment, 5s. on 15th September, and the balance as and when required.

PROSPECTUS.

1. This Company is formed for the purpose of acquiring and taking over as a going concern the established business of E. Roger & Company, as at present carried on at 52, Rue des Dames, and 4 and 6, Rue Mariotte, Paris, for the construction of motors for application to all types of mechanical carriages, and for extending the existing works in France. It is also proposed to establish a factory in England, and to form subsidiary companies in such other countries as may be deemed expedient, and where the demand justifies the outlay of capital.

2. The Company will also acquire from Monsieur Roger his patent rights, together with all future improvements, for the United Kingdom and France, relating to motors, and will also acquire all Monsieur Roger's rights in such inventions for every other country (excepting the United States of America). M. Roger also binds himself to act as managing director for a period of ten years.

3. Arrangements have also been made with Messrs. L'Hollier, Gascoine, & Co., of Birmingham and Maidstone, who have hitherto been M. Roger's sole agents and licensees for Great Britain, and who are amongst the leading pioneers of the motor-car movement in this country, by which the Company will acquire the benefit of the organisation they have established for selling purposes. Being well in touch with the trade and large industrial firms, they are in a favourable position for obtaining for the works in England, as soon as they are established, immediate and important orders. Mr. E. Gascoine, who is a mechanical engineer, has agreed with the Company to become manager in England.

4. The following extract from the report of Mr. Booth, M.Am.Soc.C.E. (made at the instance of the Vendor), fully describes the most essential points of the Roger Motor:—

"I have no hesitation in stating my conviction of the practical and commercial success of the improvements effected by M. Roger's system, and the general excellence of the motors he constructs, and of the arrangement and balance of the vehicles generally, and I consider them certainly to be the best motor vehicles existent. The machinery is well constructed and is very accessible for repairs. It can quickly be removed from a vehicle and replaced, or even employed for other purposes.

"Every facility was afforded me for examining the motors and the vehicles themselves, and also the working drawings of every detail. As a result of my examination, I am of opinion that the objects secured by the improvements, viz., greatly increased efficiency, convenience, comfort, and safety, are attained with less weight of machinery. The various improvements consist in brief of (a) an arrangement for backward running; (b) a safety device to prevent the carriage running backwards when left on a hill; (c) an improved system of water cooling, prolonging the duration of the water supply; (d) a simpler gear, whereby, by means of a single handle, the driver is enabled to employ either the fast or the slow speed; (e) automatic gear, whereby the application of the break also disconnects the driving gear, and at once causes the vehicle to stop; (f) a special safety arrangement to ensure that an accident to the driver, who might, for example, fall from his seat through illness, shall cause instant stoppage of the motor, a most important point; (g) general simplification of the motor, and improvement of the water jackets, reduced weight and space occupied, whereby the rear of the carriage is very considerably reduced in length."

5. Unlike other Companies hitherto formed in England with a similar object, this Company has the advantage of being the first construction company of any importance formed to acquire an established business turning out motors for carriages as rapidly as it is possible to manufacture them. Carriages fitted with motors made on this system are regularly at work, not on prepared tracks, but over ordinary roads, and running in every description of weather, and the satisfaction they give to their owners a few of the testimonials attached to the Prospectus will show.

6. The works in Paris are in full operation, and the Company enters at once into an established industry. The present factories are quite inadequate to cope with the increasing trade, and, in consequence, the Vendor has secured the option of acquiring a lease of other premises in the immediate neighbourhood of the present works, having a superficial area of about 35,000 square feet, furnished with steam power, and well adapted for carrying on a large business, the benefit of which option will be transferred to the Company.

7. In view of the probability of the Locomotive (Highways) Act, which will authorise the use of motor carriages in this country, receiving the Royal Assent this session, the Directors propose taking immediate steps to secure adequate premises to enable them to commence the construction of motors in England. In the meantime English orders will be filled from the Paris factories.

8. To illustrate the future prospects of the Company, M. Roger estimates that with a working capital of £75,000, the subscription of £37,500 of which is already secured, about 1,000 carriages of different styles can be turned out annually in the Paris factories alone; and that this output at present prices would permit of profits being earned to the extent of about 25 per cent. on the present issue of capital.

9. The profits to be derived from the intended formation of subsidiary Companies should be considerable, whilst, according to Mr. Roger, a substantial additional income should be earned from the manufacture of stationary motors.

10. On the 1st June, 1896, the Vendor had on hand a considerable number of orders from responsible persons, which are taken over by the Company. Since that date numerous other orders have been received, and additional orders are arriving daily. The large drapery establishment, the Grands Magasins du Printemps, in Paris, has made a series of most satisfactory trials, resulting in orders for delivery carts for the Grands Magasins du Louvre, as well as for other important houses.

11. The motors can be readily adapted to launches, pleasure boats, tramcars, omnibuses, and every sort of vehicle, and also for the purpose of pumping water and electric lighting. The Company proposes to grant to carriage builders and others, where deemed advisable, licences to adapt these motors to their own carriages and boats, which should be a source of additional revenue.

12. M. Roger was the recipient at the recent Nantes Exhibition (1896) of the Prix d'Honneur and Gold Medal, and the unanimous congratulations of the Exhibition Committee for the excellence of his system; also the Silver Medal at the Paris Exhibition of 1889; whilst he received prizes both for the Paris-Bordeaux and Paris-Rouen races, in both of which all the carriages started by him arrived back safely, and in good condition.

13. The business will be taken over as from the 1st June, 1896, M. Roger discharging all liabilities up to that date. All orders standing in the books on that day, whether in course of execution or to be executed, will be for the account of this Company, it being agreed that (in addition to the purchase price below mentioned) both the manufactured and unmanufactured stocks are paid for by the Company at cost price.

14. M. Roger, who promotes this Company, has fixed the purchase price of the whole of his business as a going concern, including all plant, machinery, tools, patent rights, models, drawings, goodwill, and the optional lease of the new premises, at the price of £183,000, payable as to £33,000 in cash, £64,000 in cash or fully-paid shares, at the option of the Company, and £86,000 in fully-paid shares in the Company; and in addition he stipulates that if subsidiary Companies are formed to manufacture his inventions in countries other than Great Britain and France he shall receive one-third of the net purchase-price to be paid to this Company by any such subsidiary Company. Out of the above-mentioned purchase price the consideration to be paid to Messrs. L'Hollier, Gascoine, & Co., for the transfer of their business as aforesaid will be provided. The Vendor will pay all expenses (other than legal charges and registration fees) in connection with the formation of the Company down to the first general allotment of shares.

15. Of the present issue 75,000 shares are appropriated to provide working capital, 42,000 shares being held in reserve for future issue if required.

16. The statements of fact contained in this Prospectus are based upon information furnished by the Vendor and the report of Mr. Booth, a copy of which accompanies the Prospectus.

17. The following contracts have been entered into: (1) dated 5th August, 1896, between E. Roger of the one part, and the Company of the other part: (2) dated 25th June, 1896, and made between E. Roger, of the one part, and John Ornstein of the other part; and (3) dated 7th August, 1896, and made between Leon L'Hollier, of the first part, Edmund Gascoine, the younger, of the second part, Daniel Courtois, of the third part, John Ornstein, of the fourth part, and the Company of the fifth part.

18. There are numerous trade contracts relating to purchases of material, &c., and also contracts for orders which are far too numerous to mention in this Prospectus.

Other agreements and arrangements have been and may be entered into with third parties as to the promotion of the Company and the subscription of its capital, to none of which the Company is a party. Applicants for shares will be deemed to have had notice of the contents of all such agreements and contracts, and to have waived their right (if any) to particulars thereof, whether under Section 38 of the Companies Act, 1867, or otherwise.

19. Copies of the contracts above particularised, together with the Memorandum and Articles of Association, are open to the inspection of intending subscribers at the offices of the Solicitors.

Applications for shares should be made on the accompanying form, and forwarded to the Company's Bankers, together with a remittance for the amount payable on application.

In cases where no allotment is made, the amount deposited on application will be returned at once without deduction. If the number of Shares allotted be less than that applied for, the surplus will be credited in reduction of the payment on allotment; any balance will be returned.

Prospectuses and Forms of Application may be obtained from the Bankers, Solicitors, and Brokers, and at the Offices of the Company.

London, 8th August, 1896.

Since the Prospectus was drawn up, the "Locomotives on Highways" Bill has passed the third reading in the House of Commons, and now only awaits the Royal Assent to become law.

Application may be made on the following form.

PROSPECTUS.

This Company is formed for the purpose of carrying on the business of a Finance Corporation, and as such of acquiring interests in sound Industrial or Mineral concerns, of becoming Concessionaires, and guaranteeing the issues of approved Debentures and other Securities.

The profitable nature of the business contemplated is amply exemplified by the balance-sheets and reports of similar undertakings, notable amongst which are the London and West Australian Exploration Company, the Colonial Finance Corporation, the West Australian Gold Fields, and the West Australian Exploring and Finance Corporation.

The results of these undertakings, as set forth in the last annual balance-sheets and reports, were as follows :—

	Net Profits earned.
The Londou and West Australian Exploration Company	About 250 per cent. on the paid-up capital.
Colonial Finance Corporation	About 575 per cent. on the paid-up capital.
West Australian Gold Fields	About 100 per cent. on the paid-up capital.
West Australian Exploring and Finance Corporation	About 206 per cent. on the issued capital.

Results such as these, achieved in some instances within the first year's operations, illustrate the profitable nature of a class of business which has hitherto been largely carried on by individuals who, by the employment of capable engineers and the judicious development of properties, frequently acquired in the first instance at merely nominal figures, have been able to amass large fortunes, whilst investors have ultimately acquired their interest in such properties at enormous premiums.

Similar opportunities to those which presented themselves in the early days of gold mining in South Africa, and by which such undertakings as the South African Gold Trust and the Consolidated Gold Fields of South Africa, as well as certain prominent individuals, were enabled to make fabulous profits and fortunes, are offered to-day in West Australia, New Zealand, British Columbia, and British Guiana, with the important additional advantage of greater security from political disturbances.

West Australia is regarded by some as destined to prove itself the greatest and richest goldfield yet discovered. In 1886 the value of its gold production was about £1,100, while in 1895 it was valued at about £879,700. The machinery now in course of transit and erection will, it may safely be predicted, make the return for 1896 much greater. Better than the general consensus of opinion as to the value of these fields is the fact that crushings from fourteen West Australian mines, aggregating 35,362 tons of ore, are stated to have given a yield of 147,404 oz. of gold, or an average of over 4 oz. per ton—a remarkable result, and a very significant one, considering that the mines in question are situated widely apart and in different sections of the fields—viz., five at Murchison, five at Coolgardie, and four at Hannan's.

The mineral wealth of New Zealand is also proverbial amongst those who are acquainted with the subject, but lack of capital and the proper mechanical and metallurgical appliances have retarded its progress. Notwithstanding this fact, however, it is stated that, since any proper records of its production have been kept, the value of its gold exports have been placed at £50,000,000.

There, as also in British Columbia and British Guiana, the employment of capable and trustworthy engineers and the judicious expenditure of capital, combined with the application of modern machinery and processes, are all that is necessary to ensure a profitable yield of an abundance of the precious metals.

A large field is also open for the safe employment of capital on properties the values of which have been determined by individuals or Companies lacking the necessary funds for their flotation, or with which to provide plant and machinery.

In such cases as these the engineers employed by the Company will be entrusted with the duty of an exhaustive examination of the properties, in order to ascertain their present and prospective values before the Directors employ the funds of the Company in rendering any financial assistance.

To those conversant with such matters it is well known the enormous advantages and profits which accrue to individuals or Companies able to render assistance in such cases.

Another fruitful source of revenue is the cheap purchase of blocks of Vendors' Shares frequently held by miners, whose means for prosecuting further research for mineral often depend upon realising at nominal figures the Shares acquired by them in exchange for claims or leases sold. The Directors have already a free option, at a price much below the market value, to acquire a block of Vendors' Shares in a Company whose property is reported to be of immense value, and whose crushing plant is on its way up to the mines, and is expected to be very shortly at work.

The Directors will also be able to employ a portion of the funds of the Company in issuing and guaranteeing the capital of approved industrial and other enterprises, and in the amalgamation and reconstruction of undertakings of proved merit and value.

The Company is empowered by its Memorandum and Articles of Association to carry on the business of a Trading Company, and as such to deal in all kinds of merchandise and machinery and all requisites for mining operations, and to act as agents for the letting out on royalties of processes for the recovery of gold, and to provide the necessary plant for the same.

The Company has offered to it the options mentioned on the first page of the Prospectus, the estimates and statements respecting which are made upon the faith of, and taken from information supplied by the Companies interested or referred to. Nothing whatever has been or will be paid for these options, and the Directors are in no way committed to the exercise of any of them, nor are they in any way committed to any undertaking or business whatsoever, but are free to accept or reject any or all business already under offer.

It is not intended to employ the whole of the funds of the Company in any one enterprise, but, as far as possible, to distribute their investment over a wide area, thus limiting all risk in this respect, and ensuring the principle of averages in the selection of investments.

The Company will have the opportunity of associating with other similar undertakings, having organised staffs of engineers now on the various fields, in addition to employing its own representatives, so that in this respect it will not be delayed in getting to work.

A reference to the results accomplished by similar ventures is sufficient to indicate the advantages to investors of co-operating together in a business proven to be most lucrative when carried on under the advice of experienced engineers. Modern machinery and the application of newly-discovered processes having reduced gold mining to a commercial industry, it only needs that its operations be conducted on sound principles and under experienced engineers to make it second to none in its revenue-earning power, while its produce finds a ready market at a fixed and permanent price throughout the world.

There are no Founders' Shares.

No promotion money has been or will be paid to anyone, the whole of the capital of the Company being available for the business of the Company.

The only contract is one dated the 15th day of July, 1896, and made between Henry Ward Tanner, the Promoter, of the one part, and the Company of the other part, whereby, in consideration of the payment by the Promoter of all expenses incidental to the formation of the Company up to the first allotment of Shares in the Company, the Company agrees to give to the Promoter an option for three years to purchase 50,000 Ordinary Shares in the Company at par.

The Memorandum and Articles of Association of the Company, and the above-mentioned Contract with the Company, may be inspected at the Offices of the Solicitors to the Company.

Prospectuses, with Forms of Application, may be obtained from the Bankers, Brokers, Solicitors, and at the Offices of the Company.

Applications for Shares should be made on the following Form or the Form accompanying the Prospectus, and forwarded to the Bankers of the Company, the Commercial Bank of Scotland, Limited, 62, Lombard-street, E.C., and Head Office, Edinburgh, and Branches in Scotland, together with a remittance of 2s. 6d. per Share, which is payable on application. If no allotment is made this remittance will be returned in full, and where the number of Shares allotted is less than that applied for, the balance will be applied towards the payment due on allotment, and any excess will be returned to the applicant.

London, August, 1896.

This Form may be cut out and sent entire to the Bankers of the Company, the Commercial Bank of Scotland, Limited, 62, Lombard-street, E.C., Head Office, Edinburgh, and branches in Scotland, accompanied with a cheque for the amount of deposit payable on application.

PROSPECTUS.

This Company is formed to carry on business as a promoting, financial, and mining Company, and its first enterprise will be to purchase and deal with the auriferous district of Huruapa, Chihuahua, Mexico, a well-known mineral area, which has been in the possession of the present Vendors, who are the native proprietors, for many years past.

The object of the present issue is to provide the actual purchase price ($300,000 Mex., at rate of exchange about £33,150) to be paid in apportioned amounts to the native owners, and to furnish a working capital estimated to be ample to properly organise a scientific development of the immense mineral resources of the property, and to dispose of the Mines, either singly or in sections. It will thus be observed that subscribers of the capital of this Company are invited to take a position usually occupied by a promoter, and it is submitted that the shares should, on the merits, command and maintain a substantial premium above the price of issue.

The Estate above referred to, a sketch scale plan of which accompanies the Prospectus, is entirely freehold, has water power for driving mills, is well wooded, covers an area of about four sities or thirty square miles, and contains groups of gold and silver Mines to which special reference is made in the reports on the property, a feature being the existence of gold-yielding ores of high grade in considerable quantity. Notwithstanding the developments, the territory is described as a virgin goldfield. On one section of the properties there is a 10-stamp mill, which has been worked at a large profit, although in a primitive manner, by the Vendors.

Accompanying the Prospectus are extracts from a Report, dated the 5th November, 1895, in which Capt. Francis Drake, M.E., gives his description of Twenty-six Mines in various states of development on the property, and his estimates of the ores visible or now available (amounting approximately to $1,000,000 Mex.) in certain of the Mines. Mr. William Liddle, M.I.C.E., an engineer of experience who is now in Mexico, writes and cables his opinion that such Report is a conservative one, and that the value of the property has been understated rather than overstated. Certain associates of this Company have nominated by cable Señor Don Louis Hijar Haro, a practical mining engineer (who has for some years been in the service of The Real del Monte Mining Company, the largest and most important dividend-paying mining institution in Mexico), to personally examine the property and compare same with the above Report. This gentleman, who is entirely independent either of the Vendors or the Experts who have previously reported, has concluded his survey, and cables (June 5th, 1896) as follows:—"Have examined the mines and workings; can fully confirm Drake's Report in all essential particulars, HIJAR." A comprehensive Report from Señor Don Louis Hijar Haro has been received (August 7th) thoroughly substantiating this cable.

Although the Reports are stated to furnish but an outline of the Mines on the Huruapa property, the Directors desire that subscribers should draw their own conclusions from such description of the magnitude and promise of the undertaking, rather than that the usual estimates of profits should be set forth in this Prospectus. It may be sufficient to state that, having regard to the terms under which the property is to be acquired by the Company and to its capabilities, the prospects of development without delay or large outlay are certainly favourable; for it will be observed from the scale plan that the Los Hundidos Gold Mines on the North-west section of the Huruapa are situate within a mile of the Railway by which the ores from these mines can be cheaply conveyed to a newly erected 50-stamp Crushing Mill and reduction works at Zapote. This Mill has been constructed at large outlay by the present owners, is driven by water power, and the necessary modern works and complete establishment are on a considerable scale. The gold ores of the Los Hundidos group could therefore, by arrangement (which is now being negotiated), be realised without the delays and outlay inseparable from the erection of a reduction establishment for that section of the Mines on the Huruapa.

This Company is bound by no purchase contract, but has options contained in two bonds, dated respectively March 28th, 1896, from Señor Don Martin Salido the father, and Señor Don Martin Salido the son, comprising rights, in consideration of deposits then paid, to purchase the freehold of the property, together with all buildings thereon, water and timber rights belonging thereto, and the mill and mines, at the price above stated.

These options are current for six months from the date of the said bonds, and the benefit of them has been vested in the Company on the allotment of the Adventurers' Shares as above stated.

A print of the Company's Memorandum of Association is endorsed on the Prospectus, and copies of the said Bonds and Reports upon which the above statements are based, can be inspected by applicants at the offices of the Company's Solicitor.

Application for Shares must be made on the printed Form of Application, and lodged with the Company's Bankers. If no allotment is made the deposit will be returned to the applicant in full forthwith, and if a partial allotment any surplus of deposit will be applied in further payment upon the Shares allotted. A settlement and quotation will be applied for in due course. Prospectus and full reports can be obtained of the Secretary and Bankers.

August 11th, 1896.

The Form below may be cut out and used as an Application for Shares.

PROSPECTUS.

This Company has been formed to acquire as a going concern the whole of the Assets and Undertaking known as:—

which is, and has always been, the most prosperous of the subsidiary Companies established by the Pneumatic Tyre Company, Limited.

The Pneumatic Tyre Company, Limited, itself was founded in 1889, and in 1890 an independent business was commenced in France.

Owing to the difficulty in establishing a commercial undertaking in a foreign country, the French business was in its inception founded by the appointment of M. Adolphe Clément, the oldest and largest cycle manufacturer in France, as sole licensee.

The business was conducted solely by M. Clément under this arrangement in 1890, 1891, 1892, and during the cycling season of 1893; and he developed the business rapidly, and large profits were earned in each year.

Under this arrangement, however, the interest of the parent Company was confined to the income derived from royalties, the profits from actual trading being, by agreement, the exclusive property of M. Clément.

At the close of the Season 1893, it was recognised that the business was developing with such rapidity that it could not be carried on with advantage by any single Cycle Manufacturer, however large; and with a view to placing the tyre in a more independent position with regard to the remainder of the French Trade, La Cie. Française des Pneumatiques Dunlop was formed.

That Company proved eminently successful, and its assets and undertaking have been sold to the Vendor to this Company for the sum of £364,000.

The purchase contract further provides for the extinction of a royalty of 2s. 3d. per pair hitherto paid by La Cie. Française des Pneumatiques Dunlop to M. Clément as a consideration for the surrender of his original licence.

La Compagnie Française des Pneumatiques Dunlop is purchased as from the 1st October, 1895, and the whole of the profits from that date become the property of this Company.

The Vendor has also agreed to reserve out of his purchase-money £100,000 to be handed to the Company as additional working capital.

The Royalty payable to The Dunlop Pneumatic Tyre Co., Ltd., is not extinguished, and continues payable to that Company as hitherto.

Exceedingly valuable agreements have been entered into with leading English and French cycle manufacturers doing business in France, for the exclusive use of Dunlop Tyres for terms of years.

Too much importance cannot, in the opinion of the Directors, be attached to this new feature in the business, as it insures a largely increased volume of trade, and consequently a greater earning power for the Company.

POSITION AND PROSPECTS.

The splendidly-situated works at Levallois-Perret (Seine), occupied by La Compagnie Française des Pneumatiques Dunlop, were specially built for its requirements in 1894. They are found with all the most modern plant and machinery, and are capable of meeting all demands of both the cycle tyre and vehicle tyres trades in France. These works require no outlay whatever.

The Dunlop tyre in France, as in England, has obtained a great reputation for quality and speed, and, as a result, is recognised as the leading tyre there.

CARRIAGE TYRE DEPARTMENT.

After two years of careful experiment, Carriage Tyres have been brought to perfection, and during the current season trade in these tyres is being rapidly established.

It is anticipated that both the Carriage and Motor Car Tyre trade will in future become large factors in the business of the Company, and important arrangements have been made which will greatly facilitate the development of this department.

As a guide to the future earning powers of this Company, it may be stated that, before ascertaining profits, a total sum has been paid in royalties alone since the first introduction of the business into France amounting to the sum of £64,129 9s. 2d., irrespective of which large profits accrued to M. Clément, while La Compagnie Française des Pneumatiques Dunlop paid large dividends and placed considerable sums to reserve.

All expenses of the series of lawsuits entered into by the Company for the establishment of its patent rights have also been paid out of profits. These cases have been in progress for the past three years, and the Experts appointed by the French Courts have only recently handed in their reports to the effect that, in their opinion, all wired-on tyres in France are infringements of the Company's well-known patents.

It is considered that, having regard to the declaration and reports of these French Legal Experts in favour of the Company, the profits hitherto made do not nearly represent the results which should accrue to this Company in the immediate future. The Company is further advised that infringing firms will, in the event of the Courts adopting the reports of the Experts, be liable to the Company in very heavy damages.

The following are the agreements which have been secured for the use of Dunlop Tyres exclusively in France:—

La Société des Cycles Gladiator, including Phebus for	20	years.
Humber & Co., Ltd., Rue du Quartre Septembre, Paris ,,	5	,,
The Coventry Machinists Co... ... ... ,,	10	,,
The Singer Cycle Co., Ltd. .... ,,	8	,,
The John Griffiths Cycle Corporation, Ltd. ... ... ,,	8	,,

These firms, with the continued support of M. Clément (the largest customer of the Company), form an amalgamation unequalled in the Cycle Trade of any country, the combined orders of these great firms providing an enormous output; in fact, it is estimated that the orders from these firms alone will realise a profit sufficient to pay a substantial dividend on the total capital of this Company.

These combinations should place this business, which has always been prosperous, in an unrivalled position, with perfectly appointed works, ample working capital and cash reserves, and with an assured business having a much larger earning capacity than La Compagnie Française des Pneumatiques Dunlop has ever previously enjoyed.

The formation of The Dunlop Pneumatic Tyre Company (France), Limited, will provide the following Assets and Working Capital, including the amount of £100,000 reserved by the Vendor:—

Stock, Machinery, and Plant, as valued 18th May, 1896	£18,964	17	10
Capital in Reserve, including Cash Balances in hand 18th May, 1896	118,722	10	8
Book Debts, as valued 18th May, 1896...	22,991	10	2
	160,678	18	8
Patent Rights, written down before Expert's decision to ...	6,590	13	9
	£167,269	12	5
Less debts outstanding ...	£13,947	4	8
Total ...	£153,322	7	9

To the above are to be added the Trading Profits accruing to the Company since October 1st, 1895, but which are not yet ascertained.

Contingent claims upon firms who have infringed are not taken into account.

The Directors are advised that the Patent rights taken over are exceedingly valuable, owing to the Reports of the Experts above referred to, and that the sum at which they are written down to is altogether disproportionate to their real value.

An agreement has been entered into with Mr. Arthur du Cros under which he will continue to act as Managing Director of this Company.

The valuable services of Mr. Henry E. Watson have also been retained in the capacity of General Manager.

It will thus be seen that the hitherto successful management and organisation will be continued.

The Vendor will pay all expenses of every kind up to and including the completion of the purchase.

Stock Exchange quotations in London, Dublin, and Birmingham will be applied for in due course.

The contracts entered into are as follows:—

1. Agreement dated 18th day of June, 1896, between Adolphe Clément, Arthur du Cros, and Harvey du Cros, Directors of La Compagnie Française des Pneumatiques Dunlop, and Percy Baker Dobson, which agreement was duly confirmed by the said Company in General Meeting on the 6th day of July, 1896.

2. Agreement dated August 8th, 1896, between Percy Baker Dobson and the Dunlop Pneumatic Tyre Co. (France), Ltd., being an agreement for sale to the Company.

3. Agreement dated August 8th, 1896, between the Dunlop Pneumatic Tyre Company (France), Ltd., and Arthur du Cros.

The business will be taken over subject to all existing contracts. These are of trade character and necessary for the working of the concern, but including as they do the above-mentioned tyre agreements and numerous contracts with customers and others, it is deemed unwise to specify them. There are also other contracts relating to the formation of the Company, and subscriptions to its Capital, and otherwise, which may technically fall within Sec. 38 of the Companies Act, 1867. Subscribers will be held to have had notice of all these contracts, and to have waived all right to be supplied with particulars of such contracts and to have agreed with the Company as Trustee for the Directors, and other persons liable, not to make any claim whatsoever or to take any proceedings under the said section in respect of any non-compliance therewith.

Applications for Shares should be made on the form enclosed with the prospectus, and forwarded to the Bankers of the Company, with the amount of the deposit. If no allotment is made the deposit will be returned in full, and where the number of Shares allotted is less than the number applied for, the balance will be applied towards the payment due on allotment, and any excess returned to the applicant.

Copies of Prospectus, with Forms of Application for Shares, can be obtained at the offices of the Company, or of its Bankers, Brokers, and Solicitors.

The Memorandum and Articles of Association, and the said Contracts specified above, can be seen at the offices of the London Solicitor to the Company.

Mr. G. R. FEARBY cabled on 12th May, 1896.—"The average of samples, Hill End Consols, 5 ozs."

Financial News, 7th April, 1896:—"The Hill End Mine has crushed 53 tons, yielding 284 oz. of gold."

Australian Mail, 9th April, 1896:—"The crushing returns of the Hill End Mine in the North-East Coolgardie Goldfield have been sufficiently high to attract considerable attention."

The Mine's record stands thus:—

March, April, and May, 1895	78 tons ...	1,673 ozs.
June, August, and September, 1895	84 ,, ...	1,360 ,,
October, November, and December, 1895	220 ,, ..	3,706 ,,
January, February, and March, 1896	163 ,, ...	1,419 ,,
Total production	545 ,, ...	8,158 ,,

Gold to the value of, say, £30,000 has thus been yielded by this mine.

Financial News, 28th May, 1896:—"A very rich lode has been struck in the famous Hill End Mine, recently purchased by Dr. Simon, representing a French Syndicate. The stone is said to be the richest ever seen in the mine, and is expected to go 30 ozs. per ton."

The Hill End Consols Mine is situated about half a mile to the North-East of the above Hill End Mine.

PROSPECTUS.

This Company is formed to acquire, further develop, and work the Hill End Consols Mine, being Lease No. 1845E, consisting of about 24 acres, held under lease from the Western Australian Government at a yearly rental of 20s. per acre, situated about half a mile to the north-east of the famous Hill End Mine, in the Broad Arrow District, Western Australia, referred to in above newspaper extracts. To the north, and adjoining the block, is the well-known Pride of the Arrow, and Mr. Fearby reports that the reef of the latter property goes through the centre of the Hill End Consols.

It further appears from Mr. Fearby's report that a shaft has been sunk on the Hill End Consols to a depth of 70 feet, and the latest information received by cable from Mr. Fearby, on 12th May, 1896, is to the effect that the average sample from the lode gives 5 ozs. to the ton, the property developing well, and that the stone obtained on the adjoining property gives as much as 9 ozs. 15 dwt. per ton.

Mr. Fearby states that the reef of the Pride of the Arrow property is bearing N. 20 degrees W., and passes through the Hill End Consols block. He also says that he went down the shafts on the former property, and that they have a fine body of stone, showing rich gold, and, referring to the Hill End Consols Mine, concludes:—"I consider this block has a very good position, and should develop into a valuable property, considering the mines around it and the reef passing through it, which undoubtedly it does."

Mr. J. Wyatt, M.E., has also reported on the property, and states:—"In conclusion, I have no hesitation in saying that you have a very valuable property, as with a very small capital, judiciously spent, it would turn out a really good one."

Water is reported to have recently been struck at a depth of 250 ft. on the Golden Arrow property, adjoining the Hill End.

Mr. Fearby cabled on May 12th, 1896, agreeing to act as Consulting Engineer to the Company, and the mine at the present moment is being managed and worked by him on behalf of the present owners.

The Australian Mail of April 9th, 1896, states that the Hill End Mine, between March, 1895, and March, 1896, crushed 545 tons of ore, which gave a yield of 8,158 oz. of gold, to the value of about £30,000. The record of the Hill End Mine is understood to be the best in the Western Australian fields, and the Directors have every confidence that the property now offered will develop into one of the best-paying mines in the district.

The amount to be paid by the Company under the Contract below mentioned has been fixed at £100,000, payable as to £10,000 in cash and not less than £50,000 in fully-paid shares, and the balance in cash or shares, at the option of the Directors, leaving £25,000 available for working capital.

All charges and expenses in connection with the formation of the Company up to and including allotment will be paid by The West Australian Trust, Limited.

The only Contract entered into by the Company is that for acquiring the mine. It is dated 5th August, 1896, and made between The West Australian Trust, Limited, of the one part, and the Company of the other part.

The above Contract and copies of the Memorandum and Articles of Association, and Mr. Fearby's and Mr. Wyatt's reports before referred to, may be seen by Subscribers at the Offices of the Company's Solicitors. These reports are the foundation for the statements made in this Prospectus.

The above Contract recites the Contracts under which the West Australian Trust, Limited, and its immediate Vendor are respectively acquiring the property, and other contracts have been made in relation to the formation and promotion of the Company, but to none of these contracts is the Company a party, and Subscribers shall be deemed to have had notice of all such contracts, and to have agreed with the Company (as Trustee for the Directors and other persons liable), not to make any claim whatsoever, or to take any proceedings under Section 38 of the Companies Act, 1867, or otherwise.

Application for Shares should be made on, or in accordance with, the form enclosed in the Prospectus, and sent in with the required deposit to the Bankers of the Company. If the Shares allotted be less than the number applied for, the surplus of the amount paid on deposit will be appropriated towards the amount due on allotment.

Prospectuses and Application Forms may be obtained at the Offices of the Company, and also of the Bankers, Solicitors, and Brokers.

HUNTING SONGS OF THE FUTURE.

Come forth, come forth, my fiery steed;
It is a hunting morn;
Thy snorting valves proclaim thy speed,
Thy wheels the greensward scorn;
And a-hunting we will go, a-hunting we will go,
Thy firebox fill with hearty will,
And a-hunting we will go.

No spur my puffing steed requires,
No rein in hand I take;
I make him go with roaring fires,
And curb him with a brake;
So a-hunting we will go, a-hunting we will go;
His iron soul delights in coal,
And a-hunting we will go.

His aëroplanes are true and light,
And lift him in the air;
O'er hedge and brook we take our flight,
And naught for them we care.
Then a-hunting we will go, a-hunting we will go;
O'er vale and hill we fear no spill,
And a-hunting we will go.

And when at last his steel's worn out,
And all reduced to scrap,
By rolling-mills all mixed about,
He'll turn out new, mayhap;
And a-hunting we will go, a-hunting we will go;
Though quite worn out, we yet may shout,
"A-hunting we will go!"

Almaviva.

Yoicks; tally-ho! and off we go,
Nor whip nor spur they need
To mend the pace
Who join the chase
Upon the motor steed.
Through briar and brake our way we take,
We shirk nor ditch nor dike.
On for the brush
With one wild rush
Go motor steed and bike.

Away, away, at break of day,
O'er hill and dale resounds
The huntsman's horn that cheers the morn,
The baying of the hounds.
The fox cries "Zounds! these metal hounds
May well make one despair;
We don't complain of bridle rein,
But is the motor fair?
Pneumatic tyres your brave old sires
Dreamt not of in their day."

Ah! Reynard lad, your case is sad,
There's none to say you "neigh!"
Yoicks; tally-ho! and off we go,
Nor whip nor spur they need
To mend the pace
Who join the chase
Upon the iron steed.
Through briar and brake our way we take,
We shirk not ditch nor dike,
On for the brush,
With one wild rush,
Go motor steed and bike.

Baritone.

On our bykes we join the meet,
In our coats and breeches neat;
Or in our motor-cars we join the merry gladsome fray;
And we tie electric wheels
On our little houndies' heels,
And o'er the crops and furrows wheel our cheerful, gleeful way.
Yoick! Tally-ho! See us go!
We steam all through the mud,
And we hope to meet no flood
Of burn or wimpling river as we hunt, and as we stray;
With electric push and power
We screech from out their bower
The foxies which were happy where their ferny cushions lay.
Yoick! Tally-ho! See us go!
But the cream of all the fun,
Is the foxies when they run,
They run before us joyful, all the morning, all the day;
For the foxies have no wheels,
So we never see their heels,
And they live for sport another day as debonair and gay.
Yoick! Tally-ho! See us go!
Oh, motor-cars are smart,
When with horses we must part!
But see the foxies grinning when they note this gaseous bray;
If you bend a list'ning ear,
Their derision you may hear;
"And oh, I wish the day would come!" 'tis this the foxies say.
"Yoick! Tally-ho! See us go!"

Christie Deas.

Poets of old-day have chanted the praises
Of horse and hound. They may say what they like
In favour of such pre-historical crazes,
But give me my auto-electrical bike.
Give me the hounds that require no feeding
(In summer they simply lie by in a box);
Never a care or a worry in breeding
Our patent elec-automatical fox.
Watch how our Master—a sporting patrician
(Of all M.F.H.s acknowledged the best)—
Says, with a nod to his first electrician,
"Now touch the button, Jim, I'll do the rest."
See the field scatter and tail in a minute
Down by that fence of the cruel barbed wire,
That man is over, no—no—he is in it!
Wheel over handle—he's punctured his tyre.
Look at that lady go straight as an arrow
Down by the stream where the willow tree grows.
Nothing to her, be the stream broad or narrow,
Presses a lever, and—over she goes.
Straight for that gate a one-wheeler goes flying,
With inches to spare, too, he clears the top bar;
That man and wife on their tandem are trying
To get past that new auto-family car.
Never a blank day—no check that enrages,
Now we can make runs slow, medium, or fast.
That is the hunting for latter-day ages,
Horse, hound, and fox are quite things of the past.

Godfather.

We care not a fig for the wind or the sky,
The weather we're utterly scorning;
For, whether it's raining or whether it's dry,
'Twill do for a hunting morning.
Then up on our cars and away!
Send the red flag ahead to give warning;
The scene looks uncommonly gay,
Our funnels the landscape adorning.
Then hark, oh, forward!
Tally-ho! Take it slow! Tally-ho!
The hounds and the huntsmen we do not require
We don't chase the fox or the stag now;
To brushes the ladies no longer aspire,
And antlers we seek not to bag now.
Our quarry must needs be more tame,
Since at three miles an hour we must lag now,
So, in order to keep up the game,
We hunt the old man with the flag now!
Then hark, oh, forward!
Tally-ho! Take it slow! Tally-ho!
Then here's to Diana, the queen of our sport,
Autocartic, but not autocratic!
And long may we live to attend at her court,
And to share in her pleasures ecstatic.
Our steeds cannot jump very high,
And their snorting is rather emphatic,
But their metal no one can deny,
And their action is quite automatic.
Then hark, oh, forward!
Tally-ho! Take it slow! Tally-ho.

Vox.

Hurrah for the meet,
On a motor so fleet,
We want neither habit or topper.
We follow the hounds
Without leaps and bounds,
Or the danger of coming a cropper.
On our favourite steed,
At a high rate of speed,
We scud through the sticks and the stubble,
With pleasure to find,
Before and behind,
There is nothing to give us much trouble.
Then, hurrah for the meet, tally ho!
On a motor so fleet, tally ho!
Without losing our breath, we are in at the death.
Oh, the hunt is a treat, tally ho!
What ho, for the meet,
On a motor so fleet,
Now we're rid of the habit and topper,
We can keep to the fore,
For there'll be nevermore,
The danger of coming a cropper.
With the dash of a deer,
Our steed we can steer,
When we want neither whip, crop, or bridle,
At the dogs' welcome bay,
We are off and away,
Oh, hunting's a treat—for the idle.
Then, hurrah for the meet, tally ho!
On a motor so fleet, tally ho!
Without losing our breath, we are in at the death.
Let's away to the meet, tally ho!

Georgina.

When the fox is found by the scenting hound,
And you've turned the handle, so!
The electric gee, like a lively flea,
Hops off, and away you go.
Neither head you'll find, nor a tail behind,
For he's no-end of a horse;
But he has four legs, four flexible pegs,
Attached to the trunk, of course.
If your mount is hired, then away you're wired,
As straight as a London tram,
By electric pow'r, at a bob the hour,
Like a shilling telegram.

Chorus.

So a cheer for the motor force-y-o,
And the belle of the hunt, so sauce-y-o;
Then sing out "Hooray, tally ho, and away!"
And be off on the auto-horse-y-o.

At the first high fence goes General Spence,
A regular hunting swell,
But his gee-gee shies as its hind legs rise,
And he jumps the horse as well.
At a rattling pace next follows his Grace,
Refusing to use the break,
Till electric heat penetrates the seat,
Producing a stomach-ache.
Then a foreign Count, one leg of whose mount
Breaks off as the brute sticks fast,
Sits up, like a fool on a three-legged stool,
While the field goes riding past.

Chorus.

Then, hurrah for the motor force-y-o,
For there's nothing in life so sauce-y-o
As the rollicking fun of a furious run
On the back of the auto-horse-y-o.

Oom Paul.

The hunters' moon is up, my boys,
'Tis time to go a hunting;
Upon our steeds, with little noise,
We'll ride—the gee-gee shunting.

The stag and fox have legs, my boys,
That tire the more they use 'em;
But iron steeds have no alloys,
If you do not abuse 'em.

Then to the meet, a thousand strong,
We'll hie, our trumpets blowing;
Our bells decoy the sheep along,
And set the cattle lowing.

The yokels stand and stare, I fear,
But we fly by unheeding;
Let stag and fox and pussy sneer,
But "motors" need no feeding.

We'll jump the gates—I mean we'll ope;
No spurs, whips, crops, or switches,
But only just one bit of rope,
To pull us through the ditches.

O'er hill and dale—ploughed fields are rot—
We'll stick as tight as wedges;
Stag, hare, and fox, the blooming lot,
We'll chase through prickly hedges.

Ere long we'll hunt with metal hounds,
With bark and bite miraculous;
For science seems to have no bounds,
No difficulties tackle us.

Then three times three for the iron gee,
No C.C. now can stop him;
When hunting's done—'twixt you and me,
Why, then, p'raps one can—'pop' him.

La Plata.

Oh! the auto-car on a hunting morn
Is not a thing to laugh to scorn:
"The meet," "the run," "the in at the death"
Can managed be without loss of breath;
And hounds, altho' they still are needed,
Guess they'll ere long be superseded;
For the view-halloo can be whistled out
By pressing a nob on a crooked spout!
And marvels—would strike the ancients dumb—
Thro' electrors are wrought and pe-tro-le-um!
Yo-ho! yo-ho! away we go,
With a jolly slap dash,
And a crash, and a smash,
'Gainst, wall, and fence, and gate five-barred;
They are nought to him who is auto-carred.
Your father's father would have burked it,
And your father would have shirked it.

They rode a creature called a horse,
Extinct as the dodo now, of course,
Which, full of pranks as soon as colted,
Trotted and ambled, shied, and bolted!
But the "auto" neither thinks nor feels,
But moves along on its well-greased wheels,
And whether the route be near or far,
Heedless itself or its rider to scar,
It bangs thro' fence or centupled bar;
So hurrah! for the auto-moto car!
Oh, the auto-car, on a hunting morn,
Is not a thing to laugh to scorn.

ENTRE NOUS.

THE Queen is to leave Osborne on the afternoon of Thursday week for Balmoral, where her Majesty will reside until November 12 or 13. The Queen is to be accompanied to Scotland by Princess Beatrice and Princess Victoria of Schleswig Holstein, and when Princess Beatrice goes to Germany her Majesty will be joined at Balmoral by Princess Louise.

During the first month of the Queen's stay at Balmoral, Lord Halsbury, Lord Balfour of Burleigh, and Lord Cross are to be the Ministers in Attendance, and in October Lord James of Hereford and Mr. Henry Chaplin will be there. Lord Salisbury is to be at Balmoral to meet the Emperor of Russia.

The Dowager Lady Ampthill, Dowager Lady Churchill, and the Dowager Duchess of Atholl are to be the Ladies in Waiting on the Queen during the first six weeks of her residence at Balmoral.

Apropos of the celebration of the Queen's sixty years' reign, it has been suggested to me that the occasion could not be better marked than by the raising of an additional fund to supplement the £70,000 devoted at the Queen's desire in the Jubilee year to founding an Institute for Nurses. Heaven forbid that I should in any way encourage a renewal in Truth of the idiotic correspondence on this subject which has been running in the Daily Telegraph; but this particular suggestion certainly seems deserving of consideration. In deciding what form the celebration is to take, the Queen's personal wishes ought certainly to have great weight, and by disposing of this fund in the way she did in 1887 the Queen gave the plainest possible indication of the kind of celebration which she herself prefers. The present endowment of the Jubilee Institute for Nurses only brings in about £2,100 a year, and there is urgent need of a larger income.

If there is to be any question of a public holiday on this occasion, it should be clearly understood that the holiday is to be provided at the expense of employers of labour. To decree a general holiday is practically to compel every wage-earner to sacrifice a day's pay for the celebration of the occasion—a form of compulsory rejoicing which is only justifiable if every individual concerned consents to the compulsion. If, however, all employers are willing to pay their servants their week's wages as usual, notwithstanding the holiday, by all means let us have a celebration of this kind. This will mean that every employer of labour is contributing a day's wages of his establishment to the celebration fund. If employers are willing to do this, it will be a most gratifying manifestation of loyalty, and thoroughly satisfactory to all parties.

The question was asked in Truth the other day—"Who trains elderly gentlemen to walk backwards in Royal processions?" A correspondent seems to think he has found the answer to the question in the following extract from a book on bees, which he sends to me:—

> As she (the queen bee) leisurely traverses the combs, the bees clear a passage on her approach, their heads turned towards her. . . . . The affection they show for her is plainly the mere loyalty of subjects, rather than the personal love of a child . . . . and to fully realise its nature we must take into account the intense patriotic spirit of the bees; they know that the queen is essential to the prosperity of the commonwealth, and as such, and not caring a straw, or a crumb of wax, about her individual person, they cherish her devotedly, and show their lives to be bound up in hers."

"Who taught the bees this?" asks the gentleman who sends me this extract, "and is it inconsistent with either their dignity or sanity?" Apparently he is under the impression that the elderly gentlemen to whom I referred learn to walk backward by the light of nature, or that Providence imparts the necessary instinct for this mode of locomotion in court functionaries. I do not know whether my correspondent is an elderly gentleman, but if he were suddenly given a place at Court, I think he would speedily exemplify in his own person that the power of walking backwards does not develope itself spontaneously in human beings. I also fancy that he can never have seen a procession of Court officials, or he would not libel Nature or Providence by suggesting that so ludicrous a spectacle is a natural phenomenon. If nature inspired man to proceed stern foremost, she would at least teach him how to do it with dignity and grace—accomplishments which no Court functionary ever mastered, nor, in my opinion, ever will.

The above extract shows how easy it is for any one to misread a passage in order to support some conclusion which he has previously formed in his own mind. If my correspondent will look at his author again, he will see that he does not even say that the bees walk backwards. They merely clear a passage for the queen as she approaches, and turn their heads towards her. This is precisely what a crowd does in the streets of London when her Majesty passes. A little compulsion from the police may be occasionally necessary before the passage is cleared, but the crowd turn their faces to the Sovereign spontaneously. This is nature if you like, and the passage quoted shows that in this respect bee nature is very much like human nature. But until it can be shown that the bees perform absurd antics entirely contrary to nature in order to testify their loyalty I am inclined to think that the bee is the superior being.

The Princess of Wales, who is staying with the Duke and Duchess of Cumberland at their seat in Upper Austria, near Gmunden, will proceed from that place to Copenhagen, travelling by way of Lubeck. The Princess is to stay in Denmark for about two months, and H.R.H. and the Prince of Wales are expected to return to Sandringham for the season on October 30, as the first shooting-party is to be invited from November 2 to 7.

The Duke of York will conclude his visit to the Duke and Duchess of Devonshire at Bolton Abbey on Friday night, when he is going to Scotland to stay with the Duke and Duchess of Fife, at Mar Lodge, Aberdeenshire.

The Grand Duke and Grand Duchess of Hesse, the Grand Duke Serge of Russia and the Grand Duchess Elizabeth, and Princess Louis of Battenberg are to arrive in London about the middle of next month from Germany, and they will all proceed to Balmoral on a visit to the Queen.

Lord Cadogan returned to Ireland last week and joined Lady Cadogan and his family at the Viceregal Lodge, where a party of visitors were also staying. The Lord-Lieutenant is in villeggiatura at the Viceregal Lodge, the same State not being kept up as at Dublin Castle, nor is the attendance of so many of the household officials required. The week was principally given up to cricket on the Viceregal ground. The leading match, that between the Eton Ramblers and the Viceregal team, also of a very rambling nature, was spoiled by the inclement weather, the wind and rain being in great force on the first day. The players were entertained at the Viceregal Lodge during the week, and on Friday evening a small dance was given.

This week the Zingari visit Ireland, and are the guests of Lord and Lady Cadogan at the Viceregal Lodge. Several cricket matches will be played in the Phœnix Park. Viceregal dinners will be given, followed in some instances by dancing. On Saturday and on Monday, before the opening of the Horse Show, the Leopardstown autumn race meeting takes place. A large Viceregal party is expected to be present each day.

In Ireland some interest is felt regarding the future attitude of the Irish Peers towards Lord Cadogan. Will he be boycotted because of the Land Bill of his Government? Lord Crewe was boycotted simply for refusing to receive a commercial address, which contained—by malice prepense, too—a sentence insulting to his political party. Lord Cadogan, in supporting the Land Bill, has done a good deal more against the interests of the rapacious band of landlords than Lord Crewe ever did. But, then, he has not committed the social crime in Irish society of having Liberal views.

A number of paragraphs have appeared in the papers respecting the office of Lord Warden of the Cinque Ports but the fact does not appear to be known that down to the time of the Duke of Wellington's appointment (about 1829), there was a salary of £5,000 a year annexed to the post. This was abolished when Lord Liverpool died, as were a number of perquisites and privileges, of which he had freely availed himself, and so also had Mr. Pitt.

The Duke of Rutland has closed Belvoir Castle, and a variety of economical changes has been carried out on his estates, while his Derbyshire grouse moor has been let. The Duke and Duchess will live principally abroad for some years, and their only country residence will be Stanton Woodhouse, a small shooting lodge near Bakewell.

Sir John Millais detested "Society" and all kinds of functions. His favourite amusement in London was playing whist at the Garrick, but his happiest times were spent in Scotland, when salmon fishing in the Tay, preferably at Murthly, a place which he loved, and it was a hard blow when he had to give up his tenancy in consequence of changes which took place there after the death of Sir Douglas Stewart. He was always most genial in manner, full of wit and repartee, and the best of good company. Among his most intimate friends were Thackeray, Anthony Trollope, Landseer, Tennyson, and Wilkie Collins. Millais sold his first great picture, "A Huguenot," for £200, but many of his later and much less meritorious works fetched from £2,000 to £4,000 each. His terms for portrait painting considerably exceeded those of Sir Joshua Reynolds from a very early date in his career, and for many years his lowest price for a half-length of life-size was £1,000. Millais made a great deal of money, and he did not waste it.

Millais was an inveterate joker, and he never could resist any opening for a jesting remark. When Newman went to give the first sitting for his portrait, Millais said to him, "Will your Eminence be good enough to place yourself upon that eminence," pointing to a platform in the studio. The Cardinal was exceedingly offended for a minute, and whispered to the friend who accompanied him, "Don't you think I ought to take notice of that?" However, Newman's wrath quickly abated, and he became charmed with Millais before the sittings were finished.

An accident more horrible and deplorable than the death of Mr. Crozier can hardly be imagined, and it behoves theatrical managers to take the most stringent precautions against the repetition of such a catastrophe. Seeing that the same thing has happened again and again in stage history, the greatest blame attaches to all concerned in the case of any accident of such a kind. From the evidence given at the inquest, it would seem that there was as utter an absence of all precaution in arranging this scene at the Novelty Theatre as though no danger whatever existed. The two actors were left to arrange the stabbing between themselves, and such was their arrangement that the life or death of one of them seems, from the evidence of the survivor, to have depended entirely upon his moving an inch or two from the position agreed upon. What are the probabilities of a man preserving a certain attitude at a certain time amid all the excitement of a stirring scene upon the stage? Where such risks are incurred, all details should be systematically arranged in such a way as to put danger out of the question. If stage-managers are not alive to their duty in this respect, it becomes a question whether public authorities should not be armed with the same powers for the protection of life on the stage as they are among the audience.

While racing in the Solent one afternoon last week the Ailsa lost a man overboard. The steam yacht Thistle bore down to the rescue, lowered a dingy, and picked the man up in a half-drowned condition, steamed to Cowes, and procured medical aid for him, and eventually sent him in a boat to his own yacht. Mariners of all classes are proverbially men of few words, but it will surprise most people to hear that neither when the Thistle picked the man up, nor when she subsequently restored him to his ship, did a single soul on board the Ailsa say as much as "Thank you" for the service rendered. It is only fair to say, however, that the owner of the Ailsa was not on board at the time.

There is another little point worthy of notice in connection with this little incident. When the Thistle ran back to Cowes with the Ailsa's man on board she flew a signal for a doctor, and went in the first instance alongside H.M.S. Australia. She was there received with the cry "No doctor on board, try the yacht," i.e., the Victoria and Albert; but no doctor was to be found on board the Royal yacht either. Is it not rather an extraordinary circumstance that there should be no doctor to be found on board a large vessel like the Australia, to say nothing of the Victoria and Albert?

People who are so benighted as still to believe that Scotland is the Paradise of grouse-shooters, will doubtless be surprised to learn that whereas there were not more than half a score of "one-day" bags of more than 100 brace last week—the highest being 190 brace—some of the Yorkshire moors yielded bags of 561½, 390, 365½, and 350 brace. There were more than a score of bags of between 100 brace and 200 brace in Yorkshire. The honours of "the Twelfth" were carried off by Lord Ripon's party of four guns, who killed 1,123 birds at Dallowgill, near Ripon. Lord Rosebery and Lord de Grey were out.

The Hastings authorities have arranged a full and strong programme of attractions for their Carnival next week. On Monday the proceedings open with an illuminated fête and concert. On Tuesday there is to be the inevitable cycling demonstration, with a fancy dress fête in the evening; and on Wednesday the equally inevitable battle of flowers. On Thursday there are to be more illuminations and concerts; and on Friday a Military Tournament and sports. These Carnivals are a great addition to the attractions of the seaside watering places; but I cannot help expressing a hope that Hastings will not exhaust its energies over next week's function. Something might well be done to amuse visitors in the winter and spring as well as in August, and I rather think that a little expenditure in the former direction would pay the town almost better.

I publish with the greatest pleasure the following official statement as to the health of Westgate, in regard to which there has undoubtedly been some misapprehension. There seems no reason, however, for publishing various disclaimers which I have received from hotel-proprietors, each anxious to make it known that his establishment was not the one in which the outbreak of typhoid took place. No one seems to think it necessary to inform me which was the unfortunate hotel, and as the whole town now has a clean bill of health, it seems invidious to distinguish one establishment from another. For my personal information, I should very much like to have the menu in which the source of the outbreak of typhoid is to be looked for:—

The following facts will doubtless suggest to your readers that there is no reason why they should not with confidence visit Westgate-on-Sea. A limited outbreak of typhoid, now stamped out, occurred at one of the hotels in June last. It subsided as quickly as it came; and all the evidence at our disposal indicates with tolerable certainty that the source of the poison was to be found in some article of food, as the drainage of the hotel and milk and water supply were quite satisfactory. In any case, the cause has proved a transitory one. No case has occurred which cannot be traced to the one occasion, and no case whatever has originated in the town outside the hotel. Some of the patients being week-end visitors, have, I regret to say, fallen at their own homes in London. Of those remaining in Westgate, all are now practically convalescent. Dr. Robinson, the Medical Officer of Health, informs me that there has been no diphtheria or other notifiable illness whatsoever in Westgate during the current year.

A correspondent sends me the following verses:—

A PLEA FOR THE CHILDREN.

There is wailing by the water, there is sobbing by the sea,
All the children on the shingle are as wretched as can be;
All the little lads and lasses swarming now on Britain's shore
With their sighing and their crying almost drown the billows' roar.

For a sudden blight has fallen on their summer holidays,
They have heard about the warning which the B. M. J. conveys;*
They have heard how now the doctors (as that cruel journal saith)
Have discovered that to paddle means paralysis and death!

* The British Medical Journal, in a recent paragraph, states that the danger involved in paddling at the seaside is very great.

So they stand beside their nurses, and their look of gladness fades,
And they find but little pleasure in their buckets and their spades,
For they must, alack! no longer—this it is brims sorrow's cup—
Take their little socks and shoes off, and their petticoats tuck up.

Where the waves make shallow lakelets they, poor children! must not stand,
They must not, blithe and barefoot, splash about upon the sand;
They must not the swift invasion of the swirling eddies dare,
Nor, adventurous and happy, track the shrimplet to its lair.

For the B. M. J. has spoken, and the details has supplied
Of a fair-skinned little laddie who would paddle, and who died;
For a month he lay unconscious—Dr. Whitfield Perkins states—
And he suffered from convulsions, too, at not infrequent dates.

Now, though doubtless this sad statement of the Doctor is quite true,
Yet it seems a little stringent therefore paddling to taboo;
Yes, it seems a little needless of the B. M. J. to write
Words that surely must have tended countless parents to affright.

There may be some risk in paddling, but why shock us thus anew?
There's some hazard, for that matter, in whatever children do;
And the B. M. J. might warn us just as well in next week's sheet,
That they run the risk of choking every time they try to eat.

So again we'd ask the doctors not so ardently to seek
To alarm us with new bogies in this manner every week;
Young or old, our every action must involve some risk, of course,
But, oh! why upon our notice take such pains these risks to force?

No answer has been forthcoming from the authorities of the Campbell College, Belfast, to the serious impeachment of the administration of the College which was dealt with in these columns on July 16, and it would seem that they are determined to shirk, if possible, all discussion and inquiry on the subject. The letters that have reached me during the past two or three weeks show that the silence of the governing body, in the face of the damaging statements that have been published, is exciting the greatest uneasiness and dissatisfaction among the local public, and the matter is one of so much importance—the College being the best endowed public school in Ireland—that I need offer no apology for returning to it. To make clear the present position of affairs it is necessary to explain that under the will of the late Mr. Henry Campbell three trustees, one being a member of the Presbyterian Church, and the other two members of the Church of Ireland, were appointed to administer the fund of £200,000 which he bequeathed for the foundation of the school. The two Church of Ireland trustees soon retired, and their places were filled by two Presbyterians, Messrs. A. D. Lemon and R. W. Corry. Neither of these gentlemen has had any personal experience of public school life, and whatever other merits they may possess, it is difficult to understand how they can be qualified to control such an institution as the Campbell College. In filling up the office of headmaster, no attempt was made by advertising or other means to secure a choice of candidates, two local men, one a member of the Church of Ireland, and the other (Mr. J. A. M'Neill) a Presbyterian, being appointed co-Principals of the College. Within a year the former resigned, and the sole charge passed into the hands of Mr. M'Neill, with the result that, contrary to the intention of the founder, the institution is now wholly under Presbyterian control.

The College was opened in September, 1894. In a little over twelve months troubles of the gravest character arose in the school, and, owing to the course taken by Mr. M'Neill, the three senior house masters felt it incumbent upon them to tender their resignations. Their reasons for taking this step have been set forth in a pamphlet. In effect they attribute the difficulties which occurred to Mr. M'Neill's unfitness for the post of headmaster—to his ignorance of public school organisation and discipline, his lack of tact, and his mistaken and mischievous methods of dealing with both his staff and the boys. The senior masters were not alone in finding it impossible to serve under Mr. M'Neill, for a few weeks afterwards four assistant-masters followed their example by resigning. When it is added that between Christmas and Midsummer there was a falling-off of no less than seventy in the number of boys on the roll, that in July last there were only four outside entries for eighteen scholarships, and that in the comparatively short period since the opening of the College, as many as fourteen boys have been expelled, it will be seen that there are ample grounds for the fears which have been excited as to the future of the institution under the present management.

From the facts that I have given above, it is only too clear that a continuance of the existing state of things will be attended by the most disastrous consequences to the College, and the assistance of the Endowed Schools Commission or the proper authorities, whoever they may be, ought to be at once invoked for the purpose of putting an end to it. The first thing that seems to be necessary is a re-constitution of the governing body, so that it may be composed of men qualified by their own education and training to take part in the administration of a big public school, and so, too, that the wishes of the founder with regard to the representation of the Church of Ireland as well as the Presbyterian Church may be duly carried out. There is little doubt that this would be speedily followed by other changes and radical reforms in the system on which the establishment is now conducted. It will certainly be a gross scandal if the usefulness of Mr. Campbell's splendid endowment is allowed to be any longer marred by the incompetence of the persons into whose hands its administration happens to have fallen.

A parent with boys at the Mutley Grammar School, Plymouth, asks whether I know anything of "the Kensington Local Preliminary Examination" at which "successes" have been obtained by this school. The only "Kensington Local" examinations I know of are those run by the man Sturman and his precious "Society of Science, Letters, and Art, of London." If it is these to which the head-master referred in his recent annual report, I venture to give him a friendly word of advice. It is that he should read a few of the exposures of Sturman that have been published in these columns during the past three or four years. I am sure he will then recognise that the less he has to do with Sturman's "exams." the better it will be for the reputation of his school.

The Bishop of Sierra Leone is about to resign his see, and Mr. Chamberlain has very properly declined to advise the issue of letters patent to the next diocesan. It is, therefore, probable that the payment of £500 a year from the four Crown Colonies of the West Coast towards the Bishop's salary will cease, and that the Government contribution towards the maintenance of St. George's Cathedral, Freetown, will be withdrawn. Mr. Chamberlain would have continued the present arrangements "if a strong opinion was manifested in the colony in favour of this course," but no such feeling appears to exist, and indeed, there seems to a general desire for the disestablishment which is now impending.

Bishop Bardsley's selection of Canon Diggle, of Liverpool, for the vacant stall in Carlisle Cathedral and the Archdeaconry of Westmoreland, is a job of the most scandalous kind, and reflects the greatest possible discredit upon that prelate. Canon Diggle is an intimate friend of the Bishop and one of his examining chaplains, but most assuredly he has no claim whatever of any sort or kind to this preferment, which ought properly to have been reserved for a clergyman who has earned such coveted promotion by hard work in the diocese of Carlisle. It is a deliberate slight to the clergy of the diocese (and particularly to those of Westmoreland) to pass them all over in favour of an unknown stranger. We hear a great deal of croaking about the difficulties of the Church of England, but her greatest troubles arise from the flagrant and persistent jobbery of her Bishops, most of whom appear to think that official patronage is to be used (when it is of any value) to provide for their own friends and relations, and this is the system upon which they dispense it—without shame or scruple.

In the days of the Church Commission, when Bishops and Chapters were wrangling over the new arrangements, a very distinguished Tory statesman privately expressed the opinion that the less patronage that is given to the Bishops the better for the Church. He had been brought to this view by the knowledge (which his official position had given to him) of the outrageous jobbing in which the prelates freely indulged themselves. I am afraid that affairs are just as bad now as they were fifty or sixty years ago, and the Church papers rarely protest against even the most disgraceful cases of episcopal nepotism. The "upper clergy," moreover, are sly creatures in "jockeying" patronage. One has heard of the Bishop of X. giving a living in his diocese to a relative of the Bishop of Z., and a few months later, by a curious coincidence, the Bishop of Z. would select a relative of his right reverend brother of X. for preferment.

It was expected that the Bishop of Carlisle would have appointed the Rev. J. Llewellyn Davies, vicar of Kirkby Lonsdale, to the late Archdeacon Cooper's preferment, an arrangement which would have given general satisfaction, both in the diocese and out of it. Mr. Davies is unquestionably the most distinguished ecclesiastic in the diocese, but he is a Broad Churchman and a Liberal, which accounts for his being passed over by a prelate who is not merely a Tory but an Orangeman.

The rectory of Kingswood, Gloucestershire, which is now vacant, will be filled up by popular election, the patrons of the benefice being the payers of tithe. The living is of the net value of £180 a year, with residence.

Rather an interesting point is made in a letter that I have received from a country clergyman on the position and grievances of curates. It was originally intended, he says, that curates should hold office during good behaviour, the Bishop's consent, in writing, to a curate's dismissal beyond all doubt being meant to protect him from capricious and arbitrary treatment. This is clearly shown in the following passage from the form of nomination signed by an incumbent who gives a "title" for ordination to a curate :—

> . . . And I hereby promise and engage with your lordship and the said —— that I will continue to employ the said —— in the office of curate in my said church until he shall be otherwise provided of some ecclesiastical preferment; unless for any fault by him committed he shall be lawfully removed from the same.

If the Bishops did their duty no curate would be removed from his office until some "fault" had been proved against him. But what is their lordships' general practice? It is to give the requisite consent to incumbents to dismiss their curates as a mere matter of form, often without even communicating with the curate, much less giving him a fair hearing. I have myself known scores of cases in which curates have been discharged after years of excellent service without the shadow of a pretence of justification, and solely to satisfy some whim or animus of the incumbent. But episcopal consciences are tough, and this is not the only matter in which a manifest duty is shirked by the right reverend successors of the Apostles.

One cannot but admire the enterprise, not to say assurance, which the clergy display in begging for parochial objects. Last week I was favoured with a circular from a reverend gentleman in the parish of Perranzabulo — it is somewhere in Cornwall—soliciting "a good selection of my specialities for exhibition and sale" at an "advertisement stall" in connection with a church bazaar. "Do not miss the opportunity thus afforded you," says the circular, "of cheaply advertising your specialities, but promptly send me your contribution to this stall, and let it be, I would advise you, as large as possible, so that by wide distribution you may reap the greater benefit." Very likely there are tradesmen who will jump at such a chance, but for my own part, having no "specialities," I am at a loss to know what to send—unless it be a few cuttings from back numbers of TRUTH respecting this kind of clerical touting. These might not be acceptable, and instead, therefore, of seeking an advertisement for TRUTH at the bazaar, I have thought it better to give the bazaar an advertisement in TRUTH. I hope it will be appreciated.

I have received the following amounts towards Lady Jeune's Poor Children's Holiday Fund:—H. T. C., £5; R. D., £1; H. R. S., 5s.; Minetta, £3.; Myfanwy and Vera, 10s. 6d.; W. Y., £2. 2s.; D. P., £1. 10s.; J. T. F., £2.

Gray wrote of the rude forefathers of the hamlet being "each in his narrow cell for ever laid." In the parish churchyard at Stalham, Norfolk, however, they rest in their narrow cells only for a few short years, and then their bones are unceremoniously bundled out to make room for somebody else. For a long time the churchyard has been frightfully overcrowded, but interments still go on, and the most revolting scenes are witnessed when a grave is dug. A gentleman who visited the place last week informs me that he noticed a quantity of human remains scattered about; that on more than one occasion skulls have been disinterred with the hair still attached, and that bodies have been disturbed with portions of the shroud remaining. I referred to this matter some months ago; but it appears useless to appeal to the ecclesiastical authorities to close the churchyard. Is there no other means of putting an end to such an abominable state of things? It is clear there ought to be, for it is never safe to rely upon the church authorities dealing with such a scandal.

Since the reference in TRUTH of the 30th ult. to the little job recently perpetrated in the establishment of the Military Knights of Windsor, I have been favoured with a good deal of correspondence respecting the affairs of that body. In justification of the promotion of a junior Knight to the Royal Foundation, at the expense of the senior Knight on the Lower Foundation, it has been pointed out that the senior Knight has lately been involved in financial difficulties. If this is all that can be said in defence of the step that has been taken, it amounts to very little, for the senior Knight in question satisfactorily passed his examination in bankruptcy, and is now awaiting his discharge, and the best proof that his temporary embarrassments are not considered to reflect upon him in the least by those who know him best, is to be seen in the fact that a subscription to assist him out of his difficulties has been contributed to by a large number of his fellow Knights. If his temporary financial difficulty was really allowed to weigh against his distinguished military services and his seniority in the Order, it can only be concluded that there was a very strong disposition to find any excuse for shelving him in favour of the junior Knight who was promoted.

It would seem that Colonel Maude is not the only knight who has cause to complain of the recent promotion. A claim has been advanced on behalf of Lieutenant-Colonel Maguire, late 60th Rifles, on the ground that he also is senior to Captain Atkinson, the Knight recently promoted. In point of Service standing, Lieutenant-Colonel Maguire is undoubtedly the senior, and he has a distinguished record to his credit, including services in China, the Punjab, and the Indian Mutiny. It would seem that the Royal Warrants appointing these two officers to the Lower Foundation were both signed on the same day, but Lieutenant-Colonel Maguire happened to be in Ireland at the time of his appointment, while Captain Atkinson was living close by at Maidenhead. Owing to this circumstance, Captain Atkinson went through the ecclesiastical ceremony of installation at once, while Lieutenant-Colonel Maguire was not installed till about two months later. On this ground rests Captain Atkinson's claim to be considered the senior Knight of the two. Lieutenant-Colonel Maguire does not seem to have appreciated the state of the case for some time, but as soon as he did so, he put in a protest, and here again he seems to have been treated very unfairly; for his protest was never forwarded by the Governor to the Dean, to whom it was addressed, and until the last two or three weeks the Dean was not aware that Lieutenant-Colonel Maguire had made any claim to be considered the senior. The question has now, I understand, gone before the Lord Chancellor, with whom a decision lies in such matters, and it is to be hoped that it is not too late for justice to be done. It has transpired in the overhauling of the Statutes in connection with this matter that the Lord Chancellor is charged with the duty of periodically inquiring into the grievances of the Military Knights; and, now that this fact is known, it is possible that the Knights will be frequently disposed to avail themselves of the Lord Chancellor's functions.

In the monthly Indian Army List it is the custom to notify against those officers who have passed the Staff College whether they have linguistic qualifications, and, if so, in what languages. It has been represented to me that it would be of very great advantage if the same course were taken in the English Army List. The difficulty of compiling the necessary particulars would be small, and it would undoubtedly be of advantage to officers going up to the Staff College if they could ascertain exactly in what languages most of the existing P.S.C.s have qualified, and consequently what languages it is likely to pay best to take up. The existence of such a record would also, one would think, be of considerable use at the War Office.

The Civil Service Commissioners would do well to look into the causes of the many seeming inconsistencies and incongruities in marking the papers of candidates for Sandhurst examinations. In November, 1894, a candidate who failed in other respects, though he qualified for a commission, obtained 1,000 marks in geology. Encouraged by these figures, he proceeded to devote himself to the study of the science under the tutorship of a well-known professor, and worked hard at the subject for eighteen months. His tutor pronounces that he was at least 50 per cent. stronger in the subject than when he went in for the previous examination, but on going in again in June, 1896, he actually obtained 200 less marks than he did in '94, although he answered nearly every question in the paper. On the other hand, another candidate went up in June, '96, who had only had about four months' preparation, and he, to his own and everybody else's astonishment, obtained over 1,000 marks. It is impossible to believe that the marking in these two cases bears any relation to the actual qualifications of the candidates, and they are only exceptionally striking cases of what is a constant source of complaint.

I hear from a correspondent who takes a great interest in the welfare of the Army Medical Staff, that not one of the medical officers who are now holding themselves in readiness to embark for India in September or October has been allowed any leave before sailing. Hardly one of these officers has had any leave this year beyond a day or two at a time, and every one of them is entitled to about six weeks or upwards, and many of them have their homes in Ireland and Scotland, so that they have had not the slightest chance of going home to say good-bye to their friends before going to India for a term of six years' exile. This is a most monstrous state of things, and I should hope that even yet it may be remedied now that attention has been called to the matter.

Some little time back an N.C.O. of the Commissariat Department in the Bombay command was brought before his Departmental officer for a certain offence, and was given the option of a court-martial or resigning. He elected to resign. The resignation went in due course before the Major-General commanding, who pronounced that as the Departmental officer had allowed the N.C.O. to resign, he had condoned the offence, and that the N.C.O. must continue to serve in the Department. A fortnight later the Major-General wrote again, cancelling his order that the man was to continue to serve, and left the matter to be disposed of by the Departmental officer and the Brigadier-General commanding the district. It was decided by these two officers that the man should continue to serve, but in a different station, and under a junior, and should be discharged from the Service on the next unfavourable report. This decision, having been formally promulgated, went before the Major-General. Six weeks later, when everybody else had forgotten about the case, there came a fresh order from the Major-General that the N.C.O. should be remanded to Regimental duty. The whole time occupied in this incomprehensible shilly-shallying amounted to over four months, and while the authorities were fooling about in this way the man concerned had first of all sold up his home preparatory to resigning, had commenced to get his things together again on receiving the second decision, and finally had to sell up again when the third sentence upon him was pronounced; so that he was pretty heavily punished, quite independently of his sentence. If this is the way military matters are managed in India, our administrators at home have not so much to learn from that country as is sometimes supposed.

The following story from the 1st Battalion King's Regiment at Barbados, seems to call for notice. A few weeks back a married bandsman of the regiment was called to orderly-room and informed by the Colonel that misconduct had been witnessed at a certain time between the bandsman's wife and a petty officer of H.M.S. Pallas, then in harbour. The bandsman knew that his wife had been in her quarters at the time named, and said that the thing was impossible, whereupon the Colonel referred him to the sergeant-major for evidence. The sergeant-major, when questioned, informed the man that the provost-sergeant and other N.C.O.s were witnesses of the incident referred to. The bandsman then went to the Colonel, and asked him to have the matter brought up and investigated. This the Colonel refused to do, saying that he was quite satisfied with the evidence, and adding that he would have nothing more to do with the case. There the matter stands. Direct evidence is forthcoming that all the petty officers of the Pallas were on board their ship at the time when the alleged incident was said to have occurred; and the bandsman and his wife are prepared to swear that neither of them left their quarters at that time. There is also good reason to believe that the allegation which has been made was dictated by personal spite. However that may be, it is a monstrous thing that a respectable woman should be subjected to an imputation of this kind, and absolutely denied any opportunity of rebutting it. I would put it to the Colonel, as a gentleman and a man of honour, that having, doubtless in all good faith, allowed himself to be made the mouthpiece of such an imputation, it is his plain duty to the woman to see the charge either withdrawn or substantiated.

In a battalion of Artillery stationed at Athlone the men are charged with a contribution of 6d. per month to the "Battery Fund." The history of this fund is peculiar. Originally it was known as the "Cleaning Trap Fund," and the contribution to it was 2d. per month, the drivers receiving out of this fund soap, beeswax and other articles requisite for cleaning. As the gunners received nothing for their money, they objected to the payment. The designation of the fund was then changed to "Battery Fund," and the subscription was raised to 4d. per month. About six months ago, barrack damages were abolished, and 2d. per month was added to the "Battery Fund" subscription, bringing it up to 6d. a month. Many of the men still maintain that, beyond the equivalent to barrack damages, they get nothing out of the fund. Surely some account ought to be issued which would clear this matter up.

A most gratifying tribute to the Sergeant-Major R.A. at Milford, referred to in last week's TRUTH, has been addressed to me by three bombardiers and a corporal of the company. After describing the admirable manner in which the sergeant-major performs his duties, the writers state, "We all look up to him for guidance and advice in our various duties, which he is always most willing to give." In fact it would seem that the three bombardiers and the corporal almost bow down before the sergeant-major and worship him. It grieves me very much that I am not permitted to mention their names, for the sergeant-major ought to know who they are who thus reverence him. It should be added, however, that my paragraph had reference to an allegation that the sergeant-major, when taking two N.C.O.s to task for being improperly dressed, was himself riding a bicycle in his shirt sleeves and wearing white shoes. The three bombardiers and the corporal deny that the sergeant-major was improperly dressed. As, however, it does not appear that they were present at the time of the incident, and as it is also possible that their excessive admiration for the sergeant-major warps their judgment as to what is or is not proper, I cannot accept their evidence in preference to that of other witnesses who were present, and are apparently trustworthy. Besides, if the sergeant-major desired the allegation corrected, he would, no doubt, have written to me himself.

In the last issue of TRUTH a case which recently occurred at Netley Hospital was cited as an example of the laxity of Commanding Officers in awarding punishments, which would entitle a man to trial by court-martial, without giving him the option of being so tried. It has been pointed out to me that in this particular case the man had no right whatever to trial by court-martial, and that consequently the Commanding Officer was perfectly justified in the course he took. This I readily acknowledge, and I must express to the officer concerned my regret for the mistake. As usually happens in these cases, it was the fault of a military correspondent who ought to have known better—another instance of the danger of relying on experts in professional matters.

Technical military matters are not, as a rule, much in my line, but I am induced to break through the rule by a Staff Corps officer, who writes very strongly on the practice prevailing in many British and native regiments in India, of soldiers "hammering the butts of their rifles on the ground previous to shouldering or sloping arms from the order." This practice, I am told, necessarily damages the rifles, and this seems highly probable. As my informant further asserts that the practice is a waste of time; that it would have to be abolished, on account of the consequent noise, on active service when anywhere near the enemy; that the men dislike it because it entails unnecessary labour; and that it is contrary to Regulations, I certainly think, speaking as one of those who pay for the rifles, that the practice ought to be stopped.

Is it the intention of the Board now inquiring into the advisability of abolishing the Discharge Depots at Fort Brocklehurst and Gosport to take any evidence of their utility from soldiers? If not, I would suggest the propriety of this being done, for, after all, the soldiers themselves are the best judges in a matter like this. I have a long communication before me from a Reservist recently discharged, giving no less than seven reasons why the Depots should be maintained. Among these reasons are the difficulty of making up accounts, issuing civilian clothing, and conducting a proper medical examination on board ship; the impossibility of a man having a bath and smartening himself up if discharged direct from the ship; the necessity for some chance for the men to go into hospital for a day or two if they need it after the voyage; the danger of their falling into the hands of sharks and sharpers if turned adrift on the quay of a garrison town, and several other points of more or less importance. Individually, these considerations may be small ones; but collectively they seem to make up a strong case from the soldier's point of view for the retention of the Discharge Depots, at any rate in some shape.

To the grievances that have arisen out of the distribution of the Volunteer long service medal and decoration there is no end. The latest complaint comes to me from Hong Kong, and it is to the effect that the Volunteers there have been practically shut out from any chance of receiving the medal by the action of the authorities in fixing the qualifying period of service in all the colonies at twenty years, the same as at home. For India the period has been reduced to eighteen years, and it seems only reasonable that a similar concession should be made in the case of Hong Kong and several other Crown Colonies, where the trying nature of the climate and the conditions of life generally make Volunteering a very different business from what it is in the mother country.

Here are a few more military grievances which seem to deserve pillorying. I am particularly struck with the story about the 1st Dorsetshire, which is worth attention quite apart from the grievance of the men who took the bounty in 1892 for extending their service. So far as I can make out from the War Office letter referred to, when this battalion, already on foreign service, was under orders for India, it was discovered that so many men were approaching the end of their time that the proper strength of the battalion for India could not be made up. At the same time the home battalion was for some reason quite unable to supply drafts to make the other up to its proper strength; and the War Office were in such a hole that they had to expend £1,500 in hard cash in bribing men to extend their colour service. Such a state of things in time of peace is somewhat at variance with the optimistic views we sometimes get from headquarters on the admirable working of the short service system:—

1st Battalion Dorset Regiment, Bangalore.—When this battalion was in Egypt and under orders for India in 1892, a War Office letter was received, offering a bounty of £10 to any of the rank and file, up to the number of 150, whose service would expire before September, 1893, "on condition that they would extend their service to eleven years with the colours, which would leave them one year in the Reserve." A very large number of men accepted this offer, and proceeded to India. Many of them completed their eleven years in April last, and have claimed their discharge to the Reserve accordingly. The authorities, however, insist that they are entitled to keep them for a full twelve years. The terms of the War Office letter of May 19, 1892, are precisely as quoted above, so that it is perfectly clear that these men engaged under a special agreement for eleven years' service only, and when they have completed that period with the colours, they have an absolute right to insist on being sent home.

1st Battalion Leicestershire Regiment, Cape Town.—The post of sergeant-major in this battalion became vacant in April, 1894. A colour-sergeant was recommended by the C.O., but the War Office refused to appoint him because he had not a first-class education certificate. They, however, allowed the vacancy to remain open until April, 1895, in order to give the colour-sergeant a chance of obtaining his certificate. This he has failed to do, although he has since sat at more than one examination, but the vacancy still remains open. This battalion has, consequently, been without a sergeant-major for two years and four months.

2nd Battalion West Riding Regiment, Pietermaritzberg.—The sergeant-cook of this battalion took over in January, 1895, an old Dean's oven in very bad condition. In November, 1895, he applied for a new one, but the old one was patched up by a R.E. smith, who stated at the time that it ought to be condemned. In April, 1896, further repairs became necessary to the amount of £5. 1s., and it was decided that the regiment should pay one half the cost. This half share, £2. 10s. 6d., has now been debited against the cook, on the ground that the damage was due to over-heating. The cook says that the over-heating was unavoidable, as, owing to the decrepit condition of the oven, the doors could never be shut. There seems no doubt that the oven is worn out, and considering that Parliament voted for the Army last year the sum of £20,805,758, it would seem that money ought to have been forthcoming for a new oven without laying the cost of the repairs upon the unfortunate cook.

Jamaica.—The junior European N.C.O.s of the garrison here are complaining of one of the rooms in the canteen, which was formerly set apart for the use of N.C.O.s under the rank of sergeant, having been appropriated to the exclusive use of staff sergeants and others above that rank, so that those below that rank have now no separate room for their use. As the sergeants' mess of the West India Regiment, to which all the warrant and non-commissioned officers of the European staff have access, is only a hundred yards distant, this proceeding seems quite unnecessary. It is also alleged that the canteen funds have been drawn upon to defray the cost of preparing and furnishing this room for the use of the staff sergeants. Is the G.O.C. in Jamaica aware of this fact?

In common with several other editors, I have received communications from some of the crew of the ship Siren with reference to the refusal of the Admiralty to compensate them for the loss of their effects by the collision of that ship with H.M.S. Landrail. A more odious and contemptible piece of meanness than this has never been perpetrated at the Admiralty, which is saying a good deal. It has been decided by a court-martial that the officer commanding the Landrail was guilty of gross negligence. I do not know whether there may be, in point of law, any difference between the liability of the Crown for the consequences of gross negligence on the part of its servants and the liability of private individuals in the same circumstances; but there cannot be the slightest question that those who have suffered by the gross negligence of Lieutenant Pearson have every moral claim to be reimbursed whatever they have lost; and there is something peculiarly mean in refusing such compensation to men who have lost nearly everything they possess, and who are in too humble a position to be able to assert their claims with any effect. All the seamen of the Siren ought to receive at least the new outfit necessary before they can obtain fresh situations.

It is only the other day that the Admiralty were selling by auction 489 dozen of '84 champagne, to say nothing of thousands of pounds' worth of other public property of different kinds. To put the seamen of the Siren on their legs again would not make a very big hole in the proceeds of this sale.

It seems desirable to call attention again to the duty of shipowners to provide awnings for the protection of their crews during the hot season in the Red Sea. This matter was mentioned in TRUTH a few weeks back, and ample corroboration has since been forthcoming of the justice of my remarks. A gentleman who has made some inquiries into the subject, states that he finds that there is a general opinion, not only among seamen, but among masters and others who understand the circumstances, that to send a ship through the Red Sea between May 1 and September 30 without such an awning is nothing short of murder. Further, the neglect of this necessary protection does not seem to be confined to tramp steamers. Many ships belonging to lines, the owners of which might be expected to show more consideration for their men, have lately been observed without any sort of awning; although I am told that foreign steamers are, as a rule, better equipped in this respect than our own. I do not know whether the Board of Trade have power to make any regulations on this point, but, if not, it certainly seems desirable that they should obtain it.

SAVOY HOTEL, Savoy Restaurant, London. Large reception-rooms for fashionable réunions. Orchestra plays daily during dinner and opera supper.

It is also a desirable and reasonable thing that ships passing through the Red Sea during the hot season should be compelled to carry a certain quantity of ice, for use in cases of heat apoplexy. A couple of hundred pounds of ice, I am told, would be ample for the purpose, and this could be obtained either at Suez or Aden for about thirteen shillings. I believe I am right in saying that were this indispensable restorative always on hand on steamships, many lives would be saved which are now lost through want of it.

Lord Salisbury has insisted on filling up the vacant office of Consul-General at Florence, although it is the opinion of every competent authority that it is preposterous folly and extravagance to pay £1,000 a year to that functionary, who has nothing whatever to do. There is no trade now at Florence, as everybody knows. Of course, if our Consular arrangements were regulated by common-sense, the Foreign Office would, as I have before explained, have followed the sagacious example of Germany, and Genoa and Milan would have been made the most important posts in Italy, as those two cities are now the centres of the trade of the country. We neglect these places, to our own great and increasing loss, and to the corresponding gain of Germany.

The discontent which has long existed among the Traffic Revenue officers of the Indian State Railways, owing to the Government's breaches of faith in regard to their pay and promotion, has been greatly intensified by the recent appointment of Mr. H. P. Burt, Executive Engineer, as Deputy Traffic Superintendent of the North-West Railway. Nobody has a word to say against Mr. Burt personally; but it is regarded as grossly unfair that he should be given this post in the traffic branch, where he has had no practical experience, and where he blocks the promotion of a considerable number of officers whose whole service has been spent in traffic work. The Director-General of Railways must have been aware of the indignation the appointment would arouse, for only a few months since he dropped a proposal to provide Mr. Burt with a similar berth on another line, owing to the outcry it occasioned. The fact is said to be, however, that Mr. Burt's removal from his own Department, where he had strong claims to promotion, was desired in order that an opening might be made for a Royal Engineer.

The following statement which has been sent to me affords a good example of the slipshod and discreditable manner in which the South Kensington Museum is managed. The facts are, I believe, beyond all question, and it is a gross slight to our Indian feudatories, as well as an injustice to the public at home, that a valuable gift from an Indian Prince should be treated in this manner:—

In 1886 the late Maharajah Scindia of Gwalior presented a costly carved gateway to the South Kensington Museum, weighing 75 tons of carved stone. As a representative piece of modern Indian art, it was greatly admired both at the Calcutta and Colonial and Indian Exhibition in London. At the time the Council of Education published a Government order to the effect that the "Gwalior Gateway" had been prepared for the South Kensington Museum. But this was erroneous. Major J. B. Keith, late Conservator of Monuments in Central India, who both proposed and prepared the work, wished to secure it for India itself as a specimen of indigenous workmanship. In India it would have been of use to native workmen; here it has been lost.

When publishing an excellent engraving of the "Gwalior Gateway," the London Builder, in 1886, expressed the hope that it would not share in the fate or the scandal that had overtaken another piece of art, relegated to obscurity.

Unhappily, the fears of the Builder have been realised, and the gateway has been relegated to a lumber-room in the Museum for the last ten years, nor is there any provision for it in the new South Kensington buildings. This is a curious way of encouraging Indian art industry, and a nice compliment to the late Maharajah Scindia and his artisans!

As the authorities of the India Office justly viewed the gateway on its arrival as a species of white elephant, on account of the expense both of execution and of transport thrown on the Maharajah, it is necessary to remember that South Kensington is wholly responsible. The then Lieutenant-Governor of Bengal, Sir Rivers Thompson, was ready to provide a most suitable site, but the interest of South Kensington prevailed. . . . .

It is only fair to add that the new Director, Mr. Turdon Clarke, is in no way responsible for the fate of the "Gwalior Gateway," and it is to be hoped that now that attention has been called to the matter he will find his hands sufficiently strengthened to be able to rescue the structure from the lumber-room in which it is now hidden.

An Irish solicitor, who has gone out to practise in New South Wales, complains somewhat loudly of being required to pay a fee of forty guineas before he could be admitted as a solicitor to the Supreme Court of that colony. Forty guineas is the normal fee for a solicitor on admission in New South Wales, but my Irish friend seems to think that having been admitted in the United Kingdom, he ought not to have to pay all over again before he can practise in a British colony, where the courts, procedure, and law, are exactly modelled upon our own. This reasoning, however, if admitted, would apply to a good many other matters than the profession of a solicitor, and I cannot myself see any force in it. But I mention the matter for the information of any other lawyers who may contemplate going out to practise in the colonies, without having first ascertained the terms on which they will be allowed to do so.

In reference to a recent remark in TRUTH on the difficulty of compelling Somerset House to disgorge overpaid income-tax, a gentleman has taken the trouble to write to me all the way from Oporto to tell me that he has always found the Inland Revenue officials most prompt and courteous in dealing with applications for a refund of tax. As the gentleman in question has had to do with a large number of claims by Portuguese subjects for return of income-tax paid in respect of shares held in British companies, I cheerfully record his opinion, on the audi alteram partem principle. I think I can undertake to say, however, that for every one individual who expresses satisfaction with the promptness of Somerset House in repaying income-tax, at least a hundred could be found who would bear their testimony in the opposite direction. But then they are Englishmen—not Portuguese.

CARPET BEATING SEASON.—The Queen says: "A good place to send carpets to is the Compressed Air Carpet and Tapestry Cleaning Company, Brook Green, Hammersmith, W. Dust blown out. No beaters used." To prevent deception carpets cleaned by this process bear the Trade Mark on the back.

Surely directories ought to be provided for the use of the public in all telephone call-rooms. A City gentleman complains that he went into the call-room near the Royal Exchange in order to communicate with his own firm, and was unable to do so as he had forgotten the number, and no directory was available. He was coolly told that he could obtain a directory at Lloyd's rooms, which of course he could only do if he happened to have a friend there who would help him. A telephone call-room without a directory is of very little use to the casual caller, and the charge levied is quite sufficient to justify the public in asking for this necessary accommodation.

The Eastbourne Waterworks Company have just issued a notice which throws into the shade all previous performances of all water companies. Let it speak for itself:—

NOTICE.

EASTBOURNE WATER WORKS COMPANY.

It having come to the knowledge of the Company that water is being obtained by some persons from sources other than the Company's supply, the Company desire to warn consumers of the risk they incur of using water of doubtful purity.

The Company desire that it may be clearly understood that the water supplied by them is organically absolutely pure and fit for every purpose. This is proved by periodical tests made by Dr. Frankland, the eminent analyst.

The salinity recently perceptible in the water is due to the presence of salts which are not in any way injurious to health, and Dr. Willoughby (Medical Officer of Health), has recently issued a report showing that the health of the district has never been so satisfactory as during the past six months.

To meet the wishes of some consumers who prefer, for dietetic purposes, the water obtained from Holywell, the Company has arranged to give a supply by stand-pipes at certain points on the main between Holywell and the reservoirs.

This water may be obtained on and after Wednesday, August 12, between the hours of 6.30 and 10.30 a.m. and 4.30 and 6.30 p.m., at the following places:—

1. Meads-road (by Meads National Schools).
2. Carlisle-road (junction of Meads-road).
3. Compton-place-road (corner of Meads-road).
4. Town Hall (entrance to South-fields).
5. Grove-road (by Water-lane).
6. Enys-road, Upperton.

By order of the Directors,
A. J. Howard,
General Manager.

August 11, 1896.

The fact is that owing to the water being frequently so salt as to be to many persons undrinkable, distilled water is being retailed in the town at 6d. per gallon. As though it were not enough that people, after paying water-rates to the Company, should be compelled to purchase water at this price, the Company add insult to injury by solemnly warning them against the risks of obtaining water elsewhere than from the Company's mains. The statements about the health of the town are precisely what was anticipated in my remarks on this subject last week. Very possibly salt water may have all the virtues here claimed for it. Possibly, if the Company were to turn on a supply of Freiderieshall or Vichy once a week, instead of the brackish beverage to which they are now treating their customers, this also might be conducive to the public health. Many persons, however, would object strongly to make their tea or dilute their whisky with these liquids, and their objections would undoubtedly be entitled to respect, notwithstanding the assurances of an eminent analyst that the water was "fit for every purpose." Indeed, there are not a few who would prefer a little organic impurity to an excessive admixture of chemical salts—however wholesome.

Joking apart, the above notice places the failure of the Eastbourne Waterworks Company to fulfil its duty beyond all question, and for the Eastbourne ratepayers the position is a most serious one. The provision of six stand-pipes in a town of this size, all of them at the very back of the town, and far away from the sea, is totally inadequate to meet the requirements of the many who "prefer for dietetic purposes" water in which the salinity is not perceptible. To lodging-house and hotel keepers, with their houses full, the necessity of drawing by hand and storing all drinking water must be a serious tax; and nothing can compensate this class of ratepayers and the tradesmen of the town for the loss of those customers who will be kept away from Eastbourne by reports as to the state of the water. It is now nearly twelve months—although the Company call that "recently"—since this difficulty first became acute, and had it been properly recognised and dealt with, it is impossible to believe that it could not have been overcome by this time. The ratepayers must be apathetic indeed if they do not see the moral, and act on it.

By the way, is it a peculiarity of sea-side watering places to have their slaughter-houses in undesirable positions? Last week I mentioned the case of Brighton. Scarborough, it would seem, is similarly afflicted. There are two slaughter-houses within about a minute's walk of the esplanade, surrounded by private residences and lodging-houses, and others in different parts of the town equally open to objection. The local authorities would gladly do away with these places, but the question of compensation, which would have to be very heavy, stands in the way. What a satire it is on our tenderness for "vested interests," that a man should have the right to maintain a public nuisance, unless his neighbours will pay him a prohibitive price for abating it!

A lady on a visit to Lyndhurst was the other day frightened out of her wits by the apparition in the middle of the village of a man with heavy chains upon his legs and arms, and of generally unprepossessing demeanour. Having taken refuge in the nearest shop, she learned that the man was a harmless lunatic, who had temporarily escaped in his chains from his home in the village. By what right does anybody in these days keep a lunatic—harmless or not—chained up in a private house? The local authorities should look into this case, and it is surprising that the neighbours have not already forced them to do so.

A capital method of bringing home their responsibilities to negligent and incompetent sanitary authorities is revealed by two recent actions at Birmingham Assizes. In the first case the King's Norton Rural District Council were sued for damages by the executors of a gentleman who died from typhoid fever, which he contracted through certain defective workmanship of the Council's servants having caused sewer gas to be conveyed into his house. The jury awarded £3,500 damages. In the second case the same Council were mulcted in £300 damages for polluting a pool with sewage. These results should be a salutary lesson not only to this particular Council, but to other sanitary authorities which may be similarly careless in carrying out their work, and similarly indifferent to the welfare of the people whose health they are appointed to safeguard. The actions certainly constitute a valuable precedent for suffering ratepayers in such circumstances.

Apropos of the recent proceedings against a member of the Common Council for non-payment of rates on Turkish baths belonging to him in St. Pancras, a correspondent raises a curious question. It was stated that the Vestry had previously "entirely lost" £58 due from the Councillor for rates, and that in respect of the £44 now sued for a distress warrant had been issued, but the broker had made the return that there were not sufficient goods to levy upon. The magistrate thereupon committed the defaulter to Holloway, with the result that the £44 was soon forthcoming. The point that has puzzled my correspondent is this: Supposing the defaulter had persisted in his refusal to pay, would he have wiped out the liability and barred all further proceedings by undergoing three months' imprisonment without hard labour—that being the maximum period for which a man can be committed in such a case? If not, in what way have the Vestry "entirely lost" the £58? Perhaps some legal friend can throw further light upon the matter; for if the law is as above suggested, anybody might evade the payment of rates by temporarily removing his goods and chattels from the rated premises, and then taking a short holiday at Holloway at the expense of the taxpayers.

There are some interesting items in the last half-yearly financial statement of the Wem Union, which one of the ratepayers has forwarded for my inspection. It seems that the in-maintenance of seventy-two paupers for the half-year cost £193. 10s. 5d., and £229. 9s. 3d. was expended in out-relief, while officers' salaries and rations took no less than £324. 10s. 1d. Five officers in the workhouse consumed 783 lb. of meat, costing £24. 9s. 4¼d.; the seventy-two pauper inmates had to be content with 1,090 lb. of beef, costing £22. 14s. 2d. That there is no pampering of paupers at Wem is further shown by the statement that the average weekly cost per head, not only for provisions, but for "clothing and necessaries" as well, is only 2s. 3¾d. The officers may not be overpaid, but there seems to me to be little doubt that the paupers must be underfed.

I have always been a warm advocate of the system of boarding out pauper children, but it is obviously one which may do more harm than good, if Bumble is heedless of the fitness and character of the persons with whom the little ones are lodged. This appears to be the case with the Lincoln Guardians, and, judging from the account of their life and surroundings that is given me, some of the children would be decidedly better off in the workhouse than in such homes as they have been placed in. The matter has been brought before the Guardians more than once, but without avail, and I would therefore suggest that Miss Mason, the Local Government Board Inspector of Boarded-out Children, should go down to Lincoln and make a few inquiries—not contenting herself, of course, with official statements alone.

An odd complication has arisen at Dorchester owing to Sir Robert Edgcumbe, the high sheriff of Cornwall, having refused to pay the fine of £25 which is due from him in consequence of his having resigned the office of alderman of the borough. Sir Robert Edgcumbe took an active part in all local affairs for many years, and he was elected alderman from outside the Council. He has now resigned, but protests in vigorous language against his being fined, and vows that he will not pay £25. At last week's meeting of the Town Council it was proposed to raise the £25 by a subscription among the members of the Corporation, but, after a very lively discussion, the motion was rejected. Suppose that Sir Robert Edgcumbe persists in refusing to pay, and therefore retains his office of alderman, the Council cannot compel him to attend to the duties of that position.

Why lotteries should be illegal in this country while they are permitted, and even encouraged, by the ecclesiastical and civil authorities in Ireland, is one of those mysteries connected with the relations of the two countries which I have never been able to understand. A Grand Bazaar and Fête are to be held at Cork in the first week of September, under the distinguished patronage of the Lord-Lieutenant and Lady Cadogan, and an announcement in connection with the function gives a long list of prizes which have been "presented for ballot," as it is euphemistically expressed. The first prize is a case of silver, value sixty guineas, the second a cash prize of twenty guineas, and, among other articles, are two cases of champagne. The tickets are one shilling each. Here is a lottery pure and simple, under the distinguished patronage of the Lord-Lieutenant. As long as we have one Legislature for the two countries, and a Parliament in existence sworn by an overwhelming majority to maintain the Legislative Union, I really do not see why the law should allow an Irish charity to obtain money by means which, on this side of the Channel, would bring all concerned, even a Lord-Lieutenant, into the clutches of the police. By the way, what about the raffling of champagne at a fête of this kind? Do the Irish licensing laws permit that? If so, the anomaly is aggravated.

The proceedings of the Malling Bench in the case recorded below appear to have been reported more widely than usual, and in consequence, people have written from all parts of the country requesting me to give their worships a place in my Legal Pillory. This is not at all surprising, for it is simply a mockery of justice that men guilty of such wanton and atrocious cruelty to animals should be let off with any mere pecuniary penalty, however heavy. These defendants at Malling ought to have been sent to gaol without the option of a fine, and it is some satisfaction, at any rate, to see that the Chairman was in favour of this course, and that he did not hesitate to express the opinion that the magistrates who overruled him were "far too lenient." The following list includes, however, some even more striking examples of misplaced lenity, among which I would particularly call attention to the extreme indulgence shown towards wife-beaters at Witham, Grantham, and Kilmarnock. The cases on the other side illustrate the very different spirit in which the magistracy deal with such crimes as poaching, sleeping out, and petty larceny :—

Grantham Police-court. Before the Mayor (Alderman W. L. Wand) and Mr. G. Slater. John Wm. Preestone, charged with assaulting his wife, also with threatening her. He went home drunk, took hold of her by the hair, and knocked her about until she was nearly unconscious. Two days later he went to her with a knife in his hand and threatened to kill her. The Mayor said his conduct had been base indeed. Ordered to pay the costs and bound over.

Grantham Police-court. Before the Mayor and other magistrates. Charles Cooper, charged with neglecting to perform his allotted task while an inmate of the workhouse casual ward. Fourteen days.

Grimsby Borough Police-court. Richard Lewis, fishing apprentice from the Wolverhampton Union, charged with disobedience. One month.

Birmingham Police-court. Joseph Konning, convicted of assaulting Amy and Arthur Clews, brother and sister. Defendant, who was drunk, struck the girl a violent blow in the eye, and on her brother interfering defendant knocked him down. The magistrates said the assaults were of a brutal character. Fined 20s. and costs.

Birmingham Police-court. Maggie Williams, aged 16, charged with being in company with another girl and stealing a pair of boots from a shop door. One month.

Sheffield West Riding Police-court. Before Mr. B. J. Young and other magistrates. Samuel Wright, charged with cruelty to a pony. Defendant was driving a worn-out pit pony, which he bought for 17s. He thrashed the animal unmercifully about the head and body, continuing the ill-treatment along the road for a mile. Fined 10s. including costs.

Eckington Petty Sessions. Before Alderman J. F. Swallow, Messrs. H. A. Fowler and R. Eyre. Frederick Pollard, Edwin Pollard, and Samuel Large, charged under the Poaching Prevention Act with being found in possession of rabbits. Fined £2. 10s. each and costs; in default one month.

Witham Police-court. Before General Howard Vyse, Messrs. J. H. Salter, John Moss, R. G. Rann, and A. Motion. James Moule, described as an old offender, charged with assaulting his wife. He got "beastly drunk," and struck her in the mouth, and kicked her on the body. She was expecting to be confined in a few weeks. Bound over and ordered to pay the costs, 11s.

Tunbridge Wells Police-court. Before Mr. W. F. Browell and Mr. Finch. Thomas Mitchell, charged with sleeping out. Seven days.

Bedale Police-court. Before Captain Carter, Sir H. B. Peirse, Captain Lascelles, Messrs. R. Hutton-Squire, and H. Rouse. William Kitching, labourer, charged with stealing a pennyworth of onions from a garden. Fined £1.

Ystrad Police-court. William James Griffiths, convicted of cruelty to a pony. He was employed as a hauler in a coal mine, and in defiance of his orders made a pony pull five loaded trams up a stiff gradient, with the result that the animal dropped down dead through over-exertion. Fined £2 and costs.

Barnsley Police-court. Before Messrs. F. H. Taylor, H. Pigott, Z. Hinchliffe, W. Brady, and S. Seal. Albert Swift and Walter Crossley, miners, charged with poaching. They had one rabbit. Two months each and a further month in default of finding sureties for their good behaviour.

Retford Borough Police-court. Alfred Rex charged with assaulting John Westnidge. The latter went into a public-house where the defendant without the slightest provocation seized him by the legs, threw him over a table on to the floor, and struck him a violent blow which broke the bridge of his nose. Fined £2 including costs.

Ipswich Police-court. Before Messrs. R. M. Miller, R. D. Fraser, S. R. Anness, and Colonel J. H. Josselyn. Herbert John Grayston, convicted of what the Bench characterised as a cowardly assault upon Harry Cross. Defendant knocked Cross down, rendering him unconscious, and jumped upon him. Cross had to be taken to the hospital, where he was detained for two days. Fined £2 and costs.

Kilmarnock Sheriff Court. Before Mr. James Henderson. Alexander Brown, convicted of assaulting his wife by striking her on the head with a zinc pail and on the mouth with his clenched fist. There were a number of previous convictions against him. Fined £2.

Nottingham Police-court. Before Messrs. W. A. Blain and G. Wigley. William McCabe charged with stealing a pennyworth of onions from a stall in the market-place. Seven days.

Wells City Police-court. Before Messrs. J. G. Trench and J. Slater. Thomas Henry Hucker charged with absconding from the workhouse. Two months.

Colchester Borough Police-court. Before the Mayor (Mr. J. Wicks) and other magistrates. William Saxby, charged with sleeping in an unoccupied house and being without visible means of subsistence. Seven days.

Charles Lythgo, charged with a similar offence. Seven days.

Louth Borough Police-court. Before Alderman Simpson (Mayor), Messrs. Nesbitt, Hurst, Longbottom, and Dr. Best. Robert Bond, charged with being in the unlawful possession of four hares. Fined £5 and costs, or two months.

Malling Petty Sessions. Before the Hon. E. V. Bligh and other magistrates. Bertie Sage and Edward G. Sage, convicted of cruelty to two horses. The animals were attached to a brake crowded with excursionists, and were literally driven to death. The chairman wished to send the accused to prison without the option of a fine, but his colleagues objected, and the defendants were fined £5 each and costs.

I am entirely free from any desire to assume the mantle of prophecy, but when, after the Leeds prosecutions under the Lord's Day Act, some time since, a Select Committee of the Upper House was appointed to inquire what amendments, if any, were necessary in this Act, I remember remarking that I thought the chances of relief by legislation singularly small. Well, the Select Committee has reported. I quote their summing up: "After reviewing all the facts, the Committee were forced to the conclusion that, whilst inappropriate in phraseology, the existing law substantially harmonises with public opinion, and that any material change would be harmful." So, through the lawn-sleeve interest, those who endeavour to wean the masses from the public-house by providing rational and instructive entertainments on Sundays will still be liable to persecution by saintly faddists because the Committee could not even see its way to restrict initiative in prosecutions by the Crown.

A bankrupt was under examination in Leeds County Court last week, and on entering the box expressed his wish to affirm instead of being sworn; whereupon he was greeted by the Registrar, Mr. T. Marshall, with the remark, "Kiss the Book; it is good enough for one in the position of a bankrupt." It seems desirable to inform this supercilious functionary that it makes no difference to a man's rights in a Court of Justice whether he is "in the position of a bankrupt," or the position of a Registrar; and a personage occupying a judicial position has no business to insult those who come before him by offensive reflections on their position.

Many men become bankrupt through no fault of their own, and it is part of the business of a Bankruptcy Court to ascertain whether or not a debtor is to blame for being "in the position of a bankrupt." These may appear very elementary truths, but apparently it is possible for a man to reach the position of a Registrar of a County Court without being aware of them. As to the kissing of the Book, I suppose that a bankrupt has the same right as anybody else to claim to be sworn in the Scotch fashion, in preference to using the silly hocus-pocus over a battered Bible, which has been pressed to the lips of successive generations of witnesses, of all sorts and conditions; and it is a pity that the debtor in the above case did not insist upon this right.

Mr. Hugh Macdonald, solicitor, of Aberdeen, with whom I recently had some correspondence in regard to an inaccurate statement respecting the action of the local sanitary authorities, sends me a newspaper report showing the latest development of the case, and expresses a hope that I will refer to it. It seems that the sanitary inspector of the town commenced an action against the Aberdeen Journal, and that the action was settled by the publication of an apology and the payment of thirty guineas "in respect of expenses which had been incurred"—which I suppose means Mr. Macdonald's little bill. What further reference, if any, I am expected to make to the case I do not know; but I certainly congratulate Mr. Macdonald on having made such a much better thing out of the Aberdeen Journal that he did out of TRUTH. In fact, seeing that this enterprising solicitor has got £31. 10s. out of the Journal and 31s. 6d. out of me, I think the little mistake has been a good thing for him all round.

At Carrick-on-Suir Petty Sessions last week a publican was summoned by the police for selling liquor to two men on a Sunday. The defendant was examined, and he denied that he had sold any drink to either of the men, whereupon the Chairman of the Bench asked: "Did you sell any drink at any time that day to any one not a traveller?" The defendant's solicitor advised his client not to answer the question, pointing out that he was summoned on account of a particular transaction and was not bound to account "for his whole life," to which the Chairman replied, "I say he is." In the end the magistrates, by a majority, dismissed the case; but the fact that such an attempt should have been made to get the defendant to incriminate himself in regard to some undisclosed offence is a pretty illustration of the Chairman's ideas of judicial fairness. The correspondent who brings the incident under my notice urges that the system of entrusting the administration of the law in Ireland to "half-pay autocrats from the Army and wooden-headed duffers from the snobocracy" ought to be altered, and paid official magistrates appointed from the legal profession. I agree with him—only I would not confine such a reform to Ireland.

One of the most interesting and agreeable letters I have ever received from a solicitor has been addressed to me by Mr. Henry Grain in response to a reference to him in last week's TRUTH. Here is the gist of it:—

> Under the present circumstances I may at once say that Messrs. Perrin, Dunn, & Co. do not propose to seek the opinion of a jury. I will with your permission add a few words of explanation.
> In the paragraph mentioned, after referring to a letter from my clients which had been brought to your notice, you proceeded to class them with "Shylock & Co.," and to suggest the possibility that they made a special business of "luring married women to their net."
> You have since been good enough to publish in full the letter "brought to your notice," and my clients are content to let such of your readers as may be interested in the paragraph judge whether the letter is a sufficient justification for your remarks.
> As you have not mentioned any other justification, I take it that you have virtually admitted that there was none, and if, after the publication of your comments, no complaints have been made (which I assume from your silence on the subject to be the case), it must in fairness be granted that Messrs. Perrin & Dunn have, as I stated in my letter, conducted their business fairly, and to their clients' satisfaction.—I am, sir, yours truly,
> HENRY GRAIN.

Mr. Grain complained in his first letter that I had referred to his clients, Perrin, Dunn, & Co., "in most offensive terms," and called on me to publish at once a retractation of what I had said about Perrin & Co., failing which he would take "such proceedings as might be advised for the vindication of their reputation and prevention of a repetition of the libellous statements." To this I responded by declining to withdraw, repeating the statements complained of, and offering to justify what I had said before any jury. Mr. Grain now says, if I understand him aright, that he saw clearly from my second paragraph that it was quite out of my power to justify the first, and that he therefore deemed it superfluous to take the threatened proceedings, and preferred to leave the matter to the judgment of the public rather than a jury. From this it would seem to follow that had he seen in my second paragraph ample justification for the first, he would thus have felt it his duty to commence at once the aforesaid "proceedings." Although I have now had many years' experience of the libel laws and the libel lawyers, this attitude of Mr. Grain strikes me as most novel and original. It would seem to be his practice to demand an apology under threat of proceedings when he believes that the words complained of may be justified; but as soon as he has satisfied himself that there would be no defence to an action, he magnanimously abandons all idea of recourse to the law, and leaves the public to pronounce judgment. I cannot too strongly urge those who have any cause of complaint against remarks in TRUTH to at once put themselves in the hands of Mr. Grain, who is to be found at 61, St. Martin's-lane.

Shylock & Co. generally prefer to lie low and say nothing under judicial trouncings; but at Cardiff they have taken to whining in the Press about the treatment they receive in the County Court. A local paper pub-tishes a series of interviews with money-lenders under the elegant heading, "Pitiful wail of Done-up Hebrews." "It is most disheartening," remarked one poor fellow, "the way Judge Owen is going on." I do not know exactly what it is that his Honour has said or done, but the fact that it is "disheartening" to the usurers is sufficient to convince me that it is something commendable, and I hope he will continue to arouse their lamentations in the same way. The interviews are very amusing, the money-lenders posing as public benefactors who are most grievously maligned. I observe that one of them ingeniously attempted to show that county court fees were far more exorbitant than his own charges, and this point is taken up in some editorial comments in the Western Mail. The writer, however, does not seem to know—or, at any rate, he omits to mention—that county court fees are fixed by the Treasury and not by the judges. So far from being responsible for them, the judges have, in fact, represented over and over again that the fees are too high in amount.

Copies of the many-coloured circular of the many-aliased Isaac Gordon, of 6, Livery-street, Birmingham, and other addresses too numerous to mention, continue to reach me from all parts of the country. I have expressed my opinions about this rapacious and unscrupulous scoundrel so often that it seems superfluous to say anything more about him. However, there are accessions to the ranks of my readers every week, and so, mainly for their information, I repeat the warning I have so often given that dealings with Gordon, or, indeed, with any circularising usurer, should be most studiously avoided. Anybody in financial difficulties who is foolish enough to go to these gentry for assistance speedily finds that he has jumped from the frying-pan into the fire.

Following closely upon the case of the Birmingham Councillor who was run in like a pickpocket for "shouting" when addressing an open-air meeting, another monstrous example of the methods of the Aston police has been brought to light. Last week the magistrates dismissed a trumpery charge against four boys of stealing some bottles of ginger beer. During the hearing it transpired that one of these boys, aged twelve, the son of a respectable tradesman, had been fetched out of bed by two policemen at midnight and taken off to the police-station, the father being told that he could bail him out the next morning. It is scarcely necessary to point out that the usual and proper course would have been to proceed against such a youthful offender by summons, and in any place but Aston constables so stupid or so tyrannical as to insist upon arresting a lad under such circumstances would be sharply called to account. But in Aston the police seem to be allowed to do as they please.

A few days since an inquest was held at Felixstowe on the body of a young woman who had been drowned while bathing from a machine on the beach. The evidence showed that the deceased and a lady bathing with her had suddenly found themselves out of their depth about a dozen yards from the shore, and that but for the mere chance of their distress having been noticed by a gentleman returning from a sail, a second life would also have been lost. I believe the beach at Felixstowe is in places very steep, so that at certain states of the tide it is easy enough for a person to step unexpectedly into deep water; but, so far as the newspaper reports show, neither coroner nor jury raised the palpably pertinent question as to what measures, if any, are taken by the authorities to guard against accidents. A boatman ought to be always kept on duty for the purpose during bathing hours, and it is a pity the jury did not press the necessity of this elementary precaution upon the attention of the authorities.

Last June I commented in strong terms upon the conduct of the Birkdale Bench in hearing and dismissing in camera a charge of assault which had been preferred against Dr. Joseph Dawson Crawford, a well-known Liverpool practitioner, by a girl named Newman. A few days since the case came up again at Liverpool Assizes, in the form of an action against Crawford for damages for the alleged assault, and I note that in his summing up Mr. Justice Cave abundantly justified my censure of the magistrates. Want of corroboration was the reason they assigned for the dismissal of the charge, but his lordship said that to him this reason "did not seem at all conclusive, and he could only attribute it to a weak but well-meant attempt to hush up the affair. Such attempts," he added, "were very rarely successful." I hope these remarks by the learned Judge will be taken to heart by the Great Unpaid, not only at Birkdale but throughout the country. Besides being as a rule futile, an attempt to "hush up" such an affair is calculated to destroy all confidence in the administration of the law, and is, indeed, a perversion of the course of justice which cannot possibly be reconciled with the obligations of the magisterial oath.

As to the action against Dr. Crawford, it is a great pity that the jury were unable to agree to a verdict, one way or the other, in a matter of so much importance to both parties. Mr. Justice Cave observed that, on the defendant's own account of what took place, "such a combination of imprudence and impropriety he certainly had never witnessed in a medical man." Whatever other opinion may be formed as to the merits of the case, I think most people who have read the evidence will agree with his lordship in this respect.

As an instance of misguided lenity to an animal-torturer, a gentleman forwards me the report of a prosecution before a Police Magistrate in Ceylon, where a man convicted of gross cruelty by overcrowding a boat with cattle, some of which were trampled to death, was let off with a fine of Rs.10. I agree that it was an absurdly inadequate penalty; but I feel that an English journalist is scarcely in a position to cavil at it. Over here the most abominable cruelty to animals in transit by boat and rail is allowed to go wholly unpunished (there was an instance of this in the abortive prosecution at Colchester a few weeks since), and it will be time enough for us to preach to the Colonial Magistracy when we have amended our own practice.

With reference to a paragraph that appeared in Truth on May 28, the Clerk of the Dungannon Presbytery asks me "as a matter of simple justice" to insert the following:—

> At the last meeting of the Dungannon Presbytery, held in Ballymagrane, on August 4, the Committee appointed to examine the collecting books of ministers who had raised money for church objects outside the bounds of the Presbytery reported that they had examined these books and found that they were all carefully and correctly kept. The report was accepted, and the Presbytery passed a vote of thanks to those ministers who had taken such trouble in raising money for the improvement of the Church property.

I willingly publish this, but I feel bound to point out that it is scarcely an answer to the allegations of the local paper which I quoted. These were to the effect:—(1) That certain persons were collecting money in England and Scotland on the strength of credentials granted by the Dungannon Presbytery more than ten years ago, though under the rules of the church such credentials only hold good for twelve months; and (2) that no accounts had ever been rendered of the funds so obtained. In the report sent by the clerk the first point is altogether ignored, and as to the second something more was required than the mere statement that the collecting books had been "carefully and correctly kept." Moreover, it would have been interesting to learn whether the Presbytery still intend to countenance the objectionable system of cadging against which I was requested to caution my readers.

Who is the Honourable Mrs. Randolph Clay? From time to time there has appeared in different London newspapers references to this lady, as though her name were a household word. The latest example of this occurred in the Daily News one day last week, where I read that the Honourable Mrs. Randolph had patented an ornamental hair-pin. No such person as the Honourable Mrs. Randolph Clay is to be found in the English Peerage, Baronetage or Knighthood, and, if I mistake not, the lady in question is merely the wife or widow of one of those "Honourables" who are so common in the United States. All I know personally about this "Honourable" lady is, that she has extended her patronage to one of the charitable enterprises of Mr. Robert Frewer. Now Mr. Robert Frewer is a charity-monger of the shadiest complexion.

With reference to the "Watizit?" swindle, described in last week's Truth, it seems that this is the second coup of the same kind perpetrated within a few months—to all appearance by the same parties. In June last an individual, calling himself "Mark Strong," advertised a puzzle competition, in which every successful competitor was to receive a share of certain prize money, provided he forwarded a shilling for a puzzle called "The Wizard's Secret." "The Wizard's Secret" turns out to be precisely the same thing as the "Watizit?" puzzle, and both are mere reproductions of a puzzle first brought out many years ago. The only difference between the two swindles is that the "Wizard's Secret" was sold at the price of a shilling, while "Watizit?" was offered at eighteenpence. The inference seems to be that so many shillings were netted over the first venture that the parties running the trick determined to raise the subscription and increase their profits on the second coup. Once more I would advise all those who have been victimised, either by the first or second edition of this fraud, to communicate with the police, who ought to be able to trace the gang yet, if the matter is put in their hands.

Some of my readers will remember a reference in Truth a few weeks back to the exposure of an itinerant professor of pretended occult phenomena—Ormonde by name—at the hands of the Rev. T. I. Jarrott, a Nonconformist minister of Ipswich. Ormonde, when tackled, responded with a letter full of the most impudent abuse of Mr. Jarrott, and amounting to a very gross libel. A copy of this epistle he addressed to Truth, and I had much pleasure in consigning it to the waste-paper basket, and expressing my own opinion about Ormonde. Certain provincial papers were less careful, and published the document, with consequences which have proved unpleasant to themselves. They all declined to withdraw and apologise, when requested to do so by Mr. Jarrott, but four out of the five thought better of it when called to account by that gentleman's solicitor. The fifth, the Essex Telegraph, stood its ground until a writ for libel was issued, when it also apologised, paid all costs, and contributed £20 to a charity with which Mr. Jarrott was connected. Mr. Jarrott is to be congratulated upon the result, and deserves the greatest credit for the pluck and determination with which he tackled Ormonde in the face of the strong popular sympathy which imposters of this class generally manage to attract.

It should be added that although he did not deem it worth while to sue Ormonde himself upon his letter, Mr. Jarrott did formally accept a challenge contained in the letter to "try conclusions" with him before a jury in a public hall. In making this challenge Ormonde suggested that for the purpose of this contest a stake of any amount from £100 up to £1,000 should be deposited by each party with the Editor of TRUTH or the Bank of England. Mr. Jarrott has now formally notified me that he has accepted Ormonde's challenge, and that a friend of his is prepared to deposit the sum of £500 in my hands on his behalf, if Ormonde is prepared to act up to his offer. Up to the present time Ormonde has taken no notice of the acceptance of the challenge, and Mr. Jarrott states that he has even asserted in public that it has not been accepted. I am therefore pleased to make it known that the challenge has been accepted, and that Mr. Jarrott is ready to deposit his money, and I am now waiting to receive Ormonde's £500. I trust that the Press in any town where Ormonde may be performing will notice these facts, and thereby do its best to stop all imposture of this mischievous class.

Inquiries are continually being addressed to me respecting a "Society for the Assistance of Ladies in Reduced Circumstances," conducted by Miss Smallwood, of The Lees, Great Malvern. Not having any knowledge of Miss Smallwood's Society, I have not hitherto been able to express any opinion on the subject; but I have just received from a correspondent a leaflet containing Miss Smallwood's financial statements for the years 1894 and 1895. There are two honorary auditors of the Society, one of them being Mr. C. N. Bass, of the Birmingham, District, and Counties Bank, Kidderminster. Mr. Bass signs both the statements, and I suppose it may be taken from this that he has drawn out and accepts full responsibility for the accounts. In view, however, of the lax way in which even chartered accountants append their signatures to financial statements, I would respectfully suggest that Mr. Bass should formally certify precisely what he has seen and done in connection with the accounts. This seems the more desirable in view of the somewhat singular form of certificate appended to the 1895 accounts by Mr. H. B. Bennett, the other auditor. This gentleman states: "I hereby certify that I have examined the bank books and the cash in hand. The amounts agree with the balance, namely, £181. 15s. 11d." Mr. Bennett's auditorial functions would therefore seem to have been extremely limited. In making these remarks I must not be understood as offering or suggesting any opinion in regard to the work of the Society. I am merely contending for the principle that every society of this kind should issue accounts fully and properly certified by competent accountants.

With reference to the sponging tour of Dr. H. S. Lunn's three "Commissioners," the manager of the Jaeger Clothing Company informs me that the goods supplied by that firm to Dr. Lunn's three representatives "had been paid for by him in hard cash," and that they are "neither wholly nor partly given in consideration of an advertisement." I am pleased to mention this circumstance, although nothing whatever has been said in TRUTH as to the three "Commissioners" having been provided with Jaeger garments, or having advertised these goods. This communication from the Jaeger Company only shows how unfair is the system of advertising to which Dr. Lunn lends himself. When the reader finds in the articles written by the "Commissioners" references to the merits of hotels at which the travellers sojourn, he knows from the letter which I published last week that these notices are really advertisements, given in exchange for free board and lodging. Consequently, when the same reader finds the "Commissioners" writing in praise of their clothing, their machines, or any other property they may possess, he naturally concludes that this again is mere puffing for a consideration, whereas the writers may really be paying an honest tribute to the merits of the articles, as in the case of the Jaeger clothing. It is in order to avoid misconceptions of this kind that newspaper editors distinguish puffs which are inserted for a consideration by the word "advt.," and now that they see the injustice that they have done to the Jaeger Company, I trust that Dr. Lunn's "Commissioners" will observe this rule in their future writings.

As I see that a whole gang of individuals who have been concerned in running lotteries of one kind or another from Holland, are now before one of the London magistrates, I would call the attention of the police to an individual styling himself "Frank James, Banker," who is carrying on the same game from 30, Boulevard du Midi, Ostend. This James catches his victims by means of the following advertisement, or others like it:—

HOW to EARN £2 to £20 per WEEK without interfering with present occupation. No outlay, no canvassing required. Strictly bonâ-fide.—Send 1d. stamp for particulars to F. J., 35, Fairholme-road, West Kensington, S.W.

Those who reply receive a copy of a publication called "Frank James' Weekly. A Mine of Wealth for Young and Old," which is simply a prospectus of a weekly series of bogus competitions and other swindles of the same kind. As James is to be found, either personally or by deputy, at 35, Fairholme-road, there seems to be no reason why the police should not stop his little game.

The "lady of means" who advertises from 26, Brown-street, Manchester, under the name of Mrs. Gertrude Hall, proves, as might have been expected, to be a preliminary fee harpy of the ordinary kind. Since referring to her advertisement in last week's TRUTH, I hear of two cases in the north of England in which she has obtained inquiry fees from perfectly responsible persons with whom no legitimate money-lender would object to do business, and has then refused to make any advance. In neither case could the victims find that any serious inquiries had been made in regard to their financial status. This is in the face of the statement in Mrs. Hall's advertisement that she is prepared to make advances to all responsible householders "without charging preliminary fees." Her actual charges, I understand, range from £1. 1s. upwards. I should be glad if any one at Manchester could give me further information respecting this "lady of means," who, in all probability, is merely the decoy of some notorious usury-monger in the background.

My opinion has been asked upon one of the appeals of the Rev. G. W. Skene, of Barthomley Rectory, Crewe, on behalf of the new Parish Church of Alsagar. This appeal has been circulated broadcast for years past, and there is, of course, no reason why Mr. Skene should not beg for help from Church people outside his own parish; but Alsagar is a well-to-do district which might very well bear the cost of providing itself with a new church, if it wants one; and Mr. Skene's relations with his chapel-of-ease have not always been such as to give him personally a claim to much consideration in the appeals he is making.

Another appeal of somewhat the same class is being circulated for the liquidation of the debt for the renovation of Megarahamlet Presbyterian Church, co. Down. It seems that the congregation began this work in 1891 at a cost of £500, £400 of which they have succeeded in collecting, and apparently appeals have been in circulation during the whole five years. My view is that a congregation ought to pay for this kind of work themselves. If they must ask for outside help, they ought, at least, to confine their appeals to their own particular religious community.

The other day I published a circular from a firm of Dutch bulb-growers who offer a commission of 5 per cent. "to gardeners only." From numerous communications since received, it appears that the practice of offering such commissions prevails also among English seed growers and nurserymen, and several gentlemen express their strong objections to the practice. I suppose there is not much difference between a seedsman giving a commission to my gardener and a butcher giving a tip to my cook, or a tailor to my butler. And a seedsman is under special obligations to propitiate a gardener, inasmuch as that individual has it in his power to prevent any seed that he may buy bringing forth satisfactory results. At the same time, if no seedsman gave such commissions, a gardener would be under no inducement to obtain an order for one firm rather than another, and it seems to me a pity that the trade do not make a stand against such perquisites. The whole system of secret tips and commissions to servants behind the backs of their employers is thoroughly objectionable, and possibly many employers, if they knew what was going on, would themselves find the means of stopping it.

In connection with an accident on one of the southern lines the other day, when an express train was all but wrecked at a private level crossing, I have been asked to call public attention to the imperative necessity for some alteration of the existing arrangements governing the use of these crossings. On the occasion in question a traction engine was crossing the line immediately in front of an express train, without any signal or notice to the driver, who was unable to pull up in time to avoid a collision, though fortunately he saw the obstruction in time to prevent any very serious results. The crossing in question, like many others of the same kind, is entirely beyond the control of the Railway Company, and any traffic may cross there at any time, at the owner's risk, of course, and also at the risk of the lives of all the passengers in any train which may happen to be approaching. Such a state of things ought certainly not to be permitted to continue. George Stephenson's historical retort, that if a cow got on the line it would be "a bad thing for the coo," does not altogether apply to a traction engine trespassing upon a railway. A collision in the latter case might be bad for the traction engine; but the consequences are not likely to end there. It is necessary, I suppose, that there should be a right of communication between land on either side of the line; but there can be no reason why such communication should be used without notice to the nearest signalman. It is to be hoped after what happened that the Board of Trade will have the law on this point altered.

Last week I published a letter from a resident at Braemar, deprecating the construction of a railway, which would introduce vulgar people into that aristocratic and most exclusive spot. Notwithstanding the want of a railway, however, it would seem that some vulgar people have already found their way to Braemar. There is an individual giving the name of "John Henry," and the address 141, Bethnal Green-road, who has recently imposed upon one or two tradesmen in that part of the world, by means of a dodge which ought to be familiar to readers of TRUTH, under the name of the "Marking Ink Trick." The individual working this trick calls on a tradesman in the character of the representative of a wholesale London firm, generally in the marking ink line, offering him an agency, and promising enormous advantages in the way of advertisement. By this means he succeeds in disposing of a consignment of more or less worthless goods, and nothing more is heard of him. The rascal who has been playing this trick at Braemar and the surrounding districts is described as a man with dark hair and complexion and a Jewish cast of features, and not improbably he is the same man whom I referred to about a year ago as carrying on the same trick at Manchester under the name of "Rose," his real name being Isaacs. All that is known of "Henry" at 141, Bethnal Green-road is that he has relations there with whom he sometimes stays when he is in town, and he has his letters addressed there. It is a great pity that the tradesmen who are continually being swindled by this man, and others of his class, do not put the police on to them and get them locked up.

In reply to the letter from one of the exclusives of Braemar which I published last week, another correspondent points out that apart altogether from the "vulgar people" who desire to visit that place, the want of railway communication is seriously felt by the humbler residents, who have just as much right to live there as those who desire to be "rid of vulgar neighbours." They want the cheap means of communication which every civilised community does its best to promote. The prices of many necessaries of life are monstrously high at Braemar, and many others can hardly be obtained. Coal, for instance, during the summer months costs as much as 30s. per ton, and is described as very bad at that. But it ought hardly to be necessary at this time of day to argue about the benefits which railways bring to all sections of the community—except the superior few who regard the mass of mankind as "vulgar people."

One of the silliest exploits of the session has been voting three millions for a railway to Uganda. The opposition to this mad folly was limited to the non-official Radicals, for although Sir William Harcourt and Mr. Morley made no secret of their opinion that the money would be utterly wasted, they were unable to resist the vote, because the Cabinet to which they had belonged had been forced by Lord Rosebery to declare itself for a Protectorate in Uganda, and for the making of a railroad to that country; indeed, as though to show the difference in respect to this policy between himself and his former colleagues, his Lordship went out of his way to congratulate Lord Salisbury on having asked for this sum when the Bill reached the Lords.

The railroad will, in all probability, cost far more than three millions, for the greater portion of the route has not even been surveyed. It will never pay its running cost, still less the interest on the cost of construction. There are about 150 Europeans in Uganda—almost all either civil or military officials. The country is unfit for European colonisation, because not only does it break down the health of white men residing in it, but it is impossible for them to bring up their children there. Imports will be trifling, because the inhabitants have nothing wherewith to pay for them. A little ivory may find its way to the coast—enough, perhaps, to fill two or three trains annually—but this is all. To assert that the railroad will reduce the number of slaves sent to the coast is nonsense. In the Protectorate of Uganda slavery exists as an institution. The slaves that come down are mainly sold to work on the clove-fields of the Island of Pemba, which is in our Zanzibar Protectorate. About ten thousand are annually required to make up for the deaths caused by ill-usage. All slaves sent for shipment beyond Africa reach the coast by other routes. The pretence that the railroad will be a means of diminishing slavery is sheer hypocrisy, and how any one can venture to put it forward, in view of the fact that we allow slavery in Uganda and in Pemba, would be surprising were it not that the ultra-Jingoes, whose dream is to peg out claims for futurity in the jungles, and swamps, and forests of Central Africa, have ever sought to carry into effect this insane policy; now by posturing as Christians eager to spread Christianity, now as anti-slavery men anxious to put an end to slavery.

For this absurd outlay I hold the Liberal Party to be responsible. Lord Salisbury left office in 1891 without prejudicing our future action in Uganda. A Liberal Government annexed the country, and a Liberal Government pledged itself to build a railway to it. Lord Salisbury has only given monetary effect to this pledge. Instead of acting as a restraining force on wild Jingoism, the Liberal Party has out-Jingoed the Jingoes. What outrages me is that this should be the case. We are suffering from the defects of our own internal communications, which make it difficult for our own produce to compete successfully in our own markets; and yet we squander millions in improving communications from nowhere to nowhere in tropical Africa. We have at home millions in want and misery, and we spend millions in wild schemes of pegging out claims for futurity in the tropics! One way with another, Uganda will cost us about £300,000 per annum. Could not this sum have been better spent at home?

Cyprus is a pleasing instance of how we squander money on what does not concern us. We obtained the island by means of a bargain obliging us to take the side of the Turks against the Russians, and thus reduce the area of freedom from misgovernment in European Turkey. As a condition we pledged ourselves to guarantee a tribute from Cyprus to the Sultan of about £100,000. This tribute cannot be raised in the island, and therefore we have ourselves to pay a portion of it. When we obtained the island in this fashion we were told that it would be a British place of arms in the Levant. It has no harbour. Two or three hundred British soldiers are left in this place of arms, and, in the event of our finding ourselves engaged in a war in that part of the world, it would be worse than useless to us.

Seldom have I read a statement in Parliament with more satisfaction than that of Lord George Hamilton as to the inquiry which it is proposed to hold respecting the results of the suspension of the "C. D." Acts on the health of the Indian Army. This is a subject which I am incessantly being urged to ventilate; but it is one which cannot be handled easily or effectually in a newspaper, and, moreover, it is one in which it appears to be almost impossible for a private individual to get at the truth—the statements made on one side and the other being hopelessly at variance. I would now suggest to all those connected with the Army, including even the Army Chaplains, who have been of late years so anxious to enlighten the British public on this point through the pages of TRUTH, that they should at once offer their testimony to Lord George Hamilton. And let us hope that the result will be to show on which side the truth really lies.

SCRUTATOR.

PARLIAMENTARY STOCK-TAKING.

MR. BALFOUR, as a tipster, is to be congratulated upon having managed that the prorogation of Parliament should take place upon about the exact day on which, at the commencement of the Session, he announced that it would occur. As a Leader he has shown that he has alike merits and defects. He has an imperturbable temper and an agreeable manner. The advantages of this suaviter in modo are, however, somewhat marred by an absence of the fortiter in re, and by his not having mastered the technicalities of the "business of the House." The Session commenced by the production of a programme of Bills which it was absurd to suppose would be passed in a Session. This was evidently due either to his good-natured wish to please all, or to his not being master in the Cabinet. Whilst with Radicals it is a principle that the Premier should be in the House of Commons, the practical objections to that post being filled by a Peer are becoming every day more apparent even to Tories. The House of Commons is the place where the business of the country is carried on. The duration of a Ministry depends upon its retaining a majority in that House. For the Premier not to be there is much as though the captain of a ship were to remain on shore, and to attempt to command his vessel by transmitting orders to it whenever it enters a harbour.

The Education Bill was an ill-conceived measure, in the sense that it pleased neither friend nor foe. After considerable discussion, it had to be withdrawn. For a Government with a huge majority to be reduced to this surrender could hardly conduce to increase the confidence entertained in it by the country. An Act has been passed by which a present has been made of a vast annual sum to the landlords on the plea of benefiting farmers and agricultural labourers. Its duration is to be for five years. Even as a dole to the landlords it is a bungled measure, for it relieves landlords of rates even where there is no agricultural distress. In rural districts I doubt, however, whether it is unpopular, because people never seem to realise that, when rates are reduced at the cost of taxes, the burthen is not taken off but merely shifted in its incidence. In towns the Act cannot be popular, and in all probability at the end of the five years, if it be continued, some reduction of urban rates at the cost of taxes will be included in it.

The Government has not been seriously injured in the country by anything that has occurred in this year's Session. Those actively engaged in politics are far too apt to suppose that the mass of the electors closely follow procedings in the House of Commons. They form their conclusions on general results. Probably the Church Party is offended by not having succeeded in effecting the endowment of Church schools from rates and taxes without submitting them to popular control. But the Church Party is well aware that, if it were to put the present Government in a minority, this would be to jump from the frying-pan into the fire. The Cabinet, unless its members fall out with each other, is likely to last for the next five years, and any mistakes that have been made now will as little affect the result of the next appeal to the country as does the position of the horses in a race fifty yards from the starting point affect the race. Very probably the members of the Cabinet snap and snarl at each other in private, but between this and upsetting the cart which contains the apples there is a vast difference. So, too, with their followers. Since I have known Parliaments the "outs" are always wagging their heads and portending disaster to the "ins," but this is due to the "outs" invariably taking their hopes for realities.

The Liberal Party has during the Session been in a curious position. In the House of Commons Lord Rosebery's very existence has been ignored, and to all intents and purposes Sir William Harcourt has been our leader. But, notwithstanding this; notwithstanding the strong conviction entertained by all Liberals, who are not blinded by self-interest, that a Liberal Premier must be in the Commons, and notwithstanding that the late Premier proved himself a dismal failure as a Leader, Lord Rosebery periodically makes his appearance at some country gathering, and tacitly puts forward his claim to the Leadership. All this weakens the Party, and prevents it from any concentration of effort. What its policy is has to be slurred over, because the policy of Lord Rosebery in foreign affairs is entirely at variance with that of the Liberals, whilst in domestic policy he is rather a Whig than a Radical. As a Party, in fact, so far as I can perceive, the Liberals have no policy, and their wire-pullers and office-seeking hacks are under the impression that they must count on the swing of the pendulum alone to restore it to office.

The country is, alas, Conservative. This was shown by the last General Election. It is Conservative, because it prefers a Conservative Government to a Government neither Radical nor Conservative. Conservatism means political lethargy, and this lethargy will last until the Radical element in the constituencies asserts itself. I have again and again pointed out what alone will secure a Radical victory at the next General Election. Unless the issue is to be whether we are to fight for those drastic reforms which will put an end to a system of see-saw between two gangs of shilly-shallying office-holders, seeking in their own respective interests to perpetuate a scheme of Government wedded to the perpetuation of the rule of class privilege, there is no hope for us. Indeed, so far as I—and I think most other Radicals are concerned—it is better that we remain in the wilderness until we have made up our minds to go forth to battle in order to secure the triumph of Democracy along the entire line.

THE KILBURN SISTERHOOD.

ANOTHER FALSE STEP.

Although no attempt has been made in London to answer the indictment of the Kilburn Sisterhood contained in the report upon the TRUTH Inquiry, there has been during the last two or three weeks a spasmodic effort to whitewash the Sisterhood in the West of England, and last week it came to a very singular and instructive climax. The secretary of one of the local branches of the Church Extension Association started a correspondence in the Western Morning News by a letter, already noticed in TRUTH, offering to send to any one who desired it a pamphlet refuting all the allegations against the Sisterhood. Other letters followed from critics and defenders of the Sisterhood, the former contending that nothing in the shape of an adequate defence had been published; the latter contending that the Sisters had been cruelly traduced, and had satisfactorily answered their accusers. It would seem that it was thought desirable at the headquarters of the Sisterhood to take advantage of the local interest thus aroused, the C.E.A. having apparently, until the recent blow fell upon the Sisterhood, had an influential following in Devonshire. Accordingly, about a fortnight ago, the following letter appeared in the Western Morning News:—

"THE KILBURN SISTERS."

SIR,—Regarding the correspondence about the "Kilburn Sisters," I beg to say that one of the senior Sisters is coming to the local office on Monday, the 10th inst., and there will be a meeting on Tuesday, 11th, in the local office-rooms, 3, King-street East, at 3.30 p.m. The accusations made by TRUTH will be fully discussed, and I should like all persons who are interested in the matter—either for or against—to come and hear for themselves. (Miss) L. HUMPHRIS, Secretary, C.E.A.
Local Branch, 3, King-street East, Plymouth.

It will be seen that this is an invitation to the public—or as many of the public as are "interested in the matter, either for or against"—to attend a meeting at which a qualified representative of the Sisterhood was to appear, apparently for the purpose of making a public defence of the Sisterhood. Immediately before the meeting the following advertisement was published:—

Fair play is a jewel! A special meeting will take place on Tuesday next, at 3.30 p.m., at the local offices of the Church Extension Association, 3, King-street, Plymouth, when a Kilburn Sister will gladly answer any question relating to the recent TRUTH accusations. All are invited.

Every effort seems to have been made to secure a large attendance of the public by private advertisements, as may be seen from the following singular epistle, addressed to the manager of one of the Plymouth hotels, and, I presume, not to him only:—

Church Extension Association,
3, King-street East, Plymouth.
August 8, 1896.

DEAR SIR,—May I venture to solicit your co-operation in securing for us your guests' attendance at a special meeting next week, be (sic) allowing the enclose (sic) notice to be placed in a prominent position in your hotel, as when two sides of the question, in reference to the attack of our Sisterhood is heard one may have equal judgment (sic). Thanking you in advance, yours faithfully,
L. HUMPHRIS, Local Secretary.
The Manager, Westminster Hotel, Plymouth.

This is the notice enclosed:—

THE KILBURN SISTERHOOD.

The Local Secretary cordially invite (sic) the Guests and Household of the Westminster Hotel to a special meeting on Tuesday afternoon next at 3.30, when a Senior Sister will address the meeting.—3, King-street, Plymouth.

The meeting convened in this way was duly held on the 11th, and a report of the proceedings appears in the Western Morning News for the following day. The reporter describes the event as a "fiasco," and it was indeed a fiasco of the most extraordinary character. The office at which the meeting was held seems to be the local depot of the Church Extension Association—"a shop in which was a large collection of new and second-hand clothing, and a set of rooms up stairs." On the reporter of the Western Morning News presenting himself he was received in the manner thus described:—

He was met in the shop by a lady attired in the garb of a "Sister," and at once asked if he was a reporter. On learning his mission, the lady informed him that the meeting was strictly private, that the presence of reporters was not desired, and that no publicity was to be given to the proceedings in the Press. Our representative pointed out that the gathering was advertised as a public one, that the public was invited, and that those who were unable to be present expected to be able to read a report of the proceedings. "Sister" May—for so the lady was addressed by her companions—persisted in her assurances that the meeting was strictly private, and that the advertisement in the paper was all a mistake, and ought never to have been inserted. Seeing that others were allowed to enter without being interrogated, our representative intimated his willingness to withdraw from the meeting if it was the wish of the majority of the public attending it that he should do so; and eventually he gained admission.

Here we have another phenomenal exhibition of the shiftiness of attitude—I do not wish to use an offensive word, but "shiftiness" is the only one I can find to express the facts—which seems to characterise all the dealings of the Sisterhood with their supporters and the public. A meeting is extensively advertised, everybody interested in the Society, whether for or against, is invited to attend, and when a representative of the Press, which is surely interested in whatever interests the public, presents himself, he is informed that the advertisements are a mistake, and that the meeting is "strictly private." The general public did not attend in any great force—it is stated that only about a dozen persons were present—but those who came were treated in precisely the same way as the Press representative. The proceedings were opened with some remarks from the Sister above referred to—I presume the same "Sister May" whose acquaintance I have made in interviews at TRUTH Office and at Kilburn. At the outset a gentleman present proposed that reporters should be allowed to remain, and another gentleman seconded the proposition, but Sister May repeated that the meeting was a private one. A desultory conversation ensued, in the course of which another gentleman, who seems to have been favourably disposed towards the Sisterhood, said that he had understood that the meeting was a public one, and that that was why he was present, but that if it was a private meeting the only remedy was for all who were not subscribers to withdraw. No one withdrew, however, and a fresh turn was given to the proceedings by a local tradesman, who complained that goods had been ordered in the name of the Association, and had not been paid for, and that a County Court summons had had to be issued. A lady concerned in this transaction then answered this criticism with some warmth, and another lady who was present asked the representative of the Western Morning News "to remember, if he remained, that it was not desirable to report all that might be said at the meeting." After other irrelevant episodes, Sister May stated that she must decline "to take any further part in the proceedings if the meeting was to be public"; whereupon two gentlemen moved a resolution to the effect that business should be commenced, and another gentleman moved that the meeting should be adjourned sine die. The report concludes:—"In the absence of a chairman—apparently an unthought-of item—each proposer put his own motion; with the result that those in favour of an adjournment triumphed, and the meeting terminated."

The Sister who presided over this ridiculous farce, although I have had occasion to criticise somewhat severely the part which she has taken in the recent history of the Sisterhood, is at any rate a lady of considerable intelligence and some knowledge of the world. I would seriously ask her, with other "senior Sisters" who still remain in responsible positions at Kilburn, whether they can seriously believe that their Society is to be rehabilitated in the eyes of the public by such lamentable tomfoolery as this performance at Plymouth. The impression produced by the TRUTH Report can only be aggravated by such means, and the effect must be to deprive the Sisterhood of the last shreds of confidence and respect which may linger in the minds of its former supporters.

The same thing may be said of the attempts which have been made, at Plymouth and elsewhere, to represent the Sisters as having furnished an answer to the TRUTH Report. The only shadow of foundation for such a contention, as I have already pointed out, lies in a series of articles published in Church Bells in answer to the Report of the C.O.S. These articles were actually published prior to the TRUTH Report, to which they are now represented as an answer, and no attempt whatever has since been made in the columns of Church Bells to deal with the result of the TRUTH inquiry. On the contrary, the editor of that paper has expressly excused himself from so doing. Let me here call attention for a moment to the following paragraph in an article published in Church Bells of July 24:—

The Editor of TRUTH points out that we have not dealt with his supplement referring to the Kilburn Sisterhood. The Record and several other leading Church papers have also been silent. As for ourselves, it will be apparent to any reader of our pamphlet that on several points the conclusions we came to in our investigations were diametrically opposed to those subsequently arrived at by the Editor of TRUTH. It did not appear to us necessary or courteous to narrate at length our points of difference, while it was obviously impossible, since we were not present to endorse or criticise the account of the private interviews to which the Editor refers at some length. We were favourably struck with the temperate way in which he sums up his conclusions in the matter, and still more with his expression of a sincere desire that the work of the Sisters, once relieved from the burden of adverse criticism, may have a further and more vigorous lease of life.

I am reluctant to say anything implying that I do not reciprocate these amiable sentiments; but there are occasions on which it is necessary to lay aside sentiment and speak the truth plainly. It is undoubtedly the case that the conclusions arrived at by Church Bells were diametrically opposed to those subsequently arrived at by the Editor of TRUTH. That being so, and the conclusions of TRUTH having been arrived at on materials supplied by the Kilburn Sisters, by the Charity Organisation, and by other parties, much of it being evidence which Church Bells had never looked at, it seems to me that the Editor of Church Bells owed it to himself and his readers to make at least an attempt to justify conclusions which to anyone who has read the TRUTH report must appear absolutely irreconcilable with facts which the Sisters did not dispute; and this duty becomes the stronger when it is remembered that the report of Church Bells was being ostentatiously used for the purpose of restoring confidence in the Sisterhood, and satisfying the subscribers to the Church Extension Association that all imputations upon the management of the charity were unfounded. Without boasting, I think I may say that the case made out by the TRUTH report was a very strong one, and that it has been recognised as such by the Press and the public. Unless the evidence given in it was false and fraudulent, and the arguments utterly fallacious, the conclusions put forward by Church Bells were calculated at every step to mislead the public. For my contemporary to say, under such circumstances, that he does not deem it "necessary or courteous" to defend his own case against the effect of the TRUTH report, looks to me very like shirking an encounter the result of which is likely to prove unpleasant.

As long as this attitude is observed, it does not seem to me that I am called upon to go at any length into the case put forward by Church Bells. My answer to the Church Bells report is the TRUTH report. The two pamphlets are before the public, and it is an easy matter for those who desire it to compare the two, and see for themselves how far the Church Bells conclusions are or are not disposed of by the TRUTH conclusions. Were I now to deal in detail with the Church Bells report, it would simply mean that I should go over the whole case again, step by step, and show how completely each argument and allegation put forward in Church Bells on behalf of the Sisters fails to answer the evidence which I have already put forward. But there are one or two general observations which I will take this opportunity of making. The first is this: That, whereas the TRUTH inquiry was a complete inquiry, so far as the Sisters permitted it to be so, the Church Bells inquiry cannot lay the slightest claim to be considered anything of the sort. That journal, having undertaken to investigate the allegations made by the Charity Organisation Society, made no pretence whatever at allowing the Charity Organisation Society an opportunity of justifying its own allegations. Its procedure was confined to ascertaining what the Sisters had to say in reply, and deciding off-hand whether or not these replies were sufficient. For instance, upon the question of the treatment of the children in the orphanages during 1893—to many the most vital question of all—not an attempt was made to get at the real evidence against the Sisters, although this is a case of a direct conflict of testimony; but the whole of this branch of the case was disposed of by the simple process of accepting the statements of the Sisters, inspecting the children as they were two years later, and pronouncing the witnesses on the other side (who had not been seen or even approached) to be persons undeserving of credit. A remarkable illustration of the attitude of Church Bells towards evidence unfavourable to the Sisters was brought under my notice the other day. A letter was written to the Editor calling attention to certain specific facts. The letter was not published, and a reply was sent to the writer on the Editor's behalf, to the effect that the Editor could not investigate isolated cases. How on earth is an issue of this character to be decided except by investigating isolated cases? To take another most important point, there is no indication in the Church Bells report that the "Commissioners" had seen the accounts on which the criticism of the C.O.S. was directed, or the auditor responsible for these accounts. Neither, it is true, did I see either the accounts or the auditor; but there is this important difference between us: that I made every effort to see both the accounts and the auditor, and succeeded in obtaining from the Sisters promises that I should do so—promises which were subsequently evaded by the tactics which have been fully described in the TRUTH report, and which are calculated to inspire the gravest doubt as to the straightforwardness and good faith of the Sisters. These are a few instances only of the onesidedness and superficiality of the Church Bells "investigation." The Charity Organisation Society have characterised the report as an ex parte statement, and it seems to me impossible to regard it as anything else. The first duty of an investigator is to hear both sides of the case under investigation, and that the Editor of Church Bells, I say it most emphatically, has not done. His report, therefore, has no title whatever to be regarded as the result of an impartial inquiry.

To this I must add that, in dealing with such matter as they took into consideration—that is to say, the replies to the Charity Organisation Society, furnished to them at Kilburn—the authors of the Church Bells report displayed an amount of credulity or partiality, or both, which deprives their conclusions of all weight. The reader who compares the Church Bells articles with the corresponding passages in TRUTH will see for himself again and again that the same statements and observations were made by the Sisters to the Church Bells representatives and to me; but whereas my contemporary's representatives seem to have invariably swallowed "whole" whatever was told to them, I made bold to test what I was told by further questions or other investigation, with the result that in many instances the original statement had to be considerably modified, and in some cases proved to be unsupportable. One of the most unpleasant results of my investigation was that many statements made on behalf of the Sisterhood turned out to be quite at variance with undisputed facts, and the net result of my inquiry was that there was very little controversy indeed as to facts—excepting, perhaps, on the important question of the treatment of the girls—and that the difference between the two sides resolved itself very much into a matter of the interpretation of facts, or the opinion to be formed upon them. When it comes to this, the partiality, or otherwise, of the party drawing the conclusion is a very important consideration. Personally, I am unconscious of any bias whatever against the Sisterhood—on the contrary, as an institution, it is one for which I have every admiration—and, even by the admission of Church Bells, the subject has been handled in TRUTH temperately. But I regret to say that I cannot by any means return this compliment. The worst feature in the Church Bells articles is the attacks there made—not only on insufficient evidence, but in the very face of documentary evidence to the contrary—upon the attitude and motives of the ladies who have left the Kilburn Sisterhood. It is no part of my business to defend these ladies, and I am far from asserting that nothing may have been said or written by individuals which is irreproachable. But of this I am confident, that the attitude of those Sisters who led the great secession in 1894, as testified by their language and behaviour at that time and since, has been, from first to last, beyond reproach. I would go further, and say that no one who has looked impartially into the inner working of the Sisterhood down to the beginning of 1894, and at what took place in the Homes and Orphanages in the period immediately preceding it, can doubt that these ladies were justified in the course which they took, and that their justification has been completed by everything that has happened since. In delivering the wholesale and undiscriminating attacks which it has done upon these Sisters, Church Bells has simply made itself the mouthpiece of the rancorous spite of the present heads of the Sisterhood towards those who thought it their duty to separate themselves from the Community. In so doing, it forfeits all title to be regarded as an impartial authority upon the questions at issue. I may add that, in what passed between myself and the Sisters, it seemed to me that they distinctly looked upon Church Bells as their mouthpiece, referring me in many instances to what had been said in that paper on one point or another. An incident which specially impressed me was the production by the Sisters, for the purposes of our interview, of a letter which had actually been written to the Editor of Church Bells for publication in that paper. Instead of being so published, the letter had been sent by the editor to the Sisters, obviously for the purpose of assisting them in their interview with me, the purpose for which they used it. From this it follows that the Editor of Church Bells knew what was passing between the Sisters and myself, and was ready to help them even at some sacrifice of the ordinary etiquette of an editorial office. This, again, is the attitude of a partisan, not of an independent searcher after truth.

I have thought it my duty to make these general remarks upon the Church Bells articles in view of the reiterated attempts to use them as a defence against the result of the investigation which I was myself invited to make by the Mother Superior and her representatives. But to all who are capable of seeing for themselves the true state of the case is best demonstrated by the conduct of the Sisterhood in its relations with TRUTH since December last. What has that conduct been? In consequence of the reference in TRUTH to the original report of the C.O.S., the Mother Superior and her advisers approached me with a declaration that I had been misinformed, and an invitation to me to test the allegations against their Society for myself. In a series of interviews I went into the whole case with the Mother Superior and her representatives — up to a certain point. At that point the Sisters manifested reluctance to allow me to complete my investigation on the lines to which they had originally assented, and made demands upon me which it was out of the question that I could comply with. On my requesting that the original arrangement should be adhered to, they then placed themselves in the hands of a solicitor, who gravely proposed that I should submit a case to him, and (apparently) allow him to pronounce judgment on me. When I declined to assent to this course, and insisted on the completion of the inquiry that I had undertaken, this solicitor announced that he declined to let me go further, at the same time informing me that on the publication of any further remarks unfavourable to the Sisterhood in TRUTH he was instructed to at once commence an action for libel; in other words, legal proceedings were threatened in order to prevent my publishing the result of an inquiry undertaken at the request of the Sisters, and on the understanding that the result, favourable or not, must be made public. Without regard to this threat my report was published, and was at nearly every point unfavourable to the Sisterhood. No libel action followed, no communication of any kind has since been received by me from the Sisters or their solicitor; so that the threat of an action, apart from the impropriety of any recourse to the law after what had passed, was a mere piece of empty brag, uttered purely for the purpose of intimidation, and without any serious intention of giving effect to it.

Since then what have we seen? The Sisters have studiously refrained from any direct answer to the TRUTH report, or any attempt to justify before the public the shuffling and discreditable tactics which led up to the report. The Church paper which has taken up their case excuses itself from noticing the result of the TRUTH inquiry on the ground that to do so is not necessary and would not be courteous. In the meantime, the Church Bells pamphlet is busily advertised and circulated by the Sisters as a conclusive answer to all allegations, including those in the TRUTH report. Finally, we have it announced with a flourish of trumpets at an important provincial centre that a senior Sister is coming down to address a meeting in answer to the allegations of TRUTH; and what does this demonstration turn out to be? A gathering of a dozen people in a room over a shop, at which the lady who has taken the most prominent part in the negotiations with TRUTH arrives only to announce that the meeting is not a public one, and that if what passes is to be reported in the Press, she declines to speak. Such proceedings, regarded as an attempt to meet a serious indictment, publicly made, are simply childish in their fatuity; and they are of a piece with everything that has happened since the early stages of the TRUTH inquiry. Had the present executive of the Kilburn Sisterhood deliberately set themselves to see how they could best alienate all public confidence, make themselves ridiculous, and drag the Institution through the mud, they could hardly have adopted tactics more certain to achieve these ends. The fiasco at Plymouth, taken in conjunction with all that has preceded it, can only serve to drive home the conclusion drawn in the TRUTH report, that the government of the Sisterhood and the management of the Church Extension Association have fallen into the hands of persons totally destitute of practical wisdom, and utterly incompetent for the task. Unless some drastic reform is speedily effected the result must be the utter ruin of the great work which this Sisterhood has undertaken. Is nothing to be done to avert that calamity?

MORE LIFEBOAT POLEMICS.

The Yorkshire Post published some further remarks last week on the recent criticism of the Lifeboat Institution in TRUTH. Until Mr. Palmer and the Secretary of the Institution have come to some agreement as to how far they impute mercenary motives to the crews of their boats, it is idle for me to argue further with either of them. The Secretary wrote to me:—

> Were the Institution to attempt to force on them [the boatmen] any conditions such as those suggested by the Secretary of Lloyd's, the almost certain results would be (1) that the men would on some parts of the coast refuse to man the lifeboats. . . .

I know nothing, nor does the public, of the conditions that have been suggested by the Secretary of Lloyd's, and their adoption has never been suggested in TRUTH. The Secretary of the Lifeboat Institution wrote the above sentence in answer to the suggestion of TRUTH that the present arrangement in regard to salvage of property is a bad one. The only inference I can draw from this, and the only inference that I can admit is a natural one, is that Mr. Dibdin intended his remarks to be an answer to TRUTH as much as an answer to the Secretary of Lloyd's, and that he meant to say that unless the men "on some parts of the coast" are allowed to salve property on their own account they will not attempt to salve life. This, I contend, is a statement that unless the heroes are paid their price no heroes will be forthcoming. What does the reader think? What do the subscribers to the National Lifeboat Institution think—more especially when they see that Mr. Dibdin personally has not in any way disclaimed the interpretation which I place upon his words to me?

Mr. Palmer, however, conscious, no doubt, of the awkwardness of Mr. Dibdin's language, tries to give us another reading of the argument. Here it is:—

> The truth is—as Mr. Dibdin had said in another part of his letter—that the Secretary of Lloyd's has endeavoured to induce the Lifeboat Institution to force upon the crews conditions so wholly inequitable and unjust that both the Shipowners' Association and the Board of Trade had refused to be parties to them; and if any such coercion were to be attempted, the men would resist en masse in whatever way they found most effective.

The last sentence, as the reader will see at a glance, is directly at variance with what Mr. Dibdin said. Whereas the editor of the Yorkshire Post predicts that the men will resist en masse, Mr. Dibdin only says that they will resist "on some parts of the coast." And the difference between the two statements is most important, the fact being that on some parts of the coast property salvage is of little consequence to the men, while on others it is the paramount consideration. No suggestion has been made in TRUTH that the men should be subjected to conditions "wholly inequitable and unjust." On the contrary, I have contended, and still contend, that the present system, of which Messrs. Dibdin and Palmer are the apologists, is itself inequitable and unjust—and the best proof of this, so far as the men are concerned, is Mr. Dibdin's admission that only "on some parts of the coast" would the men strike to maintain the present system. Mr. Palmer is defending a system under which a lifeboat crew on one station earn £2,000 for themselves by a few hours' work without incurring a particle of risk, while on another a crew may imperil their lives time after time to save their fellow-creatures without earning a brass farthing; and when this state of things is criticised he has the audacity to affect grave solicitude, lest the men should be subjected to conditions which are "inequitable!" The first consideration of equity seems to me to be that the risks and labours of the lifeboat-man's work should be rewarded on a uniform scale, regardless of the value of the ship or the part of the coast where the work is done—which is certainly not the case at present.

Finally, this strange exponent of equity repeats again his claptrap appeals to the gallery. "The lifeboat crews are to be traduced," he says, "and their splendid humanity and courage made a scoff because they decline to become a cheap salvage corps at the bidding of the Secretary of Lloyd's." The Secretary of Lloyd's must have been hitting Mr. Palmer very hard, judging by the bitterness with which he continually recurs to this gentleman! But so far as the lifeboat crews are concerned, let Mr. Palmer and his clients understand once for all, that it is not the courage of the lifeboat crews which is called in question, but the intelligence and competence of the management of the Lifeboat Institution. The present attempt to shelter the responsible parties behind the crews, and to represent the latter as the object of attack, is a feeble artifice and a decidedly undignified one. Mr. Palmer is good enough to express a desire to make it easy for me "to withdraw from a position at once untenable and unworthy." I am much obliged to him, but I have no intention of withdrawing—quite the reverse. My present object is to cause other parties to withdraw; and nothing that has appeared in the Yorkshire Post up to the present is calculated to deter me from that object. On the contrary, the more I see of the methods by which it is defended, the less I like the look of the National Lifeboat Institution.

NOTES FROM PARIS.

GETTING READY FOR THE CZAR.

THE Government have decided wisely not to leave to irresponsible busybodies the task of getting up fêtes and functions in honour of Nicholas and Alexandra. There was a danger of the Imperial couple being used by editors as Barnumesque curiosities. A scheme was seriously mooted, in the names, too, of charity, patriotism, and Society, to show them to the highest bidders for places at the Opera House. The person who thus wanted to turn an honest penny is the ex-secretary and debt-collector of a famous beauty. M. Hanotaux, however, snubbed him for his proposal. That Minister will be in a double sense the confrère of Prince Lobanoff, who comes with the Emperor and Empress. Both are historians. One has taken up statecraft in French history, and the other the romance and graces as incarnate in Mary Stuart. As there is not rivalry there is agreement. M. Faure, toujours galant, will go out to sea in the new crack warship, the Dupuy de Lorne, to salute the coming Empress. This exceeds the late French Emperor's politeness in going to meet Queen Victoria at Boulogne-sur-Mer. Napoleon III. on that occasion overrid the Protocol in consideration of the Queen's sex, as Louis XIV. set aside etiquette to honour the sex and misfortunes of the refugee Queen of James II. But had Albert been King and Victoria Consort merely, the Emperor would not have gone further than his hall door steps.

It is the fashion, I see, to drop "Czar" and "Czarina" for "Tsar" and "Tsaritsa." Fashion is a mighty power, and not to be argued with. All the same, one may point out its errors. The former titles west, and east too, of the Vistula, unless in speaking Russian, have been in use for 170 years. Would it not be ridiculous to speak in Paris of "Londres" as London, or "La Chambre des Pairs" as "Le House of Lords?" Voltaire, Frederick the Great, Catherine II., and Prince de Ligne, fixed the use of the word Czarina or Czarine in their respective countries. I find Czar and Czarine alone used in the "Life of Peter the Great," "Voltaire's Correspondence," and the "Memoirs" of Frederick's Sister, the Margravine of Beyreuth. We might as well talk of a German "Queen" in English as "Die Kœnigen" as of a Tsaritsa of Russia. In State papers, however, Czar and Czarine or Czarina were always dropped. The Russian potentate there appeared as Emperor or Empress. I have before me an original letter of the wife of Paul I., written here in 1782. She speaks of Catherine II., then living, as "la Czarine," of her husband as the "Czarewitch," and notes that she was spoken of before her face at Versailles, not as the Comtesse du Nord, her incognito title, but as the "Mme. la Czarevna." Tsaritsa, unless in Russian, has a pedantic smack, and sounds uncouth to ears used to tongues of Southern origin. Is not this a case for saying le mieux est l'ennemi du bien?

The Czar's great wish is to see Paris nature, as his uncles are used to see it. He and the Czarina will dine at the Elysée. But they would much more enjoy going incognito to the theatre than in state. If the gentlemen of the Protocol wish really to please him and his young wife, they should go to Copenhagen and the German towns to study the Tivolis there. The Paris Tivoli is dead ages ago, and buried under streets. Its Danish and Teutonic progeniture are lively and likely to live long. I believe that Ranelagh and Vauxhall were the original ancestors of all the Continental Tivolis. It is curious that the type should have died out in England and France. The Copenhagen Tivoli is a place for families—courtly, aristocratic, and shopkeeping—to pass the evening. The climate is more rainy than that of England, so that all kinds of shelters are provided. When it is at all fine all ranks are confounded at little supper tables in colonnades. One has the best music, and the sights and diversions of a fair, without any rowdyism. Denmark is dear to all the children of the late Czar, as it was to him and his wife. They enjoyed these homely, happy times. Every one liked them, few noticed them in public, unless they attended some open-air function. They felt in a genial atmosphere of friendliness, and were unshadowed by Russian or other police.

In dealing last month with the Bonaparte Library, I little thought I was bringing on myself a shower of "criticisms" filling four foolscap papers. They are really defensive explanations. The plaidant is by a Mr. Victor Collins, who does not say for whom he speaks, but shows eagerness to get me to retract. He makes it hard for me to answer him by asking for "an amende for causing bitter grief to a friendless and most unfortunate widow, the Princess." I had no idea that there was either widow or princess to be served by the library scheme, or, indeed, that there was such a person. If I unwittingly hurt whose is the fault? The backers of the scheme—Mr. Collins objects to the word promoters—never hinted that they were actuated by compassionate feeling as well as public spirit. Their appeal, as I read it, meant business, and nothing else. It asked the public to give £2,000 more to complete a fund of £6,000 for the purchase of the Bonaparte Library. The bait thrown out was the wonderful bargain that was offered. It had the glow of an auctioneer's advertisement. Neither manner nor matter showed the sober verbiage of erudite men, of which alone, it appears from Mr. Collins, the committee is made up. Could, I thought in reading it, a Littré or a Burnouf have so talked down to a credulous and snobbish public? I only saw that the proffered library was not a gift horse but really a gift elephant, and so thought of looking it in the mouth. The appeal to public confidence may have been, and I now am ready to admit was, made with the purest motives. But it was, at any rate, a mistake to base it on the rare erudition of Prince Lucien and the readiness of the City of London—a most incompetent judge in such a matter—to take it over if the £6,000 were fully subscribed in July. If not in July, then the library, worth nearer to £40,000 than to £30,000, must be brought to the hammer in August when every one was out of town. This looks to me still as la carte forcée.

It was legitimate to treat Prince Lucien as a sorry fellow, who, if he owned such a library, held out his hand for a civil list pension, on a claim to erudition which competent persons thought flimsy. I know that the Institute smiled at his erudition, which was that of a dogmatic dilettante. Van Eys' Basque grammar shows what Prince Lucien's claims were. Anyone who chooses can, I fancy, look over it at the British Museum. The edition that I know was published in 1879 (Maisonneuve, 25, Quai Voltaire; Williams and Norgate, London; and Muller, Amsterdam). Van Eys before that date spent fifty years in studying Basque. He still lives, and is at Remo. There is no more competent authority.

I recollected in writing last month that Prince Lucien made Basque studies an excuse for hovering near Biarritz when the Imperial court, from which he was excluded, was there. It is ridiculous to say that Van Eys would be too generous to gainsay, now that Prince Lucien is dead, his claims to erudition. The question of generosity should not be raised. Lucien made rattling mistakes, and Van Eys, whom he presumed to attack, wrote him down a pseudo savant. For a "Prince" he was learned. I should class him as an erudit with the late King of Portugal as a translator of Shakespeare, or the Duke of Coburg as a violinist. You remember that when Dom Luis translated Shakespeare his subjects said: "How well qualified he would be if he only knew Portuguese!"

Mr. Collins throws at my head a long list of works and translations of Prince Lucien and of the learned societies he belonged to. What has the number of books to do with the issues raised, or of the learned societies (mostly British) to which he belonged? Such societies are formed generally of amateurs and dilettanti. Their secretaries are always trying to net as members men with illustrious names. To aspire to erudition in this or that direction is enough for a titled personage. Membership is not a proof of capacity as at the Institute of France.

Why do not the Committee ask Prince Roland Bonaparte to take over his uncle's library? He rolls in riches, has just built himself a big palace which he is furnishing, thirsts for scientific fame, and should be pleased and proud to possess relics honourable to his branch of the family. Or why not approach Lady Burdett Coutts? Her nephew, Lord Dudley Stuart, married a sister of Prince Lucien, who was uncle of the Baroness's great nephew, Mr. Coutts Stuart. If she bought the library, after a valuation by qualified persons, and gave it over to the British Museum, she would be again a public benefactress.

Prince Lucien Bonaparte was the best of the four sons of Lucien the First. The others made the States of the Church too hot to hold them. All had impetuous, masterful tempers, and literary and archæological tastes. In different ways each contrived to bleed the late Emperor of money. They were brought up at Musignano among the Etrurian remains which their father disinterred during more than twenty years, to the enrichment of most of the great museums of Europe. Pierre and Antoine lived like banditti, carrying off women and shooting the men who went to stop, or came to arrest them. Pierre fired his final shot at Victor Noir, at Auteuil, and killed him. The eldest, whom I remember as Prince of Musignano, was married to a daughter of his uncle Joseph. He revolted against the Pope, was President of the Roman Constituent, and such a violent domestic tyrant that his wife ran away to Paris to supplicate the Emperor to protect her and her son—the future Cardinal. The Prince of Musignano met this by threatening to publish certain papers of the first Lucien, proving over and over again the dishonour of Josephine and Hortense. Louis Napoleon bought these documents at his cousin's price. The death of the wife, Zenaïde, put an end to the feud. The late Prince Lucien, who obtained a civil list pension of £250 a year, about the fourth of the entire fund, figured here during the Second Republic as an ultra-Liberal. He played this card until he got a large sum of money and a senatorship. This post was honorary as he had to live out of France.

Antoine, the youngest of the four brothers, led a charmed life. His life was spared by the Pope at the supplication of Lady Dudley Stuart and her mother. The Papal Government banished him and he went to Greece, where he got into another serious scrape. In New York he had the narrowest escape of being lynched for forgetting that he was not at Musignano. Thence he went to Mexico and Panama with a scheme in his head that he and Louis had talked over at Bordentown for making an inter-oceanic canal. He laid the egg at Columbia which his cousin Lucien Wyse and De Lesseps hatched fifteen years ago. Thus, had the sbire sent to arrest Antoine shot, instead of being shot by, him, the Panama bubble would not have been inflated in our time.

LETTER FROM THE LINKMAN.

THE late Lord Houghton, Dear Lady Betty, is said to have declared that the highest condition of social happiness would consist in being known by everybody and knowing nobody, and in being asked everywhere and going nowhere. It has always appeared to me that the highest state of human happiness must be to have much health, much wealth, much time, and many friends to do nothing whatever with.

I am now attempting to attain that ideal state. Instead of the continuous roar of the road which is the dominant sound in London, there is here, as I write, a silence which is audible. Instead of the continual movement which becomes so irritating, there is not even a leaf trembling upon a tree. So quiet are my surroundings that the music of the midges annoys me, and I am distressed if a fly occasionally hums! It is not to be wondered at, therefore, that I am altogether disinclined to write.

The death of Sir John Millais will be regretted by all. He was both an excellent artist and an excellent man. Very good looking, possessing great charm of manner, very straightforward, always pleased to be of use to his fellow-creatures, and invariably cheerful, he was the central figure in an especially charming British home. All who knew Sir John will grieve that he is gone, and all who knew that home will sympathise with Lady Millais and his family. The late Sir John Millais never tried to attain or to retain popularity by self-advertisement; he worked conscientiously, and left the public to decide whether that which he had done pleased or did not please it. There are many artists, authors, and actors now who cannot expect to attain the success which he achieved; they might, however, imitate his honesty.

Li Hung Chang deposits packets of tea and pretty phrases throughout his tour in Europe. It is a pity that the official world in this country will not learn that Orientals enjoy quiet and abominate banquets. The mistake which was made when the Shah visited England some years ago has been repeated in the case of Li Hung Chang. The Chinese Statesman is being hurried from one town to another, from this factory to that, and no opportunity is lost of inflicting a dinner upon him. It is amusing to notice the ingenious efforts he makes to upset the official telegram. At first he explained that he was too old and infirm, but this excuse was not accepted. He then declared that he had received important despatches from China which had to be answered at once. He obtained a few hours' rest by this. Li Hung Chang became brutal, and frankly declared that he did not wish to see anything. After much "persuasion" he relented. Before he leaves England he will probably become "sulky," like a salmon, and nothing will "persuade" him to move from the house. When the late Shah of Persia left England he did not conceal the happiness he felt, and it is not at all unlikely that Li Hung Chang will follow his example.

Li Hung Chang has accepted the invitation of only two London Clubs to become an honorary member, to wit, of the Athenæum and the Piccadilly.

The Ryde Regatta, which ended on Friday, was the most successful upon record. The feature of the week was the race of the big yachts on Wednesday, for the cup and prize presented by Mr. Whitaker Wright. The first half of the race was keenly contested by Meteor and Ailsa, but after that Meteor sailed away swiftly, defying all competition. The sailing of Meteor in a light wind on Wednesday was magnificent. Having been notified of the victory of Meteor, the German Emperor telegraphed the following message to Mr. Whitaker Wright:—"Am most proud to have won your cup, which, I am told, is a very handsome one. Would be glad to have a photograph of it till the original graces my table."—Believe me to be, very truly yours,

MARMADUKE.

SPORTING NOTES.

A THUNDERBOLT from a summer sky, as Sir William Temple says, would not have caused more amazement than the sudden announcement of the scratching of St. Frusquin for the St. Leger. The tragical collapse was utterly unexpected, as only last Wednesday the horse was sent a fast gallop on the Limekilns, and he went as well as possible, and pulled up all right at the finish. St. Frusquin walked on Thursday, and again on Friday, when he did not manifest any signs of lameness. Whatever may be wrong with him, a wise policy has been adopted in throwing him up at once, for, although his Doncaster chance was considered to be hopeless, yet it may still be possible to get him ready to run for the Jockey Club Stakes of £10,000 on October 1, in which race he would meet Persimmon with 3 lb. the best of the weights. Even if St. Frusquin does not start again this year, it must be remembered that he is entered for all of next season's £10,000 stakes, and no doubt if he is well he will run for the Gold Cup at Ascot, a race which his owner is particularly anxious to win.

There has been a great deal of wailing and croaking over the destruction of the prospect of having at Doncaster "one of the most exciting races ever seen," and so forth. It is an undeniable fact that these contests, about which there is so much preliminary trumpeting, very often prove most disappointing. What an elaborate noise was raised for weeks together about the meeting of Robert the Devil and Bend Or at Doncaster, also about La Fleche and Orme, and how dolefully uninteresting was the issue of each encounter!

That St. Frusquin would have won the St. Leger is my firm opinion, but I have no sympathy for the infatuated simpletons who had hastened to back him. If ever there was a case in which waiting until the last was an obviously prudent policy, this was one. St. Frusquin has been in constant training on hard ground ever since he commenced his Two Thousand preparation in March, and he has taken part in five races, four of which he has won, and three of these races must have taken a great deal out of the horse.

The withdrawal of St. Frusquin is likely to increase the field for the Leger, as Persimmon's form has been by no means so good as that of Mr. de Rothschild's colt, nor is there any certainty that the Prince of Wales's colt can stay the course. Persimmon commenced his preparation last week, after more than a month of rest, and he looks well and goes well, but I believe it is a fact that he is touched in his wind, and this defect will not improve his chance over such a course as Doncaster. M. E. Blanc will now doubtless send over either Arreau or Trébons, and the Grand Prix winner is at least sure to stay the distance. The Duke of Westminster may start Helm, Regret, or Labrador. Galeazzo has been doing only cantering exercise, and he cannot be trained for such a race as the Leger on hard ground, so that he is not likely to start at Doncaster. Knight of the Thistle has been stopped in his work, and he has not the most remote chance. Santa Maura is being sent along, and so also is Roquebrune, but it is to be feared that neither filly will stand a severe course of training. If Santa Maura could be brought to the post at Doncaster fit and well she would certainly run into a place. Nouveau Riche will not disgrace himself if he goes on all right. It is simple nonsense and rubbish for some of the sporting papers to twaddle about the race being a certainty for Persimmon, and at the mercy of the Prince of Wales. This is the sort of ecstatic drivel with which we were deluged two years ago when Ladas was being so extravagantly eulogised, and a pretty sort of "certainty" Lord Rosebery's horse discovered himself to be.

The prospects of the Doncaster meeting are not particularly bright, for the Champagne Stakes appear to be only a matter of health for Velasquez, and Goletta will not run again before the Newmarket First October Meeting. As to the minor three-year-old events, Shaddock cannot lose the Scarborough Stakes, and the Duke of Westminster looks like also winning the Doncaster Stakes with either Regret or Labrador. The Park Hill Stakes, however, will be an interesting race if it brings out Santa Maura, Canterbury Pilgrim, Miss Fraser, and Helm.

Fair entries have been obtained for the Doncaster events which have just closed. There are fifty-eight two-year-olds in the Prince of Wales's Nursery of £1,000, which is run over a mile course. The entry includes several animals which are reported to have been reserved for races of this description, but class is tolerably represented. Brigg, Jaquemart, Chillingham, Chantilly, Pooley Bridge, Flying Colours, Specific (who was well tried in the spring), and Terpsichore II. having been engaged. The Portland Plate, which at one time was a Yorkshire Stewards' Cup, and a very heavy betting race, has fifty-five entries, including Wise Virgin, Easter Gift, Amphora, Raconteur, Palaver, Ugly, Lady Sophie, Chasseur, Meli Melo, Sir Michael, Little Bob, Grig, Utica, Amandier, The Tup, El Diablo, Cold Steel, and Americus. The Portland Plate would have been a real good thing for Raconteur if he had not been exposed at Goodwood, as he would have received a weight which would have made the race a certainty for him. There are only thirty-seven entries for the Great Yorkshire Handicap of £1,300. In 1874, when only £200 was added, there were sixty-two entries. A number of animals have been engaged in this race which are presumed to be in reserve for the Cesarewitch or the Cambridgeshire, and the Great Yorkshire will no doubt be grievously "cut up" before the hour of running arrives. The best animals in the entry are Portmarnock (who has been backed for the Cesarewitch with frantic determination since his defeat at Lewes), Safety Pin, Love Wisely (winner of the Ascot Cup), Briardale, Count Schomberg, The Corsican, Rock Dove, The Rush, Sir Visto, Ortolo, Spook, Telescope (who ran so well over the course last year when he finished second for the St. Leger), and The Docker. There are twenty-four entries for the Doncaster Cup of £600, including Love Wisely, Sir Visto, Ramapo (what really is this horse's proper course?), Lord Hervey, Laodamia, Nouveau Riche, Bard of Avon, The Rush, Rock Dove, and Safety Pin.

Mr. de Rothschild is really most unfortunate with his three-year-olds. Gulistan, who would certainly have won the great race at Baden-Baden next week, has been stopped in his work, and as he is suffering from weakness of the hocks he is not likely to run again this season. The £4,500 stake at Baden has only Lord Drummond and The Owl left in, and I do not suppose that either horse will be sent over to Germany to run for it.

Keelson's very disappointing career on the turf has presumably terminated so far as flat racing is concerned, for he has been leased by Lord Zetland to Mr. C. J. Cunningham. It will not surprise me if Keelson turns out a great success over hurdles, like many another rogue. Labrador's performance at Kempton Park was a most creditable one, for he gave a stone and an easy beating to Welbeck, who (as I stated last week) had been well tried at Newmarket, and he was heavily backed. Ardeshir was made a great favourite for the two-year-old race on the strength of his forward running at Sandown Park last month; but the colt had no chance with Flying Colours, who won in a common canter. The filly was well tried at Newmarket some time ago, but she had hitherto disappointed her friends.

At Redcar Helen Mary carried off the Wilton Plate for Lord Londonderry, as I had predicted would be the case, and it was a good performance, as she carried extra weight for having won the Kirkleatham Biennial on the previous day. Hellebore was made favourite for the Redcar Stakes, but he was beaten by both Silver Fox and Puff Ball. Many people insisted that Lord Durham's colt ought to have won, as Rickaby had waited a little too long. There was a splendid finish for the principal three-year-old stakes, but the class was decidedly poor, seeing that Musley Chief was the winner, and he is no flyer. Lord Zetland's Red Rag, half brother to Keelson, by Prism, made an unsuccessful début in this event, but he ran somewhat green, and will soon win a race. Red Rag, however, is evidently a long way from being a good colt, as Musley Chief gave him 7 lb. and a beating.

The entries for the Prix du Jockey Club (French Derby) and Prix de Diane (French Oaks) for 1898 are the largest ever obtained for those stakes, there being 174 in the former and 153 in the fillies' race. These stakes are confined to animals bred in France.

It is astonishing that sixty-two yearling fillies should have been entered for the Coronation Stakes at Ascot (1898) considering that the liability of each nomination is £50, while only £300 is added. As a matter of fact, the winner gets the sweepstakes only, for the added money is divided between the second and third. If twelve start the race would be worth £4,000. The success of the St. James's Palace Stakes, which has obtained forty-five entries, is not so remarkable, for that race is open to both colts and fillies, the pecuniary conditions being precisely the same. The fact is that owners now seem to prefer stakes in which there are penalties and allowances.

The Newmarket events which have recently closed have been wonderfully well patronised, considering their singularly unattractive pecuniary conditions. There are actually forty-nine entries for next year's July Stakes, although not a farthing is even nominally added, and the liability on each entry is £30. The Chesterfield Stakes has forty-eight entries, and here again the owners have only their own money to run for, while the liability on each entry is £20. Six owners have subscribed to the Boscawen Post Stakes of £100 each, to run in 1898. Mr. Brassey has two grandly bred foals in his colts by St. Simon out of Merry Miser, and by Donovan out of Pauline, by Hermit, the latter being a purchase out of the stud of Baron de Hirsch. One of Lord Ellesmere's is a colt by St. Simon out of Clarissa, and Mr. W. Johnstone has a colt by Orme out of Lady Primrose. One of the Duke of Portland's is a colt by St. Simon out of Ismay, and the other is a filly by Morion out of Semolina. There is a good entry of foals also, from the "class" point of view, for the Bennington Stakes (1899), including the Duke of Portland's own brother to Amiable, Mr. James's filly by Royal Hampton out of Charm, and "Mr. Jersey's" colt by Sheen out of Lady Rosebery.

To-morrow at Stockton the Durham County Produce Stakes of £1,250 should be won by either Red Rag or Nicholas, both animals having all the allowances, and Sir R. Jardine's colt has been kept for this race.

There will be racing next week at York and at Hurst Park, and there ought to be some interesting sport at both places, the best, of course, on the Knavesmire. The Ebor Handicap of £1,000 has proved a wretched failure, seven stables being represented by nine horses. Lord Derby may win with Dingle Bay. Times are lamentably changed with this handicap since the days when it was one of the heaviest betting events of the summer, but it has shared the fate of the Ascot Stakes, the Northumberland Plate, and the Goodwood Stakes. The Yorkshire Oaks (£300 added) has Santa Maura, Drip, Miss Fraser, and Helm, and the Duke of Westminster's filly will win if she runs. Santa Maura is not fit. The Duke of York Stakes is another three-year-old race with £300 added, but a very poor lot of animals are engaged in it, and Ceylton may be able to win for Mr. Houldsworth, in spite of his defeat at Redcar last week. I shall leave the Great Yorkshire Stakes to Nouveau Riche, who ought to be able to beat Labrador, Ortolo, and Red Rag. Regret cannot stay the course. The Prince of Wales Plate of £1,000 is the most valuable two-year-old race in the programme, and it should be won by Hellebore, unless Mr. Vyner has something smart among his dark lot. The Convivial Produce Stakes will fall to Canonbury, who has the advantage of a 5 lb. breeding allowance. There are 109 entries for the Gimcrack Stakes (£500 added), but it seems a most unfair arrangement to make the forfeits (which will amount probably to about £300) go to the fund. I shall plump for Galtee More, although he will have to give 12 lb. to maidens. Mr. Gubbins' colt, however, is a very smart animal indeed, and probably the second-best two-year-old of the season, so far as it has gone.

After all the trouble about the professionals, the great match between England and Australia has been played and won. It was certainly an exciting game, and any good fortune Grace had in winning the toss was quite compensated by the good luck Iredale and Darling had when they went in. They topped the English score for the first wicket, and then, as was the case during the whole of the game, the bowlers had matters their own way. Trumble, McKibbin, Peel, and Hearne did what they liked with the ball, and the Australians clearly showed they are no good on a bad wicket. In the difficulties in which the batsmen found themselves, no one played more consistent or useful cricket than Abel. He alone seemed to know where the ball was coming. The fielding on both sides was admirable, and the way in which the Englishmen set to work to save a possible boundary when the visitors' wickets were tumbling down was admirable. In fact, when Abel caught McKibbin, who played quite the right game, in the slips and then went sprinting off to the pavilion, it was a few moments before the majority of the crowd realised that the ball had not passed him. And then the mob crowded before the pavilion and cheered to their hearts' content.

If the game had been played by a county there is no doubt there would have been a whip round for the benefit of the pros. As the eleven was an English one, there was nobody to take a lead in the matter. The Surrey Executive have presented Peel and Hearne with £5 each in addition to their usual fee. As for the amateurs and expenses, several correspondents have written me on the subject. But a discussion appears to me profitless. It is useless to compare one form of sport with another. Each sport must rest its own definition of amateurism on the circumstances with which it finds itself environed. It would have been monstrous if Grace, a qualified medical man, had been unable to play cricket because his father had not left him large private means, unless, indeed, he had chosen to enrol himself as a professional player. There are many other fine cricketers who could not afford to go all over the country unless they received their expenses. But what all these critics of Grace or others seem to advocate is that there should be only two classes of players: the regular "pros," who make cricket their only business, and the wealthy amateurs who can stand all the expenses of the game out of their own pockets. The large middle-class is left out altogether. A few there may be in cricket who make money out of the game. The great majority do not. But those who do and those who do not equally help to delight thousands in the summer months. It is utterly absurd to try to make the cricket world an ideal one, and the criticism to which Grace and others have been subjected is mean and contemptible.

Turning now to county cricket, the bowling of Jessop and Townsend, who finds the wickets to his liking, coupled with another excellent innings by Sewell, gave Gloucester an easy win over Notts, who had a weak team. The latter, earlier in the week, had played a draw with Kent. Shrewsbury, Jones, and Mason all made heavy scores. Unfortunately, A. Hearne and Mason hurt themselves, and so the hop county had a poor team against Surrey, when the defeat at Catford Bridge was amply avenged, Abel scoring well. Lancashire can scarcely look on the week's play with pleasure. Storer, Davidson, and Chatterton all scored centuries against the northern bowling, and it was only some steady play by Paul, Ward, and Sugg which enabled the game against Derbyshire to be drawn. Then against Middlesex the visitors to Lord's found Ford and O'Brien in brilliant hitting vein, and it was very gratifying to see the old Cambridge captain in such excellent form. MacLaren played two good innings. Sugg played patiently, but he was responsible for Bardswell being run out just when a draw seemed probable. Against the Australians, the display given by Sussex was sadly disappointing. A brilliant effort by Ranjitsinhji and Fry was utterly wasted, as the rest of the team failed miserably. Killick had fair success in bowling, and Graham, the colonial bat, is apparently all right again.

The whole country side came down to Marlow to see the regatta. And a very pretty sight it was on a bright and sunny afternoon. The Marlow crew for the town four was beaten by Reading, and it is a great pity the local club does not give more attention to rowing. Lehmann stroked, and every other man in the boat did the same after half way. The Tadpoles rowed good races, but in the fours against Kingston they started off with crabs, and though they pulled up afterwards they were never really dangerous. In the tug of war the success of the football punt was very popular.

Tyers did not turn out for the five mile swimming championship at Southport. The event took place in the open sea, and there was only ten yards at the finish between Green, the winner, and Horgan. In rather rough water, W. Allison won the Otter S.C. race at Brighton. Mr. Pragnell and his friends spent an enjoyable holiday in Ireland, introducing water-polo and life-saving to the natives.

Water, water everywhere, is the good motto of Buxton.

Even the Garden Company of that health resort is so far imbued with the spirit of the place that the tennis courts are laid out by the side of a murmuring stream, over which a grand stand is built. So many parasols fell into the water that it is called the Bridge of Sighs. This lovely situation makes the court so moist that most of the leading lawn-tennis players prefer to go elsewhere. However, there was some interesting play. Miss Steedman played an excellent game at the net, but Mrs. Hillyard's all-round play was too good for her. Those two were partners, and beat Miss Morgan and Miss Wadsworth in the Ladies' final. Miss Morgan is a pretty player, and as an umpire she is excellent, and her clear announcement of the scores delighted everybody hugely. A promising player with good service and a back handstroke is Miss Wolfenden. The ladies were undoubtedly the better class. The men, as has been explained, find there is too much water there. Davy and Rooke met in the final of the County Championship, after showing some good play in the earlier rounds. Some of the spectators were wicked enough to ask when a ladies' veteran class would be started.

"The Man on the March" is the title of a very interesting volume of reminiscences which I have just been reading, and which I may appropriately mention in this column, seeing that it is mainly concerned with sporting subjects. It is the work of Mr. Martin Cobbett (otherwise "Mr. Sporting Notions"), who, writing from a long and varied experience as a sporting journalist, discourses in a pleasant and entertaining way on men and things, and flavours his reflections and recollections with a liberal infusion of good stories. The book is published by Bliss, Sands, & Co.

MAMMON.

From MOSES MOSS to BENJAMIN BOSS.

Sunday.

MY DEAR BEN,—Although the holiday season is in full swing, there has been a distinct improvement in the markets all round during the past week, due to the brightening outlook in various directions. A strong rally came about in the American market, a resumption of purchases bringing in "Bears," who began to get frightened at the extent of their commitments.

The Clouds Lifting.

It would, perhaps, be going too far to say that the American cloud is lifting, but the sharp recovery in American Railroad stocks, and the fiasco of Mr. Bryan's visit to New York, are encouraging features; and the horizon is undoubtedly clearing as regards the rest of the markets. The settlement has been got over much more comfortably than had been anticipated, the only failure being that of a small man, who had formerly devoted himself to the South African market, and had recently been dabbling in Yankee Rails. The big South African men, hailing from the well-known Angel-court Club, who had of late loved Yankees not wisely but too well, paid up their differences like men; and if they do not get their losses back in the treacherous American market, they have every prospect of recouping themselves in their own sphere. The Kaffir Circus, in fact, shows distinct signs of a revival, and the improvement is all the more promising, as it is not the result of any concerted rig on the part of the big financiers. The latter have hitherto refrained from supporting their market, on the grounds that it was not much good to attempt to galvanise the Kaffir Circus into life while so many were absent on their holidays. The buying, on the contrary, has been on the part of investors who are encouraged by the splendid July crushings of the Witwatersrand mines, and by the prospect of an early submission of the Matabele, as a consequence of the recent victories of the troops. A very significant feature has been the resumption of buying by the Cape, orders from that quarter having been absent for a long time past. The fractional improvement which has now been established is doubtless only the commencement of a much more important upward movement, and those will be wise who effect their purchases before the market becomes more active. The West Australian market has not been quite so animated, but a considerable proportion of advances is again shown; and, with improved crushings coming to hand in increasing numbers, there are now all conditions provided for a more general rise in quotations. Home Railway stocks have fully borne out the view which I have taken of late that they had been unduly depressed. Excellent traffics of the Southern passenger lines, and a favourable South-Eastern statement have helped the stocks of this section; and the Scotch stocks appear to be bracing up preparatory to a more marked advance. The Cretan difficulty cast at times a shadow over the Foreign market, but a more hopeful view is now also being entertained as regards its settlement, and the latest pronouncement of the Prime Minister confirms, at all events, the opinion that the European Powers will continue to act in concert. The Industrial market has been quiet, and the Cycle section more particularly has been extremely inactive. In this latter department there is some irritation concerning the extraordinary delay with regard to the special settlement of the Dunlop Pneumatic Tyre Company. As soon as this is arranged for, a distinct revival may be expected.

Rally in Home Rails.

I argued last week that Home Rails, with improved dividends and excellent traffics, ought not to follow the lead of Yankee Rails, which are overshadowed by circumstances which in no way affect our own railway companies. It is true that the splitting notion is for the time being exploded, for at the North-Western and Great Western meetings the subject was not even broached. The splitting apostles cannot, therefore, argue any longer that the majority of the proprietors are in favour of the subdivision, and the stocks will in future have to move on their own merits. These are quite good enough, in view of the dearth of high-class investments, to at least maintain present quotations. The North-Western has already an improvement of £66,873 to show for the first six weeks of the current half year, followed by a North-Eastern increase of £55,832, a Midland increase of £41,606, and a Great-Western increase of £37,370. Comparatively even more satisfactory is the position of the South-Eastern, and of the other passenger lines, as they are being greatly benefited by the expansion of the holiday traffic, due to the splendid climatic conditions. This is, moreover, a class of traffic which does not increase working expenses at the same rate. The South-Eastern statement for the period from July 1 to July 25, for instance, shows a gain of £2,850 in gross receipts, and a saving of £747 in expenses, resulting in a net increase of £3,597. Since July 25 this line, moreover, has had a further gross traffic increase of £8,000, and it may be assumed that by now the net increase for the half-year exceeds £10,000. This is an excellent showing, and should make Dover "A" worth a good deal more than the present price of 103¼. Brighton "A" have recovered to 185, although the Brighton traffic for the six weeks shows only an increase of £9,922. The Scotch section has not so far improved in proportion to the really excellent results which have been obtained during the past half-year; but as favourable dividends will shortly be announced I look for greater activity in both Caledonian Deferred (Coras) and North British Deferred. The Glasgow Central Section of the Caledonian is now in full work, and will no doubt eventually bring increased traffic to that line. It is, I hear, proving an unqualified success. Considering the present rate of improvement, I still think, however, that North British Deferred are likely to have a more important advance than "Coras." The Glasgow Herald, by the way, has corrected the North British dividend estimate for the past half-year, referred to by me last week, from 1¼ to 1¾ per cent.

Recovery in Yankee Rails.

As usual when affairs in the United States assume the very blackest aspect, a rift appears in the cloud. All manner of stories had been current as regards impending trouble at the fortnightly settlement, but the alarming rumours were not confirmed, only one insignificant failure being announced; and although some heavy losses had to be faced they fell upon wealthy operators who were able to pay up. In this they were helped by the distinct rally which preceded the carry-over, and has made further progress since. The highest prices have, however, not been maintained. Thus Louisville, after touching 43, are down again to 42, and Milwaukee, after touching 67, stand at 66⅜. Still this is well above the lowest. The recovery has been assisted by the fiasco of Mr. Bryan, the boy orator, at the Madison-square meeting. The New Yorkers did not receive him with that enthusiasm which he had expected, and so great has been the disappointment of the men who "run" him, that they are curtailing his engagements and sending him into temporary retirement. He certainly displayed an absolute ignorance of financial matters in committing himself in his speech in New York to the extraordinary assertion that "the free and unlimited coinage of silver by the United States alone suffice to raise the bullion value of silver to its coinage value, and make silver bullion worth 1·29 dols. per ounce in gold throughout the world." This utterance stamps him as either a knave or a fool, and in neither capacity would he be fitted to preside over the American nation. The words which Mr. Bryan uttered were, of course, put in his mouth by the free-silver agitators, who justify their proposition to open the mints of the United States to the unlimited coinage of silver by claiming that such action would create an unlimited demand for the white metal at the ratio of sixteen ounces of silver to one of gold, which is equivalent to 1·29 dols. an ounce for silver. No one, they argue, would sell silver bullion to anybody else for less than 1·29 dols. per ounce, with the United States standing ready to take and coin all offered at that figure, and hence that no silver could be bought for less than the par of gold. Now if everybody believed that this would be the effect of free coinage upon the price of silver, then everybody would be for free coinage. But at best it is a fallacy, and we have the predictions of men experienced in finance—in fact, the standard authorities upon monetary questions—that no such result would follow. What the free silver enthusiasts lose sight of is the kind of money that the United States would pay for the silver. No one proposes to enact that the United States Government shall pay for the silver brought to its mints in gold. It would pay for the same in silver dollars or silver certificates, or it would coin the silver brought in and return it to the owner of the bullion in the shape of dollars, less the charge for mintage. Now, what would these silver dollars in which the Government would pay for the silver be worth? If, as is predicted by sound financiers, the result of free coinage would be to drive gold to a premium, the silver dollars would be worth only the amount of gold they would buy. That is to say, if gold were at a premium of 200 it would take two silver dollars to buy a gold dollar; therefore the bullion owner, receiving in exchange his silver dollars, would be receiving for it in reality only 64½ cents. an ounce, gold value. Further object-lessons are, in the meantime, being administered to our American cousins in the shape of the non-success of the New York bond issue, and in the similar experience of the city of Brooklyn. Only once before in the history of the city of New York has its bond issue been a failure, and this was because the community had a silver fright, and would not touch a security not having an express stipulation that the principal and interest should be payable in gold, which the bonds then offered had not got. No such reason exists to-day for failure to float the issue as both principal and interest are payable in gold. When the greatest city in the United States, the second in the world as a money centre, cannot float its gold bonds investors must be thoroughly frightened. The silver spectre is, of course, at the bottom of it all, as it is the great menace of repudiation; and, as one of my American contemporaries puts it, the danger of establishing a new standard of values would place the United States in the same category as Mexico, Peru, Bolivia, Colombia, China, and Persia. The worst feature is the unfavourable influence which the unsettled state of the country must have upon its commerce and industry. Although Mr. Bryan's chances appear to have diminished the uncertainty will continue until November next, and thus the see-saw in stocks will probably go on for the present. I do not believe in "Bull" combinations under these circumstances, and I repeat that the only way in which profits could be skinned at present would be by buying on sharp declines and selling on recoveries; while bonâ-fide holders of stocks should keep them now, as it is hardly credible that the disreputable silver party will prove victorious in the Presidential contest. Canadian Pacifics have been affected very little by the dividend announcement. Neither have Grand Trunks moved to any extent on the publication of the half-yearly statement. A deficiency of £82,000, as compared with a deficiency of £94,000 for the corresponding half year of 1895, is but a very negative improvement, and much better results will have to be shown before the Company can be said to have turned the corner.

Foreigners and South Americans.

The Continental financiers are all en vacance, and it is therefore impossible to expect any animation in interbourse securities. The Eastern question is, moreover, always with us, and at times a good deal of nervousness was felt with reference to the Cretan difficulty; while Spanish finances also gave rise to unfavourable comment. According to the latest utterances of the various statesmen, however, the European concert as regards Crete has not been disturbed, and it is hoped that this question will be patched up again. The Spanish Budget has been adopted by the Cortes, and I suppose that another process of raising the wind will be resorted to. Thus Spanish bonds are firmer, Turks are steady, and Ottoman Bank shares have recovered. The latter institution is, of course, also very deeply interested in South African mines, and any improvement in these would help it and its clients. A rally in Greeks seems to foreshadow some new financial move. Argentine Government stocks have not responded any further to the decline in the gold premium in Buenos Ayres, which now stands at 174½. In fact, quotations of the Government stocks were five or six points higher when the gold premium was quoted 200. The present inactivity is doubtless due to the absence of so many operators. The Old Uruguay Loan has recovered to 50⅛ after touching 49⅛, while the New Loan has remained remarkably steady, and is slightly firmer at 70. I have already stated that this is, in my opinion, an excellent purchase for an investment, although of a somewhat speculative kind. Brazilians and Mexican Sixes have been firm, and Venezuela, which are quoted 39 x.d., look like going better, the latest statement with regard to the Venezuelan question being satisfactory. There has been hardly any business in the various rubbish stocks of the South and Central American Republics. From an American source I gather that a London syndicate that recently bought the Mexican City Street Railway has paid 833,387 dols. cash, and will pay 6,000,000 dols. in Six per Cent. bonds. The manager of the Company will be Thos. H. McLean, formerly manager of the Houston-street and Pavonia and 23rd Street Railroad of New York. The Mexican line consists of about 160 miles of track.

Revival in the Kaffir Circus.

It is not surprising, in view of the various favourable developments bearing upon the Kaffir Circus, that a distinct improvement has at last manifested itself. It is all the better for being spontaneous, and not engineered by the usual wirepullers. The fact, too, that some of the buying orders came from the Cape is distinctly encouraging. Very sanguine views are being entertained as to the increases which may be expected in the output of the Witwatersrand mines in the near future, and in some quarters it is anticipated that the returns will rise from five to ten thousand ounces every month. As several new mines made returns in July, and others will shortly fall into line, this would not be by any means improbable; and it will readily be seen that such sustained increases must still further strengthen the confidence in South African land and gold shares, which is now slowly returning. Labour conditions in the Transvaal are greatly improved, and the rumours that President Kruger proposes to revive the question of the Suzerainty were evidently untrue, and set about by interested parties. So far the purchases which have actually been effected have only been on a moderate scale, for the very good reason that there is but little stock to be got at the present level. The big financiers have for some time been mopping-up stock, and the weak elements have thus been eliminated, with the result that at the last settlement the account showed a considerable reduction, and rates were easier. I have for some time advised my readers to avail themselves of the present moderate value of sound Transvaal gold and land shares, to either average or to increase their holding generally. Barring accidents, it is pretty certain that as soon as the holiday season draws to an end prices will move up sharply. I am told, for instance, that one of the South African millionaires, when asked why he did not give his shares a twist-up, expressed himself to the effect that it was of no use spending his powder while every one was away, but that he would make things hum as soon as the month of August was turned. This is apparently a view which is shared by a good many other of the wealthy operators in the Kaffir Circus, and there is no doubt that when once purchases are resumed on a large scale prices will rise by leaps and bounds. Already some substantial advances are marked. Knights, for instance, to which I have several times drawn attention, have gone ahead to $7\frac{1}{16}$, as against $6\frac{1}{8}$ a week ago. There have also been advances of from $\frac{1}{4}$ to $\frac{3}{4}$ in Crown Reef, Geldenhuis, Wolhuter, Nigel, Ferreira, Henry Nourse, Jubilee, &c. In fact, all the good Witwatersrand mines are gradually moving up. In the Barnato group a good deal of attention has been paid to Johannesburg Consolidated Investment, which have improved to $3\frac{15}{16}$, and there is no doubt that in view of the coming amalgamation of the Barnato Bank and the Estate portion of the Johannesburg Waterworks Company, these shares will be very active in the near future. I have received a number of inquiries with reference to the dividend on Johannesburg Consolidated Investment shares, which has not so far been announced. As Mr. B. I. Barnato is now in our midst, I should say that some statement as to whether a distribution will be made or not would shortly be published. Barnato Banks have also hardened to $2\frac{5}{16}$, and Barnato Consols are firmer at $2\frac{7}{8}$. There is a talk of a coming important consolidation of properties in the Heidelberg district under the auspices of Messrs. Barnato. Amongst the gold mines of the Barnato group, New Primrose have recovered to $5\frac{3}{4}$, Glencairn to $3\frac{5}{8}$, New Rietfontein to $3\frac{3}{4}$; and there has also been an improvement in Buffelsdoorn, now quoted $2\frac{5}{8}$. These advances fully confirm my previous anticipations, and I look for a very considerable further rise. The Robinson group is also commencing to brace up, and when Mr. J. B. Robinson returns from his yachting cruise we may expect some lively dealings. In the meantime Randfonteins, which were obtainable at $2\frac{5}{8}$ a week ago, are now quoted 3; Langlaagte Estate have improved to $5\frac{5}{8}$; Langlaagte Block B to $1\frac{3}{4}$; Langlaagte Star to $1\frac{1}{2}$. In all these shares I look for a marked advance. Of course, the gambling counters are also on the move. Thus, Consolidated Goldfields are up at $12\frac{1}{2}$, Rand Mines, Limited, at $30\frac{3}{8}$, and East Rands at $7\frac{3}{8}$; and we may expect that the wirepullers will rig them again whenever the surroundings are favourable. Chartered shares, too, have advanced to 3, some support being given by insiders, in the expectation of an early collapse of the native insurrection in Rhodesia. This I also anticipated; and, although I do not advise my readers to touch these gambling counters, I should not be one whit surprised to see an important advance in them. A great many options have been acquired for the end of August and for the end of September, and it only requires some encouraging development to bring in the option-dealers as buyers. It is satisfactory to find that the Chartered Company have not accepted the charitable contribution of £5,000 of the Colenbranders Company, which would really have been tantamount to Messrs. Cecil Rhodes and Alfred Beit passing round the hat, as common report credits them with the laudable intention of paying the expenses of the war and the indemnity themselves. Until the Transvaal Government has actually fixed its demand for the indemnity at a certain sum, however, it is not at all likely that these two flotation-mongers will officially express a desire to pay the indemnity, for fear that the Boers would squeeze them all the more. Amongst other Transvaal mining shares, to which it would be advisable to give attention at the present juncture, I again mention Woodstock (Transvaal) now quoted $1\frac{1}{2}$; Waterfall Estates now standing at $\frac{5}{8}$ to $\frac{3}{4}$; Niekerk at $1\frac{1}{8}$; and Transvaal Exploring at $\frac{7}{8}$ to 1. It is understood that the Transvaal Exploring Company has successfully flotated the Cataract Barberton Company (the shares in which stand at $\frac{3}{8}$ premium), and that it has realised a considerable profit on this promotion. This Company owns other very valuable properties in the Transvaal, and with the general improvement the shares are likely to go much higher. It will be remembered that last year they rose considerably above 2. The Modderfontein Company is doing better now, and the shares have advanced to 7. I quite look forward also to a rise in Modderfontein "B," which shares are quoted $1\frac{7}{8}$. An important piece of news has been received with reference to the New Rand Gold Mine, a Company of which I have always held a favourable opinion. In the third deep borehole the main reef has been struck at a depth of 2,000 ft. According to the African Review, the strike shows that the average angle of dip of the reef from the outcrop down to the point where the end of the New Rand ground is, is about 30 to 40 ft.; and from the information thus gained it seems that the main reef series underlies the whole of the Company's property at a depth varying from 2,000 to 2,750 ft. I should think that in view of this fresh development, Messrs. Barnato and S. Neumann & Co., who own adjoining claims, could with advantage amalgamate the Mine with their surrounding properties. The City and Suburban has now 160 stamps running, and good results are looked forward to. The Vogelstruis Consolidated Deep Company propose to sink to a considerable depth; but they cannot be expected to strike the south reef before another nine months, so that crushing is as yet in the dim and distant future. The Marievale Nigel Estate Company's report is distinctly disappointing, as the assays of the reef so far obtained are very poor. A fresh decline in African Estate shares appears to be due to an organised opposition, which proved very obstinate at the last meeting in Johannesburg. Mozambique shares have recovered to $1\frac{11}{16}$, and there is little doubt that these will in the near future attain a much higher value. Amongst other shares which are likely to improve are Heidelburg Estates, Henderson's Estates, and Oceana. The latter Company is now sending out circulars, calling an extraordinary meeting for the 24th inst. for the purpose of authorising the liquidation of the Company preparatory to its absorbing the Austral-African and Africana Companies by the formation of the Oceana Consolidated Company. these formalities have been got through, we may look for an active market in the new Oceana Consols, and insiders are already prophesying a rise to 3 or 4. The present price of Oceana of $1\frac{1}{2}$ is, therefore, very tempting. I have received a number of communications from shareholders in the Abercorn Reefs, Limited, and the Umtoli Gold Reefs Company, Limited, who wish to join a combination for resisting the last call, and obtaining an investigation of the affairs of these Companies. The period fixed for the payment of the call expires on the 18th inst.; but I look to the Directors (Mr. Arthur L. Fyfe, Mr. J. W. Blackstone, Mr. J. M. Coward, and Mr. J. Dennis) to grant a further delay pending such examination. I hope that one or other of the largest shareholders will take the matter in hand, and shall be pleased to place the shareholders who have applied to me in communication with them for the purpose of appointing a committee for thoroughly entering into this matter. Diamond shares are improving with gold shares, De Beers having hardened to $29\frac{5}{8}$, New Jagersfontein to $10\frac{5}{8}$. There has also been a considerable demand for Leicester Consolidated up to 40s. The Managing Director, who is on a visit to the mine, writes that it looks very well. They have been washing top stuff of late, but the anchorage is about to be lowered 10 ft., and there will be about three months' work down to the 100 ft. level, from which better results are expected. The machinery to be erected will be capable of working 4,000 loads per ten working hours; and as the working hours are more than ten per day, it may be anticipated that about 30,000 loads can be treated with that gear weekly. A cablegram has also been received stating that 875 loads have produced 72 carats, and another cable reports that they are shipping by next mail 730 carats, reasonably valued at £1,500.

Golden West Australia.

The West Australian banqueting craze appears to have broken out again, for no fewer than three West Australian dinners took place last week. I suppose it is a sign of prosperity, for people do not congregate at such festive occasions unless there is occasion for rejoicing. The most important of these functions was the banquet at the Savoy Hotel, offered to Mr. Philip Mennell, the editor of the British Australasian, on his return from Western Australia, on which occasion the completion of the railway from Coolgardie to Kalgoorlie was also celebrated. Mr. Mennell has rendered most important service to the gold mining industry of Western Australia, and his latest visit to the colony was more especially remarkable by the splendid service of special cables which he inaugurated, and which embraces all the important events on the goldfields. Another dinner was that given at the Hotel Cecil by Messrs. Stange & Co. to members of the strong financial group with whom they are connected, and to their clients and friends. Messrs. Stange have a large clientèle on the Continent, and have practically introduced West Australian mines in German centres. What is more, the mines in which they have interested their friends belong to the strong Venture Syndicate group, and have so far proved uniformly successful. The third function was a farewell dinner at the Savoy Hotel, given to Mr. Charles D. West, who is proceeding to Western Australia to represent Hannan's Development and Finance Company. Sanguine forecasts were indulged in on all these occasions, and it is to be hoped that the speeches will be followed by deeds. That the gold-mining industry is making steady progress is shown by the crushing returns which continue to pour in both from older producers and from new mines. The West Australian Review has compiled a very complete list of such returns, amongst which a little table giving the output of the thirteen largest producers whose shares are held in Europe is so interesting that I herewith reproduce it:—

As my contemporary explains, the Bayley's Reward property has been ousted from its position as first in the list, the Great Boulder taking its place. The Lake View, which was sixth in the list ten months ago, is now third, and from present appearances it seems that it is only a matter of time before it comes in front of the Bayley's Reward. Another mine which is going ahead is the Ivanhoe, and it is worthy of note that the Great Boulder, Lake View, and Ivanhoe properties adjoin each other, forming a very prosperous trio. The West Australian Review also points out that "the returns of the Bayley's Reward, Londonderry, Star of the East, and Emerald Reward mines have remained almost stationary since October last—i.e., their outputs have advanced only from 79,241 oz. to 81,909 oz. in ten months, but that the rate of progress made by the remaining nine mines is very marked, their returns amounting to 67,168 oz. at the end of October last, 94,529 oz. at the end of February, 123,679 oz. at the middle of June, and 148,142 oz. at the present time." The Great Boulder continues to do remarkably well, and the shares are quoted at $7\frac{1}{2}$. There is little doubt but that most of the mines in the immediate vicinity are also very rich, as shown by the cable report just received that the Ivanhoe lode has been struck in the Lake View and Boulder Junction, while I shall expect favourable results from the Great Boulder No. 1 and Great Boulder Junction Reefs to throw fresh lustre upon the name of Great Boulder. The news from the Lake View Consols is most satisfactory. Very rich stone has been struck in the crosscut at a depth of 200 ft., and one of the specimens obtained, weighing 1 cwt., is said to be the richest yet unearthed in the Hannan's district. After reacting to $8\frac{1}{2}$, the shares have recovered to $8\frac{3}{4}$, but if only half the cabled reports are borne out by results, Lake View Consols will reach double their present price. It should be remembered that the above results have been obtained with ten stamps only. What will the output be when 100 stamps are at work and the rich deposits lately discovered are opened up? The stocks of the Whitaker Wright group have not been going so strong this week, holiday influences prevailing, but they will doubtless be amongst the first to brace up when active business is resumed. Mainland Consols are easier at 3, yet the mine is doing all it was expected to do, 295 tons during the month producing 1,422 oz. of gold, while the tailings give 11 dwt. per ton, so that the total average value of the ore crushed was 5 oz. 7 dwts. per ton. London and Globe Finance are quoted $4\frac{7}{16}$, West Australian Exploring and Finance $4\frac{1}{2}$, and both are expected to improve, while I also retain my favourable view of the Golden Group and Golden Treasure Mines, the shares in which are an excellent purchase at present price. The group of the West Australian Joint Stock Trust has been steady, although these shares have not improved any further, being quoted $3\frac{5}{8}$ premium; but the Founders' shares have advanced to $62\frac{1}{2}$. I repeat that when the big Northern Territory scheme comes out, a fresh improvement is probable. Associated Gold Mines have been firm at $3\frac{5}{8}$,

China and Glass. — Messrs. Goode, Artists and Designers, solicit an inspection of their collection in their recently-extended South Audley-street premises, now by far the largest and most important in Europe. Messrs. Goode guarantee the excellence of all their productions, and invite a comparison of their prices with those of any co-operative stores.

the favourable statements made at the meeting of shareholders having created an excellent impression. Associated Southern stand at $1\frac{5}{8}$, and Nil Desperandum at $1\frac{1}{4}$. The Stoneham group has again been quiet, the West Australian Goldfields taking quite a back seat at $9\frac{1}{4}$, and Hampton Plains have temporarily eased off to $4\frac{1}{4}$, the issue of the report having been delayed. The meeting is expected to be held in September, when I have reason to believe a very satisfactory position will be shown. From the Lady Shenton a cablegram has been received, announcing a crushing of 250 tons for 695 oz.; an average sample of tailings is stated to have assayed 32 dwt. per ton, and generally the outlook is described as very satisfactory. The Lady Loch is also to the front with a very satisfactory crushing, a clean-up from 594 oz. giving 1,747 oz. As this is nearly 3 oz. to the ton, the shareholders may be congratulated upon the result. From the Gladiator Mine Professor Nicholas cables that the 10-head battery is being furnished by Messrs. Thompson & Co., of the Castle Main Foundry. The Directors of the Victoria Reef Gold Mine, Limited, have issued a circular to the shareholders, in which are recapitulated the various cables and reports published since the statutory meeting. The latest cable is to the effect that the lode is opening up extremely well, that some of the machinery has been received, and that everything is going right. The lode is stated to be 10 ft. wide, with well-defined walls, at a depth of 115 ft. The New Coolgardie Gold Exploration Company have received a cablegram from the local Director, according to which Mr. Young, who is connected with one of the prospecting parties despatched by the Company, has found a country with good reefs and formation. A good deal of comment has been caused by the manner in which the remaining Directors of the Empress of Coolgardie Company reappointed themselves at Wednesday's meeting of shareholders, notwithstanding considerable opposition on the part of the latter; while Sir Alexander Armstrong was simply ousted from his post as chairman by his colleagues. The meeting has been adjourned for a week, and I hope that by this time wiser counsels will prevail amongst the Directors, who are at present riding the high horse in so injudicious a manner. At the meeting of the Cassidy Hill Gold Mining Company considerable diversity of opinion prevailed, but a thorough investigation of the whole position should suit all parties best. I am therefore glad to see that the meeting has been adjourned for three months, pending which period the Directors have promised to furnish further information. The manner in which the Paringa property has been dealt with certainly requires elucidation. At the extraordinary general meeting of shareholders in the Whitehead and Sultan Gold Mines, held on Monday last, full explanations were given of the recent history of the properties owned by this concern, which, according to the inspecting engineer's report, have now been found to be practically valueless. The reef of the Mount Whitehead lease is described as fairly regular, but of too low a grade; while the ore body encountered in the Sultan mine has pinched out. Whether any fresh discoveries could be made in the course of further development remains to be seen; but upon the whole it seems to be useless to carry out further work upon the property, when so many rich mines can be acquired at comparatively moderate prices. This is apparently the view also adopted by the Chairman, who stated that they would have to look out for another property. The unfortunate occurrence points the lesson, however, which I have so often been preaching, that undeveloped properties should not be floated upon the market. It, moreover, does not reflect any credit upon the consulting engineer, Mr. William Gray, who had been in charge of the property for some time, or upon the experts upon whose published testimony the shareholders subscribed the capital. The redeeming point is that the vendors have returned 45,000 fully-paid shares, and that a large amount of working capital is still intact. Another duffer mine is evidently the Great Fingall Reefs. I stated some time ago that the reefs had pinched out; but I trust, as some very influential men and groups were connected with the promotion, that the shareholders will be treated in a fair manner; and I hope that a mine containing auriferous reefs will be substituted for this most disappointing property. The extraordinary part about the Great Fingall Reefs is that, according to the December circular of the Directors, Bergrath Schmeisser had after careful examination reported favourably upon the mine. If this is correct, it fully confirms my view that the "only Schmeisser" is far from infallible. I hear that the Mona Gold Mine, Limited, a sub-Company of the Gold Lands Corporation, has been well received by the shareholders in the latter undertaking, who have practically absorbed the entire issue, a portion being taken up by the Directors and their friends. My readers will remember that the Gold Lands Corporation is also the parent Company of the Hannan's Kalgoorlie Proprietary, from which the news has been received that the lode formation on Lease No. 1,190 is 99 ft. wide, and the stone is better than that hitherto obtained. Of course a lode 99 ft. wide cannot be rich throughout, but the mine looks promising. It is thus not surprising that Gold Lands have improved to $\frac{1}{2}$ premium. The Burbank's Birthday Gift Mine has crushed during the past fortnight 140 tons for 500 oz., which is again a very satisfactory yield. From the Burbank's North Mine a cable is to hand stating that the average width of the lode is 3 ft., showing visible gold. According to a cablegram from the Consuello, the Madrid lease shows an 8 ft. ore body in the face of the south drive. From the Miner's Dream a cablegram is to hand stating that the erection of the works will be completed very shortly, and that the mine could not be looking better. A circular has been issued by the Chairman of the Armadale Gold Mine, giving a report from Mr. Frank Nicolas (the Company's consulting engineer), according to which he proposes to work a cyanide plant, which has in fact been purchased in Adelaide, as the ore, although rich, is pyritic. As forty stamps will shortly be running, a plant of considerable extent will be required. Shareholders of the West Australian Gold Concessions, Limited, will be glad to learn that their ordinary general meeting has been fixed for the 27th inst., when the long-expected report and accounts will be submitted, and a dividend declared.

Indian, New Zealand, and Other Mines.

Quite a strong tone has again been displayed by the Indian gold mining section, and there has been more especially an advance in Coromandel and Mysore Reefs. On the other hand, Nundydroog and Ooregum are slightly lower. Mysore Gold remain firm at $8\frac{1}{8}$, and Mysore Goldfields at $1\frac{1}{4}$. When the August crushings are announced, a further upward movement is looked for. Amongst Queensland mines, Wentworth Proprietary are quoted about 1. Aladdin's Lamp shares, which I have frequently recommended, touched 3 last week, a rise from $1\frac{7}{8}$ since I last recommended them, and declined to $2\frac{5}{8}$ on profit-taking. The advance has been caused by the last report mentioning, among other favourable features, that on rising from the 600 ft. level a strong vein has been met with, assaying over 33 oz. and still improving in quality. This phenomenally rich discovery should add materially to the already large dividends. Another 10 per cent. is expected to be declared shortly, making 30 per cent. for the current year up to date. Mount Lyells are firmer, and the sustained demand for these shares should also benefit Mount Reids, now quoted $1\frac{3}{8}$, this being a similar mine. Broken Hill and Mount Morgan are firmer. In Charters Towers shares, a slight improvement is shown in Day Dawn Blocks, but New Queen are lower. A sharp fall in New Chum (Bendigo) was also a feature. The satisfactory news contained in the circular issued by the London agents of the Croydon Consols Mine has had the effect of creating a considerable demand for these shares, which have improved to 5s. 6d. x.d.. Even this is an extremely moderate price for a dividend-paying mine, the last crushing from which yielded 1,695 oz. of gold from 265 tons (or upwards of 6 oz. to the ton), being a fortnight's clean-up I repeat that if this were a West Australian or South African mine the shares would stand at double the present price. New Zealand Mines have moved irregularly, and while Waitekauri and Consolidated Goldfields are lower, there has been a recovery in Kapanga and Kathleen, and Taitapu Estates have risen ½. In the general Foreign Section, Montana and Golden Feather are lower, while Frontino and Bolivia have recovered. There is, however, a great absence of business in this department, which is neglected in favour of the South African and West Australian departments.

New Enterprises and Issues.

The prospectuses of the following new Companies and issues have been placed before the public during the past week :—

Mona Gold Mine, Limited.—This Company is formed to acquire and work a gold mining lease, situate at Broad Arrow, Western Australia. The capital is £75,000 in £1 shares.

This mine is situated on the belt of the Broad Arrow. It is about twelve acres in extent, and several lodes traverse the property. It was originally brought under the notice of the Gold Lands Corporation by their special representative, Mr. J. J. O'Brien, C. E., whose good opinion upon the mine has been confirmed by other experts, and a large amount of development has already been done.

Seabrooke & Sons, Limited.—This is an issue of £50,000 Four per Cent. First Mortgage Debenture stock at £102 per £100 stock secured on the freehold and other properties of the Company.

This Company was formed in 1891 to take over the Thurrock Brewery, Grays, with a capital of £90,000, divided into 3,000 Preference shares and 6,000 Ordinary shares of £10 each. The valuation of the freehold and leasehold properties is stated to be a trifle over that sum, and that of the loose plant, stock in trade, book debts, &c., at about £33,000. This, to my mind, does not offer a good security for a Debenture stock of this amount, as if this issue is placed the total capital of the Company will amount to £140,000, a very large amount for so small a concern.

Jeffs, Williams, & Curtis, Limited.—This Company is formed with a capital of £200,000 for the purpose of amalgamating several fish, poultry, and game businesses in London and elsewhere.

My readers had better carefully study this prospectus before going into this concern. Amalgamations have been rife lately, but this one will not, in my opinion, be of advantage to any one but those in the "swim." The price to be paid for the businesses is, to my mind, enormous, while the valuer's report is a most cautious one. The goodwill, for instance, is valued by one firm at £130,796 upon the report of another firm as to the profits. This is a fishing venture, and my readers will do well to keep out of the net.

The Prize Gold Mines, Limited.—This Company has been formed to acquire and work a group of mines situate at Granite Butte, Deerlodge County, Montana, U.S.A. The capital is fixed at £150,000, in shares of £1 each.

The British public have paid for their experience in American Mines, but as there is now every opportunity of investing in dividend-paying African and West Australian Mines, which are proving highly remunerative, there is no longer any temptation to put the money in more or less doubtful Yankee ventures.

My Letter Box.

The following are replies to inquiries from various correspondents :—

Government, &c., Bonds.

Investor, Edinboro'.—I am afraid that the best combination would not at present be able to induce the Honduras Government to do justice to the bondholders. It is a thoroughly dishonest Republic. The time will, however, no doubt come again when something can be achieved by united action. Carlos.—The new Uruguay Five per Cent. Loan now stands at 70, and is an excellent purchase. Grey Cat.—What you require is precisely so very difficult to find ; but I see no reason why you should not invest in Mauritius or Trinidad stocks.

Banks, Trusts, and Financial.

H. J. T.—You must tell me what kind of securities you wish to invest in, what yield you expect, and what amount of risk you are prepared to run. B. M. L.—You are dipping too far into antiquity ; I have no record of the matter. Seiancia.—If the transaction can be traced, and the broker is a member of the Stock Exchange, it would doubtless be put through on the special settlement ; but there are evidently cases in which complications would arise. Bayley.—I am sorry to hear that you have reason to be dissatisfied with the purchase of shares in the Brazilian Finance Association, and that you have never been able to receive certificates for the same. The only course you can take is to at once proceed energetically through your solicitor, which, in fact, you ought to have done long ago. A. C., Mullingar.—I cannot answer this question exactly in the terms in which you put it. The Company is second-class, but I should think it would last for the time stated. Still, in life assurance you require thorough security. Rollo.—As requested, I forward in your envelope the name of a smart firm of City solicitors. J. W. B., Halifax.—You will have seen that I specially dealt with the matter of F. Hemming Custance in last week's issue under "Various Investments."

Home Rails.

Erne.—I should not advise you to sell any of your Home Railway stocks Nos. 1 to 5, but to hold them for a further improvement.

American and Foreign Rails.

Pogmoor.—No option but to hold both of your American Railroad stocks Nos. 1 and 2 for a recovery. Oxford.—Mexican Central Four per Cent. Gold bonds should not be affected by the position in America, and ought certainly to be held as a good investment. Reform.—You had better hold your Gold bonds ; there is no cause for alarm.

Mining Shares.

S. H. S.—According to recent cablegrams, the reef has now been struck in the New Rand Mine, which is most important ; and you should certainly hold the shares. S. W.—A fair mining risk. Alvie.—For the investment of your £5,000 in W.A. Finance Companies, I should think that the following would be preferable :—W.A. Exploring and Finance, London and Globe Finance, West Australian Goldfields, Hampton Plains, W.A. Joint Stock Trust, New Explorers' Syndicate Ordinary shares, and Explorers' Finance Founders' shares. C. A. S.—No reason to sell these West Australian shares now. A. McC.—1. Hold these South African shares. 2. There is every prospect of a further improvement in Sheba ; hold. C. W.—Although several of your West Australian mining shares are not at all well selected, they had better be held for an improvement. I do not like Hannan's Sir John Forrest (3). On the other hand, Paddington Consols and Kalgoorlie Proprietary are your best shares. Ignoramus, Maidenhead.—I am delighted to hear that you made £800 on my advice in Lake View ; by holding further you would have made yet more. Taggia.—Randfontein have recovered now to 2¾, and you will remember that you must have received ¼ in bonus shares. You should certainly buy more to average. Kathleen is a New Zealand gold mine, but no catch. North Stair.—Although you have a large profit on your London and Globe Finance shares, you should hold these for a further rise. Certainly hold W. A. Share Corporation. Flora J.—I am sorry I cannot, as a matter of principle, recommend you a stockbroker. You ought to be able to obtain the address of a reliable stockbroker, a member of the Stock Exchange, through your bankers. Amongst your shares Nos. 1 to 7, I like Nos. 2, 3 and 5 best. The others were not bought on my recommendation, and are but indifferent ; it may, however, be advisable to hold now. Investor, Halifax.—I am sure you cannot have bought Cassidy Hills on my recommendation. It is, however, turning out a fair mining property, although badly mismanaged. M. M., Bolton.—You cannot be a regular reader of Truth to ask my advice as to a purchase of British Chartered of South Africa. I say No ! Loma Loma.—Amongst your shares Nos. 1 to 21, I like Nos. 1, 3, 4, 6, 10, 11, and 18 best ; all these should certainly be held for a rise. It will also be advisable to keep the others, as a further improvement is probable. I do not like No. 14 at all. Brickland.—You should certainly hold Randfontein (A), Golden Cement Claims (D) ; and there is no reason to sell the other West Australians, which should go better. Sordello.—All your shares, Nos. 1 to 6, are well selected, and should be held for a rise. I have a very favourable opinion of Hampton Plains. S. H. F., Cardiff.—In the case of shares in which there was known to be a large "Bear" account you must expect to be held to the letter of the law, and, as far as I can see, the purchaser had a perfect right in having the shares bought in. Golden Group.—1. No, the Central Wealth of Nations does not appear to be properly managed ; if it were, the mine would be in a better position. 2. Doubtful. 3. I cannot tell. 4. Paddington Consols are likely to go much higher. 5. It seems to be a fair mining risk. 6. Yes. 7. No. F. H., East Grinstead.—A very fair mining risk ; but it would be preferable to put the money into half a dozen of the mining shares mentioned in my letter under "Golden West Australia." Otto K.—I do not think much of United Bulfontein, and advise you to avail yourself of an opportunity to get out. Victor.—No; I do not like the Friendship Mine, and have already said so. W. A., Fal.—I have returned the report. I suppose that the only way is to agree to the proposal, and sell after. Springfield.—Prospects of South African mines are much improved, and you should certainly hold your shares Nos. 1 to 3. No reason to sell No. 4 either. Potatoe.—You are quite right to average Langlaagte Star (1). Langlaagte Block B, Buffelsdoorn, and Central Boulders are also promising. H. N., Clifton.—Nos. 1 and 2 are fair mining risks, and should be held. Devonian.—1. Hold for a further improvement, and then clear your handsome profit. 2. The other West Australian shares should be held. West Cliff.—Consolidated Goldfields of New Zealand are high enough. Anchises.—No reason to sell your Mining shares Nos. 1 to 4. Ernest.—The Gladiator Mine is very promising, and a rise in the shares is expected. Lord.—Great Fingall Reefs have declined owing to the fact that the reefs have pinched out, and the question is now whether they will find them again. H. L. C.—1. Hold the shares. 2. I do not care for Nigel Extension; sell on a recovery. C. C.—You should hold your Mining shares for a rise. Honest Dick.—Have nothing to do with this outside concern; deal only through a member of the Stock Exchange. Your selection Nos. 1 to 11 is distinctly promising, and might be recommended to other investors in the South African market; I therefore repeat it. It is as follows:—Johannesburg Consolidated Investment, Barnato Banks, Barnato Consols, New Primrose, Langlaagte Estate, Langlaagte Star, Glencairn, Buffelsdoorn, Lydenburg Estates, Lydenburg Goldfields, and Modderfontein B. H. K.—I do not care for Pestarena; but the other shares should be held. Marian.—1. You had better average your West Boulder shares; the mine is promising. 2. I do not like Aurora United. Enquirens.—It is quite correct that the rights in the Randfontein have not yet been settled. They will be settled in about a month's time, when you should receive them through your broker. Vital Spark.—These W.A. shares should improve again; hold, but you ought in such cases to be able to take the shares up if necessary, and not go beyond your depth. Essex.—I do not like the Pelaez Silver Mines, and am surprised that you have taken shares in it. You should try to get out of it, if you can. The documents are returned. Esperance.—You should hold Golden River Quesnelle. They are likely to improve when matters become more active; but there is very little market in them at present. Gateshead.—Hold all your shares Nos. 1 to 5 for the present. C. S.—Hannan's Napier are promising, and should be held for an improvement. Princess Royal.—The market just now is dull all round. If you wait you will get a better price. Cymro.—1. How can I answer this question? 2. Yes; I still think favourably of Randfontein Estates. Ben. A.—1. I cannot recommend you a stockbroker; but you ought to be able to procure the name of a member of the Stock Exchange through your bankers. 2. Yes; Barnato Consols are a good purchase. 3. You can do better in the shares mentioned in my letter. 4. Hannan's Golden Treasure and Golden Group are certainly preferable. Hope Deferred.—The London and Globe Finance Company (A) is most promising, and you should hold for a further important advance. B. A fair mining risk, but no catch. Ignoramus, Chester-square.—I do not like Doric Gold Mines, and have already said so. Neither have I a favourable opinion of the Western Witwatersrand Exploration Company. What is the good of your buying shares first, and asking my advice afterwards? E. C., Colchester,—You should hold the West Australian shares, they are likely to improve again. Samaritan.—1. The London and Globe Finance Company has good prospects. 2. I certainly would not exchange into these. 3. The Coromandel gold mine is likely to go ahead. J. P., St. Martin's-lane.—I am very pleased to hear that you bought 2,000 Croydon Consols on my advice at 4s. 6d., the quotation having risen very considerably. This is a splendid mine, and the shares are likely to go much better. You should write to the London agents, and make every inquiry about the other points mentioned by you. A. W., Newry, and J. C. B., London, E.C.—I note that you wish to join a combination of shareholders in the Umtoli Gold Reefs. As soon as some of the large holders have agreed to take the matter in hand, I will place you in communication with them. A. M. B. R., Birkenhead; Mrs. Newington; and P. B., Tuam.—I have already stated my views regarding the Abercorn Reefs in last week's issue. You should combine with other shareholders to turn the present Directors out.

Industrial Shares.

Down.—No, I see no reason for selling these American Brewery shares now. Soda.—The Lagunas Nitrate Company is working into a better position with the change of Directors, and you should hold the shares. F. W. C.—1. No reason to sell the Telegraph shares. 2. Yes. Hampshire.—1. No reason for selling these Brewery shares. 2. No particular temptation to buy these. Speculator, Ashbourne.—I do not think much of these music-hall shares. Quandary.—1. You start with a supposition which is not likely to be fulfilled; but in any case the dividends would not be taken away from the shareholders. 2. Hold. 3. I cannot tell you yet. Radbourne.—I do not think much of the Howe Sewing-machine and Cycle Company. Paccha.—If you wish to buy these Nitrate shares as a lock-up, they may come all right; but it would be preferable to await further developments. You must know that there is a lawsuit between the Lagunas Nitrate Company and the Lagunas Syndicate. J. F.—1. You should certainly cancel your application for T. H. Brinsmead & Co., Limited, and get your money back.

Mixed Investments.

Dilemma.—What you require is very difficult to find, and I should advise you rather to invest in high-class securities, and be satisfied with 3 per cent. Or you might buy Brighton "A," which yield 3¾ per cent. at present price. F. U.—Amongst the shares Nos. 1 to 8, I do not see any temptation to buy any, least of all Sam's Wealth of Nations. You can do much better in the shares mentioned in my letter. S. C.—1. Why did you buy North Coolgardie shares? I never advised their purchase, and do not like their prospects. 2. I do not like the Margarine shares. No reason to sell No. 3. Norway.—I do not like New Beeston Cycles (1), but Hannan's Golden Group (4) are very promising, while Nos. 2 and 3 are fair mining risks. Tokio.—Very speculative; you should take an opportunity to get out—the surroundings are doubtful. J. M. R., Paddington.—Yes; a fair investment. Larry, Cahill.—Amongst your shares Nos. 1 to 11, I like Nos. 2, 3, 4, 9, and 10 best. No. 1 is rather speculative, No. 5 (Golden Cliffs) is not very promising, and I do not like Simpson's Lever Chains (11) at all. Cucaracha.—Hold for the present. Joe.—You should certainly hold your South Africans. Realise the Cycle shares when a good opportunity offers. Marmaduke.—Argentine Northern Central bonds should be held. I do not like the Chili Gold Development Syndicate. Simplex.—The Company appears to be a promising finance undertaking. With reference to the Atchison, Topeka, and Santa Fé, it seems to be a great pity that you have not given your attention to the numerous advertisements which have appeared in the papers. I do not see how you can escape the fine. The documents are returned in your envelope. L.P.C.—1. The Directors of the Union Bank of Australia have acted very straightforwardly and conservatively, and there is every prospect of the shares improving again. 2. Hold your old Uruguay bonds. Lakeview.—1. Coats' shares seem to be quite high enough. 2. I have never been in favour of these shares, and you will probably do well to sell on an improvement. 3. A fair mining risk. 4. Certainly hold Barnato Banks for a big rise. A. C.—Your shares Nos. 1 to 14 are upon the whole well selected, and I see no reason for selling any. As regards the second-class investment you require, would not the Uruguay Five per Cent. loan suit you? Oswald.—I think you will be quite right in realising your £2,500 Spanish Fours, and reinvesting in Uruguay, Glencairn, Johannesburg Consolidated Investment, and London and Globe Finance. Spec.—1. South Africans generally are bound for higher prices, and you had better hold for a recovery. 2. As you do not approve of French Dunlops you had better not buy them; my view of the business is very favourable. Clarendon.—You should not sell any of your South African mining shares now, as the market looks like going much better. The other shares, too, had better be held. The exchange from the Chinese Gold loan into Uruguay bonds appears to be promising. The new Five per Cent. Uruguay loan is now quoted officially at 70, and is secured on the Uruguayan Customs receipts. Oakhurst.—After the heavy fall, it would be preferable to hold your American investments Nos. 1 to 9. Pete.—Under the present circumstances the South African market is likely to go much higher, and you should hold your shares Nos. 1 to 6 for an improvement. No reason to sell Nos. 7 and 8 now, and you should certainly hold Coras (9) and North British Deferred (10). A. S. B.—1. One of these days. 2. No option but to hold; and you should also keep Nos. 3 to 7 for the present. Solway.—No reason for selling the shares Nos. 1 and 2; both ought to improve now, although No. 1 is certainly not one of my tips. Parrhesia.—1. No risk in holding for the present. 2. Why not realise your handsome profit. 3. Your view coincides with mine, viz.—that a boom in South African shares is within measurable distance. I am afraid that I cannot give another tip such as Glencairns when they were from 5s. to 7s. You will find, however, that I have mentioned under the "Kaffir Circus" a number of South African shares worth buying, and as a cheap share with great promise I may mention Transvaal Exploring at 1. 4. My opinion of Lady Loch is favourable. Perplexed, Bournemouth.—1. Fair prospects of an improvement. All your South African shares Nos. 2 to 16 should now be held for a rise, as matters at present look much brighter as regards the "Kaffir Circus." You know how unfavourable my view has always been of No. 7; but Nos. 8 and 9 had better be held. N. W.—1. The Northern Transvaal Railway will be constructed very shortly, everything in connection with it having been arranged. 2. Langlaagte Royal will also come right again. 3. Yes. 4. The Financial News. G. M.—I should say that, under the circumstances, Chilian bonds would be most suitable for you. Ceres.—1. There is no doubt that the interest on the Four Per Cent. Debenture Stock of the Grand Trunk will be paid this time. 2. I should think that it will be preferable to hold the Brewery shares, but not to buy any more just yet.

Mortlock's China and Glass Business, Oxford-st., has entered its 150th year, being founded by John Mortlock in 1746. It is carried on by John George Mortlock, the great-great grandson of the founder, who solicits patronage and recommendation.

Various Investments.

Rates of money have eased off again, and with the disbursement of the various Railway dividends quite an easy tone has been created. The surplus funds to be invested are still large, and although some hardening of rates may be looked for in the autumn, money may be expected to remain cheap for some time to come. High-class investments have upon the whole been well supported, and a distinct recovery has taken place in Consols to 113⅜, which was due partly to the lower rates in the Money Market, and also to the improved political outlook and the less panicky condition of the American department. It does not say much for the faith of our American cousins in the triumph of silver that they should be so anxious to get rid of the metal as to offer it in large quantities, with the result that a further decline of ⅜d. has been caused to 30⅞d. The steadiness of Rupee Paper, on the other hand, continues, and is chiefly due to the improvement in Indian finances. At the meeting of the Brewery and Commercial Investment Trust, Limited, very favourable statements were made, and the Ordinary shares are firmer at 6 x.d. Considering that these shares are in receipt of a dividend of 7 per cent. per annum, they are still an excellent purchase for permanent investment, the more so as a large surplus has been earned, which has not been divided. Home Brewery shares have been steady, Allsopps remaining at about 180. Nitrate Rails have again fallen to 5⅞, there being a good deal of nervousness as regards the coming competition; yet I cannot help thinking that this decline is overdone, and in any case the relapse in the Debentures is not justified. The shares in Nitrate-producing Companies are dull, although nitrate of soda is firmer. San Jorge is quoted 5¼, Santa Rita 3¾, Lagunas Nitrate 2, Lagunas Syndicate 1¾. Hardly any business has been transacted in Cycle shares, and prices have been sagging, with the exception of Dunlop Deferred, which remain at ⅝ premium. Beestons have fallen heavily to 3, at which readers of TRUTH will not be surprised. Amongst the shares likely to improve in the near future are Cycle Tubes now quoted 1⅛. A long-delayed judgment in the action of the North British Rubber Company to restrain the Gormally and Jeffery Manufacturing Company (an American firm having large business places at Coventry) for an infringement of a patent taken out by Mr. Bartlett for an improvement in pneumatic tyres (the Clincher patent), has at last been delivered by Mr. Justice North. He granted an injunction restraining the defendants, during the continuance of Bartlett's Patent of 1890, from manufacturing, or in any other way dealing with, anything that is included in the complete specification. The defendants have to pay the costs of the action, and render a profit-account. I hear that the London Distillery and Yeast Company are finding a ready and increasing sale for their yeast and spirits. The shares at about par, and especially the Five per Cent. Debentures, at 105-106, should be worthy of the attention of investors. I have several times referred to the circulars sent out by Frank Tarrant & Co., stock and share dealers, 70 and 71, Bishopsgate-street, E.C., in which they invite participation in "their special deals"; and I have explained how these syndicate-touts are boasting that their "deals" are invariably successful. As late as June 20 they boasted of having closed their "Allsopp's Special Joint Deal" at "the truly magnificent profit of £125 net on every £30 subscribed." A correspondent who sent £10 to this firm on June 21, and who received on July 18 a circular in which one more great success was announced, "Messrs. Tarrant & Co.'s Midland special deal having been closed at a profit of £114 on every £30 subscribed," then wrote to that firm asking for his share in that deal; but received an intimation that he was interested in the "Lake Shore deal," and has not received any profit. Neither has his subscription been returned, although Frank Tarrant & Co. in their circulars "undertake to guarantee subscribers against any loss." I should like to know what Frank Tarrant & Co. have to say to this? Another prophet has arisen under the name of Kynaston, Son, & Co., at 114, Fenchurch-street, E.C. This firm calls its deals "Kynaston's Accumulative System"; but the "system" consists of nothing but the ordinary syndicate-touting practice; although a redeeming point about their circulars is that they mention "that this is a speculation, so that it cannot be altogether devoid of risk."—Your affectionate uncle, MOSES.

QUEER STORY.

A LITERARY LEGACY.

THE will, as it appeared in a daily paper, after stating the extent of the personalty and mentioning a few trifling legacies, ran as follows:—

> To my son John I leave the sum of £250, to be expended in the publication of a memoir of my public and private life. Having implicit confidence in his filial love and discretion, I desire him to write that life himself, and to base the record entirely upon such letters and documents as he shall select from the large packet, labelled A, which is lying, tied and sealed, at my solicitors, Messrs. Parker & Sons; and which is not to be opened until three years after my decease. The publication of any private letter or public document shall lie absolutely in his discretion. The rest of my personalty, after payment of my just debts and funeral expenses, I leave absolutely to my said son John.

Jack Harford laid the paper down on the ink-stained writing table in his chambers, and with a dolorous little laugh muttered to himself: "Well, now that every one in London has seen the will, so far as my social life is concerned, I might as well be a cave-dweller in the Desert of Gobi."

This was certainly a cynical reflection upon the will of his famous father, the more so as the document was, on the face of it, a monument of paternal affection. It was, however, to the prefatory statement of the Somerset House authorities as to the extent of the personalty, rather than to the disposition thereof, that the remark applied. And, indeed, Jack Harford was not wrong when he assumed that the public conscience would be shocked at the will of a Cabinet Minister being proved for a less sum than £7,000, and that society would vindicate its sense of propriety by discreetly ignoring a son who was unable to excite a ten-figure affection in the heart of an indulgent father.

The Right Hon. John Harford, late Secretary of State for Public Industries, and the testator in question, was a man who had lived in the public eye from his youth upwards. Being well born, handsome, talented, endowed with the most charming manners and a comfortable income, he had early embarked in politics, and having held several under-secretaryships had in the fulness of time obtained Cabinet rank and a lucrative office. His wife died soon after his son Jack was born. He never married again, but gossip said he was not without his consolations. But whatever may have been his private life, the most exacting critic could not but commend the way he brought up the lad, to whom he was passionately attached.

Jack was sent to Eton, where he occupied a creditable position in the sixth, and thence to Christ Church, where a handsome allowance enabled him to hold his own with the best. A second in "greats" proved that the example of his father's life, and the privilege of associating with the most intellectual men in England, had not been wasted. And the lad had, after two years' pupilage in "chambers," just been called to the Bar when his father, at the early age of fifty-seven, paid the debt of nature. This, alas, poor Jack Harford soon discovered was about the only liability the gifted statesman did succeed in meeting. His private affairs had long been in the most hopeless confusion; and, as his house in Charles-street was merely rented, and his realty limited to fortuitous accretions on his shooting boots, it was scarcely surprising that the residue of his once handsome patrimony fell far short of the figure at which the world had prematurely fixed Jack Harford's expectations.

This disparity between hope and realisation at first affected Jack but little. He loved his father, who to him was the ideal of manhood. His poverty proved the incorruptibility of his father's public life. To use the quaint Albanian proverb, "Though handling honey he had not licked his fingers." He knew that his father had given him the most liberal education obtainable, and had placed him in a profession which, though he had himself regarded it as a mere ante-room to politics, none the less offered him a career. He knew, moreover, that it was only by lavish expenditure that his father could have held his position in that charming society in which Jack had been brought up from childhood, and which he was fain to regard as a more important factor in his education than either school or college. And so he felt, after all he had enjoyed the training of a gentleman—had enough for the bare necessities of life, and, thanks to his father, possessed many influential friends who, he little doubted, would be kind to him in the hour of adversity.

It was not long before Jack realised that this last pious hope might be of that deferred character which, according to the Psalmist, turneth the heart sick. On returning from the funeral, an old friend and colleague of his father's implored him with much emotion to cherish not only his father's memory, but a certain bin of red-sealed claret which, so he said, was worth 200 shillings a dozen. On discovering the true state of his affairs, Jack wrote a polite note to his venerable friend, explaining his financial position, and offering him the claret at the price named. He received no reply. The next day the old gentleman passed him in Pall Mall with a curt nod. Nor was this the only instance of the world's fickleness.

The one woman whom he had known intimately all his life was Lady Cardew, the wife of his father's colleague, Lord Cardew. Though she was an essentially worldly woman, she had always kept a tender spot in her battered heart for the motherless boy. To the Right Hon. John Harford, Lady Cardew was the model of the Grande dame de pas le monde. In all social matters he deferred to her as the infallible arbiter, and when, a few years back, Lord Cardew died, rumour was pleased to regard Mr. John Harford as his probable successor. Though this prophecy remained unfulfilled, that gentleman was wont to impress upon Jack that Lady Cardew was the type of woman a man could marry as well as love, little thinking that Jack had formed a somewhat similar opinion by falling in love with his life-long playfellow, Nelly Cardew, who was in person the very reflex of her handsome mother. Lady Cardew's keen eyes were more discerning, but, as she liked Jack, and had little doubt he had a career before him, she gave the intimacy the negative encouragement of non-opposition. When John Harford died, she sent a wreath like a cartwheel, and a little note to Jack, telling him that he must regard her as a mother. Nevertheless, when he visited her after his first interview with the family solicitors, and confided to her the nature of his financial prospects, she firmly, but plainly, intimated that the words "in-law" could not be appended to the proferred relationship. In short, she gave him to clearly understand that while her personal opinion of him was unchanged, their own precarious position necessitated a good marriage for Nelly, and as Mr. Swynfen Hart, the South African millionaire, was calling with significant regularity, she must ask him to be generous, and not impair Nelly's chances by any compromising attentions.

Under these circumstances, Jack Harford's pessimism was not unnatural. Having thrown aside the paper, he knocked the ashes out of his pipe, brushed his hat, and sallied forth for his mid-day chop at Black's Club, to which aristocratic society he had, thanks to his father's influence, been recently elected. He determined to brave the neglect of the timeservers, knowing well that he himself had done nothing to be ashamed of.

He had scarcely turned into Pall Mall, when, lo! thirty yards ahead, whom should he see coming towards him on the same side of the street but Lord Linden, the friend whose solicitude for the red-seal claret had been so touching. Jack Harford contracted his brow, compressed his lips, and, staring into vacancy, endeavoured to pass him. But this proved an impossibility, for, with a beaming smile and outstretched hand, Lord Linden stopped him.

"My dear boy, delighted to see you. I've just been writing to you from 'Black's' about that claret you mentioned. I really was so overstocked, I couldn't let you know before. I've sold a couple of bins full of sherry to my brother, and I'll take the lot, at your price, my good fellow, at your price. What did we say, 200s. a dozen? Well, well, let us say 240s. That's an outside price, and I venture to think you won't get it elsewhere. Oh don't thank me," he continued, as the astonished and penitent Jack was pouring out his gratitude to the man he had so grievously misjudged. "You must give me the privilege of an old friend of your dear father's—what a charming man he was—and—er—by the way, I see in to-day's papers he desired you to write something in the way of a memoir. I suppose he left a good deal of material, eh?"

"To judge from the size of the packet," said Jack, "he must have kept every scrap of correspondence for the last thirty years."

"Ticklish things, letters, Jack. A good many are devilish compromising unless one knows the circumstances under which they were written. I think if I were you—of course I speak as an old friend—I shouldn't publish too many that deal with politics; letters from colleagues and the like. Lets the public too much behind the scenes. Perhaps I could help you a bit in the selection, you know. You see a public man understands these little things. Don't hesitate to ask me if I can be of any use."

"Thank you very much, Lord Lindon; but, to speak frankly, I think I ought to go through the correspondence myself. You see my father leaves the whole thing to my absolute discretion, and clearly never contemplated my seeking extraneous advice. Thanks all the same."

"Humph," ejaculated his lordship, with an expression on his face that was not quite amiable; but after a moment's thought he brightened up. "Well, perhaps you're right. Now, what are you going to do this Long Vacation—yachting, I suppose, as usual."

Jack intimated that owing to very obvious reasons his nautical excursions would have for the future to be restricted to the deck of a penny steamer from the Temple pier.

"Then," said Lord Linden, with much fervour, "you must come to my shooting-box in Scotland on the 12th, and stay three weeks and get the cream of the shooting. I insist upon it, and I shouldn't be surprised if a charming young lady was staying at the lodge to keep my daughter company. Well, good-bye; send the claret and put nails into your shooting boots on the 11th."

Jack went his way rejoicing but mystified. Nor did his good fortune end there. Scarcely had he finished his post-prandial pipe in the smoking room when he felt a heavy hand on his shoulder, and on looking up saw Robert Ross looking down upon him with a kindly smile. Mr. Robert Ross was an M.P. on the same side of the House as his father. He was a most intimate friend of the deceased statesman, but had for many years neglected politics for finance. He was a burly, outspoken man, whose keen, quick brain manifested itself in speech rather more than is the case with most of his kind. With him, however, speech had proved as golden as the proverbial silence.

"Well, Jack, old fellow, I saw your poor old Governor's will this morning, and I am sorry he didn't cut up better. It was the failure of that infernal Transcarpathian Loan that did it. It hurt me, but it broke him."

"Indeed," said Jack. "I know nothing about any loan. What do you mean?"

"Oh, nothing," said the financier quickly, as he read Jack's ignorance at a glance. "Well you must make a bit on this Life your father wished you to write. And take my tip—burn any reference to your father's little efforts in the financial way. Every one does it you know, but the world is so infernally censorious about other people's little failings."

THE SANITARY ENGINEERING CO. (Carter Bros.), 65, Victoria-st., Westminster, for making Sanitary Surveys in London or country.

"I'm sure," retorted Jack hotly, "my father never did anything to be ashamed of, and I shall place his life before the world exactly as he lived it."

"Oh, of course," said Mr. Ross with a grim smile, "very proper feeling Jack, and all that, but still I thought you wouldn't resent the advice of an old friend of your father's. And now," he added, after a pause during which he looked at Jack with a quizzical expression "how are you going to live in the meantime?—a lad with your bringing up can't live on £250 a year. Can I help you. I could get you a billet in the City if you'd like, but I'm always chary of advising a lad with a limited capital to go east of St. Paul's. No money, or a lot, is what you should have for the City swim."

"You're very good, Mr. Ross, but I don't much relish the idea of finance; besides, my legal education would be wasted. No, if you really want to help me you might introduce me to a solicitor or two. I've only recently been called to the Bar, but I have been two years in chambers, and think I could do the work all right—that is, if you happen to know any solicitors."

"Happen to know any solicitors!" echoed Mr. Ross. "Why, my dear fellow, our office keeps at least one member of a big firm in constant work. What with disputes upon concessions, injunctions against rivals, and actions for the enforcement of contracts, finance and litigation are convertible terms. I'll speak to the Rummingtons this afternoon. Good-bye, Jack! Always remember I am your friend"—and he added significantly—"a friend in my position is a valuable acquisition to a young man. Good friends should not be lightly lost."

Later on Jack thought a good deal about this aphorism, and certainly a good friend Robert Ross proved, for the very next morning a clerk from Messrs. Rummington left a bundle of papers, whereon "Mr. Harford, of 4, Flag-court, was requested to advise." This proved to be the advanced guard of a comfortable troop of other papers—opinions, investigation of titles, and even briefs. Thus, within a few months of his "call," Jack got the start for which so many other young men of the highest attainments have to wait for years.

The editor, too, of a great paper, with whom the late John Harford was intimately acquainted, and to whom Jack, in fear and trembling, sent an article, not only accepted the same but requested an interview, and proved altogether most gracious. He reminded Jack of his father's services to their party, referred lightly to the projected memoir, and having suggested to Jack certain literary work which he could easily contribute in his spare time, reminded him of the loyalty and discretion that all great journals expected at the hands of those they regularly employed.

Thus was it that young Harford found the world far less unkind than he anticipated, and though he was poor in worldly goods, he had before him an honourable career, and above all—hope.

He occasionally saw Nelly in the park. She was invariably shadowed by the assiduous millionaire; so apart from a few words on general topics, he certainly kept his word to Lady Cardew, and did nothing to impair the young lady's matrimonial prospects. This made it the more curious that, before the season was over, he received a note from Lady Cardew telling him that she never, of course, intended him to cease visiting the house entirely, and that really there was no reason why he shouldn't come occasionally. She added she would be at home on Sunday afternoon. Accordingly on Sunday afternoon he presented himself in Sloane-street. As he traversed the hall he passed Mr. Swynfen Hart, who looked crestfallen. Lady Cardew rose and welcomed Jack with a sad little smile. "Nelly is upstairs, Jack; she has just given Mr. Hart his congé. I can't blame her, poor child, for he was a vulgar little person; and I must say, Jack, you've behaved very well. Oh, Jack, I do wish your father had left you more."

"My father was too generous a man, Lady Cardew, to leave much," replied Jack warmly, and quite unconsciously his eye fell upon a handsome diamond bracelet Lady Cardew had worn continuously since her husband's death. She turned scarlet and gave a frightened look at Jack's face, but gathering from his expression that his words were entirely devoid of a personal application, she gave a little sigh of relief and replied: "Yes, Jack, he was certainly very kind, and no doubt when you write this Life every one's talking about, you will draw attention to it. But Jack, dear, you'll have to be very careful. I should confine the memoirs entirely to your father's political life."

"'Pon my word," cried Jack Harford, "this is extraordinary. Not a friend of my father's have I met but makes some reference to this memoir, and forthwith proffers advice. But as every one's advice is different, I must, after all, judge entirely for myself, as my father intended. I shall go steadily through the whole package of papers, select those most interesting, and write the Life upon them."

"Are there many letters?" said Lady Cardew, with a little tremor in her voice.

"Thousands! from the size of the package."

"But surely you will never read his private correspondence?" inquired Lady Cardew, with a tentative little gasp.

"Why not? My father was a high-minded and honourable man, a man of blameless life. Nothing, I am sure, will be found of a compromising character, so I shall act as my father desired—read every letter; and should there be any matter the public should not know, I will exclude it. Besides, my solicitor tells me, so long as I spend the stated sum in publication, there's nothing in the will to prevent my limiting the work entirely for private circulation."

"Let's see, Jack, there'll be nearly three years to run. Well," observed Lady Cardew, sententiously, "a good deal may happen in three years' time. You'll stay to dinner, Jack. Nelly will have got over the agitation caused by her interview with Mr. Hart, and she'd like to see you, Jack, I know."

Jack did stay to dinner, and learnt that Nelly was the particular young lady to whom Lord Linden had slyly alluded as a probable guest at his shooting-lodge. And when dinner was over, he told Lady Cardew privately that he had also been invited, but that if she desired he would make an excuse and stay away. To his delight and astonishment Lady Cardew offered no objection, but merely suggested he should not be precipitate.

So all the stars in their courses seemed to fight for the fortunate young man. And when he returned to the Temple after the Long Vacation, if he was not actually the accepted suitor of the charming Miss Helen Cardew, there was none the less an understanding between them—namely, that if Jack could, in three years' time, raise an income of a thousand a year, he could marry Nelly with Lady Cardew's full consent.

Two years passed away, in which Jack's income, term by term, gradually approximated the allotted standard. The case of Ross v. Contango & Co., which Jack steered through all its vicissitudes, from skirmishing in a Master's Chambers to ultimate victory in the House of Lords, gave him a splendid advertisement. The briefs came trooping gaily from several well-known firms, and his literary earnings also increased comfortably.

Nor was his success limited to his profession and the press. His father's many friends looked upon the young man with favour. He became an accepted member of that charming society wherein he was bred. Invitations showered upon him; the best shooting was his, at no greater cost than a tip to the head-keeper. The best horse in many a friend's stable enabled him to hold his own with the Quorn or Pytchley. His handsome, merry face was welcome everywhere. Happy youth! Moreover, the cap of Fortunatus grew only the more bounteous as the three years' embargo on the mystic package, labelled "A," approached its completion. In the meanwhile, Society awaited, with daily increasing curiosity, the opening of the afore-mentioned package, and the publication of a volume which, for gossip and piquancy, ought easily to have distanced the "Greville Memoirs." For once Society was doomed to disappointment. A very few weeks after the opening of the packet the volume did appear, it was true. But it was circulated privately, so privately indeed, that the edition was limited strictly to fifty copies, each of which were duly presented to one or other of his father's intimate friends. Whether Jack's "art" was long there was no chance of judging, for his father's "Life" was commendably short. Nor did the volume itself fulfil anticipation. Though so exquisitely bound that the bulk of the £250 was swallowed up in the glories of morocco leather and elaborate tooling, the book itself was as attenuated as the heart "bleatings" of a modern minor poet. Most of the chapters, in short, bore a striking resemblance to that famous chapter on snakes in Iceland which excited Dr. Johnson's merriment. For after giving a very bald recital of his father's birth and education, Jack went on as follows:—

Chapter II.—Politics.

The Right Hon. John Harford enjoyed the esteem of all his opponents and of those colleagues who looked to him as a means of their own advancement. As, however, most of the latter have been conspicuously kind to the present writer, and one especially has given him the best shooting in Scotland, he feels it only right to maintain a discreet silence as to the late statesman's relations with his political friends.

Chapter III.—The City.

It has been hinted in inspired circles that Mr. Harford occasionally dabbled in finance, and, like most honourable men, lost thereby. From one gentleman alone could information be obtained as to the truth of the rumour; but, as the biographer owes his whole professional success to that gentleman's kind offices, he feels he would ill requite his generosity by dragging his name into vulgar publicity.

Chapter IV. Journalism.

No doubt Mr. Harford was, during his long career, connected indirectly with one famous organ. As his son has been for some time honourably attached to that paper, he is precluded by the ethics of his calling from disclosing its name, or touching more fully on so delicate a subject.

Chapter V.—The Salon.

After his wife's death Mr. Harford sought to forget his bitter bereavement in the witty and polished life of Mayfair, wherein he shone above all men. Nevertheless, for the last twenty years only one person can be said to have influenced his life. As that lady is the embodiment of all that is charming and womanly, sent the largest wreath to his funeral, and has always regarded me as her son, to disclose her identity would be a vulgar impertinence.

There were a few other chapters dealing with the "Turf," "Clubs," and "The Drama;" but as they imparted no more information (lest the susceptibilities of some friend or another might be hurt) it could scarcely be said that Society was the richer for the volume.

But one member of Society was distinctly the richer, and it need scarcely be added that member was Jack Harford himself. Every friend who received the volume blessed the charity and discretion the youth had displayed. Their gratitude possibly was little else than the "lively sense of favours to come," for the letters, so far as they knew, were still in existence and might be utilised in the future. So the publication of this abortive little work did not check their flow of hospitality. On the contrary it rather stimulated it. Jack is still junior in all Mr. Ross's litigations. Lord Linden still asks him to Bencloigh on the 12th, and with him the Hon. Mrs. Jack, for it is needless to say Lady Cardew was so elated at Jack's touching reference to "the charming lady", and his generosity in leaving her identity veiled, that she insisted on the wedding taking place, and pinches herself sorely to give Nelly a sufficiency of pin money.

So, after all, Jack's literary legacy turned out very valuable.

It may be doubted whether it would have turned out so valuable had his many entertainers known that when Jack, with beating heart, opened the "sealed package labelled A," he found therein nought but many obsolete blue books, three months' file of the Times, the contents of the waste-paper basket in the Industrial office for a week, and on the top of all the following note in his father's well-known handwriting:—

"My dear Son,—As an actual fact, I have never kept a letter in my life; but do not be disappointed, for unless my knowledge of human nature be sadly mistaken, you will by this time be accepted in Society, with many friends both rich and powerful. Possibly you may even have attained a creditable position either in your profession or in public life. I hope so; at all events, you will have learnt early in life to appreciate La Rochefoucauld's cynical maxim, 'We promise according to our hopes; we perform according to our fears.'"

MUSIC.

SUNDAY AND OTHER MUSIC LICENSING.

THE London County Council, in their annual report just issued, again regret their inability to grant occasional musical licences, or licences at all at any other time of the year than November. Most sensible people will share this regret. The Middlesex County Council, who have jurisdiction over riverside and rural districts in this county, possess the power, but the London County Council have not. Was there ever anything more absurd? And the result is that the Act of Parliament has become almost a dead letter. The Commissioner of Police has lately drawn attention to the very great number of places where musical and other entertainments are held without any sort of licence. Performances which, if the buildings themselves were safe against fire or panic, would be blameless, are held every week and in increasing numbers in school-rooms and mission halls; while during the fashionable season benefit concerts, for which tickets are freely sold in Bond-street, take place almost every afternoon in the drawing-rooms of ladies of the aristocracy. Last year one of these unlicensed, and therefore utterly illegal, concerts took place in the drawing-room of one of the Judges of the High Court. His lordship, when he next morning read in the papers an account of what her ladyship had been up to, must have raised a prayer against the intervention of the Common Informer. Yet the County Council admit that the Rev. Mr. Blank, of the Mission Hall, and Lady Dash, of the drawing-room benefit concert, would willingly take out an "occasional" licence if the law enabled them to do so.

Indeed, at present they are quite at the mercy of an informer, and unkind remarks have once more been made that their reverences and their ladyships are spared; whereas a publican, who in a poor neighbourhood gives a sing-song for a "friendly lead" in his bar parlour is prosecuted and fined. The County Council has, it seems, the right to grant occasional licences for stage plays, although the lady editor who recently gave a representation of Mascagni's "Zanetto" in her drawing-room, is probably unaware of it. But the Council cannot grant occasional licences for music, and the wit of man is powerless to say why not. Had they a discretion in the matter, they would certainly licence school-rooms and similar places, but only when sufficient exits prevented danger to life and limb. As to concerts in private houses, it is impossible to licence them at all under the present law. Imagine the feelings of a lady who found it necessary to paint in "large capital letters" over her front door, "Licensed pursuant to Act of Parliament of the 25th of King George the Second." This Act of his Hanoverian Majesty was, according to the preamble, passed chiefly to stop the "advertising a reward, with no questions asked, for the return of things which have been lost or stolen." The "large capital letters" painted over her ladyship's door, or at St. James's or Queen's Hall, are, in fact, by the blessed 25th of George II., intended as a warning against "thefts and robberies," and a hint to button up the pockets. But the warning is now quite out of date. The only robbery in a latter-day concert hall is the price of admission to an entertainment possibly not worth a tenth of the money.

Sunday licensing is in quite as chaotic a state, and the report of the House of Lords' Committee recommending that matters should be left as they are, is a self-evident piece of absurdity. The lawyers themselves differ as to the correct reading of the Act of 1781. Lord James, two years ago, gave a written opinion that providing the public were admitted to all parts of the house—not to a few places in the back row of the gallery, but to all parts of the house—gratis, a charge could legally be made for programmes and seats. Sir Richard Webster, on the same date, was of a wholly contrary opinion; apparently considering that under the Act of 1781 a performance of the "Messiah" on Sunday evening converted the Royal Albert Hall into a "disorderly house." As a matter of fact, at the Albert Hall people are admitted to all parts of the house without payment, but as they cannot sit down without paying for seats, and as they are, of course, not permitted to endanger the audience by lounging about the gangways, the free admission does not amount to much. The whole of the gallery, which holds about five thousand people, is, however, entirely set apart for those who like music on Sunday, but have conscientious objections to paying for it. At Queen's Hall, on the contrary, both at Mr. Newman's concerts and the Sunday League, tickets are openly sold at the box office, the prohibition (21 George III., cap. 49) against admission "by payment of money or by tickets sold for money" being candidly, and I hope legitimately, ignored. It is doubtful whether Mr. Newman, as manager of the Hall, is not thereby at the mercy of a Common Informer. It would be a crying shame if he were; but, if not, it certainly seems a gross absurdity that an illegal performance is made legal by the simple process of admitting a few parsimonious people gratuitously to the back seats. What possible harm a Sunday evening performance of an oratorio can do to the morals, the health, or the character of an Englishman, the Archbishop of Canterbury, the Bishop of Winchester, and other lights of the Lords' Committee omit to explain. How a proceeding can be bettered by admitting a few people without payment they also leave to the imagination. And yet we are sometimes surprised that the intelligent foreigner refers to the English as a nation of hypocrites.

Appended to the report, by the way, is a memorial signed by Mr. Chirgwin, Mr. Jolly John Nash, Mr. Charles Coborn, Mr. Herbert Campbell, Mr. Victor Stevens, Mr. Lonnen, and others, expressing a hope that the law against the Sunday opening of amusements "for money payment" may be upheld. I dare say I shall not be far wrong in supposing that the anxiety of the memorialists in regard to "money payment" has some oblique reference to the fear of a seven day week at the salary of a six day week. Indeed, a good deal of the opposition to a rational Sunday doubtless springs from a very natural objection to an extra day without pay. I am bound to say that the Queen's Hall people have done their best to give logic to the Sabbatarians by paying the Sunday band half-price. But apart from this purely commercial argument, I venture to suggest that this extraordinary memorial, in which the aims of the Episcopal bench are supported by such doughty champions of the sanctity of (to quote the Act of Parliament) the day "commonly called Sunday," is more provocative of laughter than anything I have recently heard in the entertainment "commonly called" comic singing.

Mr. Maurice Grau is expected back from New York on Tuesday week, when certain details concerning next year's season at Covent Garden will be settled. The Harris executors apparently hold an almost prima donna-like opinion of the value of their copyrights, but matters should easily be arranged with a little common-sense. If not, nothing remains but a fresh repertory, which, I have no doubt, would be welcome enough to the subscribers.

The Promenade Concerts at Queen's Hall commence on Saturday week. A list of the vocalists with whom Mr. Robert Newman is "in negotiation" has been issued, but in several cases no contract has yet been signed, the theory of holiday terms not apparently being just yet quite understood by some of the artists.

The London rehearsals for the Worcester Festival will commence on Wednesday week, and the festival itself starts on the following Sunday. The programme put forward is not a particularly striking one, and as the novelties are limited to two short works by local composers, the affair will hardly interest visitors from London or the music public generally. I hear, however, excellent things of Mr. Elgar's "Lux Christi," an oratorio based upon the miracle narrated in John ix., of the giving of sight to the man blind from his birth. Mr. Elgar, indeed, has managed to make really dramatic the scene in which the enraged Pharisees drive the unfortunate convalescent out of the Temple. Representative themes are freely used, though hardly in the Wagnerian manner, and there are one or two examples of Canonic and Fugal writing.

The Duke and Duchess of York some time since agreed to visit the Norwich Festival in October, and the Prince of Wales has also intimated his intention of being present at two performances. One of these will no doubt be Signor Mancinelli's new cantata, "Hero and Leander," for the talent of the Covent Garden conductor is greatly admired by his Royal Highness.

The copyright case of Dennison v. Boosey, in regard to the publishing and performing rights in "Les Huguenots" will call up many reminiscences. Mr. Harry Wall, who appeared as the principal witness for the plaintiff, is the gentleman who some years ago was so frequently a figure in performing-right cases, first as representative of Mme. Bodda Pyne, and afterwards on his own account. Mr. Wall purchased certain performing rights in "She Wore a Wreath of Roses," "Kathleen Mavourneen," and songs by Vincent Wallace, and doubtless made a good thing of it. In the present case the plaintiff, Mrs. Dennison, who Mr. Harry Wall stated was formerly his cook, and was so old and toothless that it was useless to call her as a witness, as the Court would not understand what she said, purchased the rights in the libretto of "Les Huguenots" from Mr. Wall himself for £50, Mr. Wall supposing he had previously purchased them from the executors of Mr. Francis Romer in 1889. This, the Judge found, was Mr. Wall's illusion. Mr. Ashdown, the well-known publisher, proved that he had purchased the rights at an auction at Messrs. Puttick & Simpson, in 1872, and at this auction Mr. Francis Romer was present. The judge therefore held that Mrs. Dennison had no rights in "Les Huguenots," and accordingly the musical cook has apparently lost the £50 which she paid her employer. It is, indeed, rather late in the day to discover any special copyright in "Les Hugnenots," an opera (copyright lasts forty-two years, or in the alternative, seven years after the author's death), produced as far back as 1836. Even the English version was produced at the old Surrey Theatre in 1849.

The Arts Club, for so many years in Hanover-square, is about to be moved to Dover-street. A large number of musicians have been members of this club, for one reason, perhaps, because it was next door to the Royal Academy of Music and was handy for luncheons and dinners, which at the Royal College of Music are provided for in the South Kensington kitchens. Why musicians have not a club of their own it is not very easy to explain. Attempts to form a Musicians' Club have, as a rule, failed, owing to the fact that the projectors imagined professors of music hanker after musical performances in their hours of ease. I expect what they really do desire is to meet possible pupils. The stage, law, journalism, the army, and numerous other professions and callings have their clubs. A musician, however, is either an unclubable man or his special needs in this department have not yet been catered for.

The organ in the Temple Church, which is now being renovated by a Norwich firm, has a "history." Originally, now more than two centuries ago, the Treasurers of the two Temples invited Father Smith to erect an organ in the old church. This, however, angered the equally celebrated organ builder Renatus Harris, who was then living in "Wyne Office-court," on the other side of Fleet-street, and he therefore also obtained permission to compete. So the Temple had two organs until 1688, when the Treasurers came to terms with Father Smith, who received the big fee of £1,000, and the Renatus Harris organ then disappeared. Some of Father Smith's pipes are still in the Temple organ, upon which the veteran Dr. Hopkins has presided for considerably over half a century.

LETTERS ON BOOKS.

MY DEAR MR. WYNDHAM,—"Shamus O'Brien" every one knows, but few know that the ballad was not Lover's, but Sheridan Le Fanu's; while fewer still are aware that the weird novelist had other and higher claims to being a poet. You will admit these claims to be indisputable when you read the little volume of his "Poems" (1), which has just appeared admirably edited by Mr. Percival Graves. Like his novels, these longer poems, "Beatrice" and "The Legend of the Glaive," are weird and tragic; and, indeed, Melancholy had so marked Sheridan Le Fanu for her own, that even in his spirited imitation of "Young Lochinvar" he buries the bold bridegroom in a rebel's grave before he has done with him! The sole fault, you will find, I think, with the longer poems is a lack of concentration, and there are isolated passages, in "Beatrice" especially, that by their pathos and power will remind you of "The Cenci." Mr. Percival Graves, in his most interesting memoir of the poet, tells the story of the child's quick retort to the reproaches of his father for being late for breakfast:—

"Sheridan, I ask you is this right? Is this right, sir?" holding out an accusing watch. "No, papa, I think it's fast."

But Mr. Graves omits the delicious essay the child at six years of age wrote on the text set him by his father—a Dean—"The Life of Man":—

The Life of Man (wrote the infant decadent) is divided into three stages. The first stage is when he is planning all kinds of mischief and wickedness—this is the age of youth and innocence. The next stage is when he is carrying all these plans out—this is the prime of life and manhood. The last stage is when he repents and takes to prayers—this is dotage.

Apropos of Mr. Percival Graves, I see that his brother, the poet, and his brother-poet, has brought out "More Hawarden Horace" (2), as playful, genial, sparkling as its predecessor. All that Mr. Page in his graceful introduction says of Horace may be transferred without qualification to his latest imitator:—

He knew much and he meditated much, and he had thus acquired the rarest of arts—the art of writing about living persons in a manner at once wise, witty, and without offence. Nothing would tempt him into an ill-natured joke, but he writes to amuse men of taste, education, and good feeling.

While on the subject of poetry, I might notice the persistence of the delusion that blank verse is as simple a secret as that which Orator Henley, the butcher preacher, held out as a bait to get together a congregation of cobblers:—"How to make a pair of shoes in two minutes." After a rousing sermon to a crowded congregation of the trade, he disclosed his patent—"Take a pair of boots and cut away the uppers." Similarly, some poets seem to think that blank verse is made by cutting prose down to ten-syllable lines. Here, for instance, in "Iona" (3) you have six thousand such lines as these presented to you as blank verse:—

Then started up a half-grown idiot boy
They called the "Flounder," just because he was
As much at home within the sea as out:
"I'll help you, Miss Iona, that I will!"
She looked at him with such a lovely light
Within her eyes, the boy felt more than paid.
"God bless you, Johnnie!" then she said; "but how Can you come homeward in the boat alone?
But thank you for your offer—many thanks."

"To fatten padlocks on Antarctic food" is, you know, a line of one of Nat Lee's mad poems, yet in a brilliant table-talk volume I have just come across, "Here and There Memories" (4), it is attributed to a local Londonderry bard. Tennyson's description of Hallam's conversation:—

Heart affluence in discursive talk, should have been prefixed as motto to this desultory but delightful outpouring of an eventful life's reminiscences. It is possible that the swift and subtle mind of the story-teller is guided to its abrupt transitions by associations not perceptible to that of the dull reader, just as the swallow's ziz-zag flight is guided by objects invisible to our dim eyes; but to me it seems as though "H. R. N." had thrust his hand into a lucky-bag and brought up whatever came first. The lucky-bag, however, contains all prizes. I shall just dip my hand in it and bring up for you at random two or three of the stories:—

Lord Clyde, when Sir Colin Campbell, inspected at Fermoy the author's regiment, with the main object of reforming the ruinous mess expenses of the depot battalions. His hosts at the mess, who may have been efficient officers, but who most certainly were not perfect gentlemen, made a point of being ostentatiously extravagant and rowdy on that evening. Presently there was a roar of horse-laughter louder than all that preceded it. Sir Colin graciously asked what the joke was. "I cannot repeat my joke to you, sir," answered the wit. "Pray do. Perhaps it's about me." "That's just the reason, sir." "Well, I don't mind—it must be good." "I dare not, sir." "What! Dare not at your own table, where I'm but a guest?" "Well, sir, I was very rude. I remarked on your shirt collars." (Sir Colin wore Gladstonian collars.) "My shirt collars? There is no joke there? Where's the joke?" "I merely said I supposed you mounted such gills to keep up the character of a cod." The fine old gentleman burned up.

I ought, perhaps, to explain that "cod" is low Irish slang for a pretentious imbecile. This brutality makes one shudder, and I hope the cad who perpetrated it was taught (if anything could teach him) manners by the revenge Lord Clyde took a couple of years after in India. Yardley, the wit, was reported to "the cod" for some regimental scrape, and the gallant General tore up the report as "a trifle not worth further notice before the enemy." It is only fair to give you per contra a story more to the credit of Irish hospitality. Jerry M'Cartie came on a fortnight's visit to a relative and stayed twelve years. At the end of nine years Jerry's long-suffering relative gave him the gentle hint that, as the house was to be completely renovated, all must quit it; but Jerry rejoined that he didn't mind the the smell of paint and wouldn't mind superintending the workmen. At the end of twelve years the host—probably on the principle by which one bacillus is introduced into the system for the extinction of a more noxious species—decided on getting married, and made the announcement of his engagement to Jerry with the hint:—

"I thought I'd tell you in good time, so that you can make leisurely preparations to go, as the lady and you may not hit it as well as you and I do." With tearful eyes Jerry grasped his cousin's hand, saying, "Oh, Dan, dear, you have my hearty thanks for your consideration; but, dear boy, surely if you can put up with her, I can."

And now for one more story per contra of genuine Irish wit as against Mr. Yardley's vulgar personality:—

"Your words," said a magistrate to the notorious Belfast lawyer, Ray—"your words, Mr. Ray, go in at one ear and out at the other."

"Because there's nothing to interrupt the passage, your Worship."

I cannot suppose that "H. R. N.," who was educated at the famous Jesuit School of Clongowes, can be in the destitute condition as to learning of the young gentleman who said to Sam Johnson, "I've lost all my Greek, Dr. Johnson." "Probably," retorted Sam, "about the time that I lost all my Lincolnshire property." It is no doubt to the printer's devil, therefore, that we owe such

It is incomparably the most interesting, and politically the most instructive, of "The New Irish Library Series." —Believe me, my dear Mr. Wyndham, ever yours very sincerely, DESMOND B. O'BRIEN.

GIRLS' GOSSIP.

DEAREST AMY,—There is now such latitude in the style of hairdressing that the variety of coiffures is great. I do not suppose that curling-tongs have ever before had such a busy year as this one. It is wonderful how a crinkle or two, produced by this means, brings out the colour of the hair and improves the appearance, especially if the waves and ridges are diplomatically made to agree with the contour of the head.

The prettiest head I have seen for a long time belonged to a bright-faced girl who had adopted the Victorian style, with modifications up to date. The hair was parted in the centre, and the surface portion of it lightly lifted with the curling-tongs at either side in a ridge parallel with the parting. Above the ears it was kept perfectly flat, but in front of them were two small side-curls, the tiniest ripples of hair rolled round the tongs, but so sweetly becoming. The back was arranged in loose but tidy coils and rolls, caught rather high.

It was at the play that I saw this pretty coiffure. The girl who wore it was accompanied by another, who, I immediately settled in my own mind, was a married sister. She, too, had managed her hair very prettily. It lay in three long curls on the top of her head. The central one had evidently been cut short, only sufficient having been left to make the light, shallow-looking curl. Those on either side were simply lifted into position by means of two long diamond-headed combs, probably wedding presents. A sort of twist at the back ended in a catogan tied with a bit of black velvet ribbon, but not hanging lower than the necklace.

I see advertisements of all kinds of devices for doing the hair, some looking like miniature life-preservers, and others like saveloys. But with just a little skill and some practice one ought, with a fair allowance of hair, to be able to manage a good coiffure without these aids.

Poor Ada's hair fell out frightfully after influenza, and has never grown thick again. She now dresses what is left of it over a high roll, which suits her splendidly. I forget where she got it, but it did not cost much, and it makes her look like a picture, giving her height and dignity in a quite surprising way. Her head was always too small to be in good proportion with her shoulders, and this addition to its outline is just what was wanted.

And in such ways, as with patchwork, our poverty becomes our pride!

Princess Louise, Marchioness of Lorne, is the only one of our Princesses who wears her hair artistically. The others favour too much height and too much elaboration of curly fringe; but the Marchioness, who really grows handsomer and handsomer as she leaves girlhood behind her, abjures all Court hairdressers and wears her thick brown locks in a graceful coil, adapted to the shape of her head, with just a little crimping behind the ears and a soft little fringe on the forehead.

I had a sudden attack of rheumatism or stiff neck or something of the sort the other morning, and was much diverted by the wide variety of the advice given me. A friend, who is extremely up-to-date, advised me to go to a mesmerist, who, she declared, would in a very few moments cure me by convincing me that the pain did not exist. It seemed to me that that would be impossible. I could not get my right hand up high enough to brush my hair. Would the man's mere eloquence enable me to lift it and use it and yet feel no pain? "Oh, yes," said the friend. "But it is not eloquence. It is that he will imbue you with a disbelief in the existence of the pain. He will immediately acquire such perfect command over you that he will simply forbid you to believe in the pain, and you will be as though there were none."

She is enthusiastic, this friend of mine, though she drops her creeds and breaks her idols with as much facility as she takes them up and sets them on pedestals. So she wanted to take me off at once to this faith-healer, or whatever he calls himself.

But, do you know, Amy, I preferred the rheumatism to the cure! The idea of any man, or woman either, obtaining complete control over my mind, my emotions, and my beliefs, offered no charms, but very much the reverse.

Shortly after, a very old friend, contemporaneous with Aunts Tabitha and Jemima, called in, and after chatting awhile, noticed that I uttered a small shriek, when, forgetting my ailments, I stretched my arm back. "I'll cure you in an hour," she said, when I told her what was wrong. And so she did. You would never guess how. She laid a piece of brown paper, folded in two, on the exact spot where I felt pain, and ironed it lightly with a flat iron, not too hot, till the skin was bright red. In two hours there was hardly any pain left.

It was only a trivial little attack, but the point of the matter lies in the contrast between the new and the old remedies.

Are you not glad that skirts are to be so much narrower? I am delighted, though I hope fashion will not force us to have them too clingy. It is not so very long ago that we were wearing them so tight that when the wind blew our knees were almost fastened together with the swirl of woollen gowns. But what a change the sheath-like costume will be, will it not?

Lady Marcus Beresford is the special friend of cats. She has built stables for the accommodation of her own fifteen beauties at Englefield Green, Windsor Park. They are chiefly orange-coloured Persians, and I well remember her devotion to them and their affection for her at the cat show in Holland Park.

By the way, I wonder how the Ladies' Kennel Association is getting on? The last I heard about it was the resignation of the Secretary, Mrs. Stennard Robinson, because some paper had accused her of using slang terms. But we all do. Do we not? This is an age of slang, and even if we wish to avoid it, the misfortune is that it is often so very graphic and so exactly fitted to what we wish to express. This makes it extremely difficult to resist.

What equivalent, for instance, could we find for "duffer"? "He's a duffer" conveys an idea that would have to be expressed in a very roundabout of dictionary English. "He mulled it" is another useful phrase.

The explosion of the electric light at Vere-street did not surprise us. We fully expect that there will be some terrible catastrophe before very long. When the workmen laid down fresh coils in front of our house, some months ago, we had opportunities of observing their doings. They spent most of their time leaning on their spades and commenting on the passers-by, to some of whom they shouted rude remarks. There was no overseer or superintendent. Among the labourers there may or may not have been an expert under whose direction the others were working, but, so far as we could see, they were all muddling along together.

A week after they had finished, we became aware of a shocking smell of gas in our front hall, and employed two different sets of men to try to discover the escape. They both failed. Then Richard bethought him of the electric light workmen, and sent round to the Gas Company, asking them to investigate their pipes at our front door. They did so, and found the ground full of gas for yards.

It seems such a bad arrangement to have the gas pipes and the electric wires laid side by side, to say nothing of the possibilities of injury from the carelessness of men of rival companies working every now and then at each light, without any one to prevent them from negligently treating the channels through which the other is conveyed to the houses of consumers.

Mr. "Algy" Bourke's varied experiences in the catering line have rendered him highly useful to Li Chung Tong, for whose establishment in Carlton House-terrace he has done all the provisioning since the Chinese Viceroy settled himself there in the beginning of his stay in town. As manager of "White's," the Hon. "Algy" might not have had time to place his services at the disposal of the foreign visitor, but the Club was opportunely closed for repairs. The chef, M. Lemaire, took up his abode with some of his staff at Carlton House-terrace, and the English and native cooks worked most harmoniously together. How the former liked the Viceroy's early hours does not transpire. The result of the arrangement ought to be a distinct addition to our culinary lore, and it is just possible that even so conservative a country as China might adopt a hint or two from European modes. It is doubtful, however, if we should ever learn to enjoy such a dish as shrimps and prawns stewed with leeks and grapes!

Kidneys stewed in cream might be rather nice, even though they are pigs'. Fat pork sauté with peas and kidney beans is a little "tall" for this hot weather. But then, was it not of the Chinese that Charles Lamb wrote his famous account of how they burned their houses down in order "accidentally" to enjoy the flavour of roast pig?

A friend writes praising Paris-Plage, a little seaside place close to Boulogne, so we are going to include it in our small trip at the end of this month. Richard wants, if possible, to get as far as Ushant. An acquaintance of his was on board the ill-fated Drummond Castle that was wrecked there, and Richard, in whom unexpected streaks of sentiment are occasionally observable, wishes to visit the spot.

As for me, I never yearn after anything connected with the tragic side of life.

Fancy all those crowds of people visiting the Novelty Theatre the night after that most tragic accident! We all agreed that Miss Lawrence showed commendable taste in cutting out the stabbing scene, and the more so as she probably went against her own interests by doing so. No doubt, crowded audiences would have assembled in order to gloat over the scene which had proved so fatal.

Have you had your first brace of grouse yet? You must try this recipe for serving grouse in gravy:—

When the birds are dressed and ready for roasting cut them into neat joints. Put them into a stewpan with a little melted bacon, and set it over a brisk fire. Cook for five minutes, then pour into the pan a wineglassful of good brandy, and allow it to remain over the fire until the flame goes out of itself. Then throw into the stewpan 6 skinned mushrooms and 1 sliced parboiled truffle; add to these a half pint of good gravy. Set the pan over a moderate fire. When all is cooked and ready remove every particle of fat, stir in the juice of a lemon and a dash of cayenne. Place the joints of the birds in the centre of the dish, with the truffle and mushrooms around. Serve very hot.

Pigeon fritters make a pleasant change:—

Let a pair of pigeons be ready dressed, then blanch them. Slit them down the back, cut off the heads and feet. Take a small stewpan, lay in slices of bacon, then the four halves of the pigeons seasoned with pepper, salt, sweet herbs, and fine spice. Now cover with slices of bacon and lemon. Pour into the pan a wineglassful of white wine, put on the lid, and set them to stew. When the birds are half done, take up, and fill each half with rich forcemeat. Make a batter with flour, pepper, and 2 eggs well beaten, then add a wineglassful of sherry and a tablespoonful of oil. Dip the pigeon into the batter but keep the forcemeat in its place, then fry a golden-brown colour. Serve hot upon a napkin, garnished with fried parsley.

Dyspepsia.

(A FEW WORDS TO THOSE WHO CAN READ AND THINK.)

Undoubtedly the most prevalent Disease in all Civilised Communities at the present day is Disordered Digestion. It affects every class, and there is not a Hamlet, nay, scarcely a Household, that does not number some Victim of Dyspepsia amongst its members.

In addition to Loss of Appetite, Pain after Eating, Heartburn, Flatulence, Constipation alternating with Diarrhœa and other Functional Disturbances—long-continued Dyspepsia powerfully affects the Nervous, Respiratory, and Circulatory Systems. The action of the Skin is disturbed and liable to various Eruptions, and the general Nutrition suffers as shown by the Emaciation and Anæmia.

Happily there is a remedy, prompt, certain, and permanent for this widespread evil—a Remedy which, owing to its own intrinsic value and private and Professional recommendation, is now a household word wherever the English Tongue is spoken. This Preparation is Guy's Tonic.

Read what a Hospital Matron thinks of this renowned Medicine:—

"Stow-on-the-Wold, Gloucester,
June 25th, 1896.

"Please accept my sincere thanks for the Two Bottles of Guy's "Tonic which I received from you this Morning. I cannot speak "too highly of it—it has done me more good than anything else I "have yet tried. I have been seen by Three Doctors, and have "followed their Treatment for nearly Twelve Months. I was very "ill the early part of this Year, and was obliged to give up my work "to see what Rest and Change would do. My post as Hospital "Matron is rather trying. Meals are sometimes irregular, and Rest "is often disturbed. I was for a long time treated for Anæmia, and "took Iron in various forms. I believe my trouble was entirely due "to the Stomach and Digestive Organs. I hope soon to be able "to return to my work, and will do my best to make Guy's Tonic "known. I think Dyspepsia is peculiarly prevalent amongst Hospital "Nurses, whose meals are often taken hurriedly and sometimes "irregularly. Again thanking you for your kindness,

Guy's Tonic is sold by Chemists and Stores throughout the World. Guy's Tonic is now employed in Hospital Practice, and is widely recommended by Medical Men.

Chatto & Windus's New Books.

Dr. Rumsey's Patient. By Mrs. L. T. Meade and Clifford Halifax, M.D. On Sept. 1. Crown 8vo, cloth extra, gilt top, 6s.

Revenge. By Robert Barr, Author of "A Woman Intervenes." With 12 Illustrations by Lancelot Speed, G. Manton, and Stanley Wood. On Sept. 10. Crown 8vo, cloth extra, gilt top, 6s.

Personal Recollections of Joan of Arc. By Mark Twain. With 12 Illustrations by F. V. Du Mond. Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.

"We close his book with an impression of profound pity, of ever-recurring mystery. So fine is the scheme as a whole, that all the irritating anachronisms are speedily forgotten. . . . . We agree with the critic's verdict that the creator of Tom Sawyer is something far more than a mere man of letters, even a great one; he is something far more than a mere humorist, even a thoroughly genial and whole-souled one—he is a great writer. Like Balzac himself, he can afford to let the critcs have their say about his style, in the consciousness that he has understood and expressed the workings of the human heart."—Daily Chronicle.

Jerry the Dreamer. By Will Payne. On Sept. 3. Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d.

An Easy-going Fellow. By C. J. Wills, Author of "The Pit-Town Coronet." Crown 8vo, cloth extra, gilt top, 6s.

"This is a distinctly clever story. . . . The plot is original, the style easy and pleasant, the characters well drawn, with light touches of humour, keen insight into human nature, and pathos true and unforced. The novel will be widely read and warmly appreciated."—Pall Mall Gazette.

NOW FIRST COLLECTED INTO ONE VOLUME. Shortly. Crown 8vo, cloth, with Frontispiece, 3s. 6d.

Devil's Ford, &c. By Bret Harte. The Volume will contain:—Devil's Ford—A Millionaire of Rough and Ready—Snowbound at Eagle's.

Two Masters. By B. M. Croker, Author of "Pretty Miss Neville," &c. Immediately. NEW EDITION. Crown 8vo, cloth extra, 3s. 6d.

Rome. By Émile Zola. Translated by Ernest A. Vizetelly. Crown 8vo, cloth extra, 3s. 6d.

"As wonderfully graphic and realistic as the author's description of the Pyreneean shrine, Lourdes. . . . Rome affords M. Zola a splendid field, bringing out his highest powers. . . . . The merit of the work is its amazing quality. As Flaubert's 'Salammbo' impressed by its wonderful erudition, so does Zola's 'Rome.'"—Graphic.

Tales of Our Coast. By S. R. Crockett, Gilbert Parker, Harold Frederic, W. Clark Russell, and "Q." With 13 Illustrations by F. Brangwyn. Crown 8vo, cloth extra, 3s. 6d.

"'Tales of Our Coast' cannot possibly attain a greater popularity than they deserve. The book is good from beginning to end; and there is one contribution to the collection which might almost, if not certainly, be pronounced the best short story that has been given to the reading public during the past half-dozen years. . . . . No praise can be too high for it. It is a gem."—Daily Mail.

Doris and I, and other stories. By John Stafford. Crown 8vo, cloth extra, 3s. 6d.

"An exquisitely written volume of short stories, which it is a delight to read for the style alone. The style, indeed, is so tender, and the tales are so pathetic, that the effect is like that of moonlight upon ruins, or of moonlight shining through the painted windows described in one of these idylls."—Truth.

This Stage of Fools. By Leonard Merrick, Author of "The Man who was Good." Crown 8vo, cloth extra, 3s. 6d.

"Mr. Leonard Merrick is an accomplished story-teller. His work has enough of the literary quality to satisfy the critical reader, and more than enough exhilarating vivacity, naturalness, and tenderness to charm all readers whatsoever."—Daily Mail.

Songs of Travel. By Robert Louis Stevenson. Edited by Sidney Colvin. Immediately. Crown 8vo, buckram, gilt top, 5s.

Travel and Talk. By the Rev. H. R. Haweis, M.A. With 2 Photogravure Portraits. Two Vols., crown 8vo, cloth, 21s.

"Among ecclesiastics at large there are few more agreeable than Mr. Haweis, and in 'Travel and Talk' we have his lively impressions of men and manners, places and people, up and down the globe. These two volumes represent ten years of wandering and of platform and pulpit experiences in the United States, Canada, Australia, New Zealand, Tasmania, Ceylon, and the 'Paradises of the Pacific.' Let us say at once that it is the kind of book which on one page or another appeals to every man's mood and most women's curiosity. . . . Mr. Haweis is a genuine egotist who loves to talk about himself, and generally contrives to do so in a pithy, picturesque manner, and, what is more, with sense and sensibility."—Speaker.

Kingsclere. By John Porter. Edited by Byron Webber. With 19 full-page and numerous smaller Illustrations. Second Edition, Demy 8vo, cloth decorated, 18s.

"The national love for the horse and his doings never found a more appropriate or attractive form than in the chronicle of the famous Kingsclere stable, which, as we are told, promises to become one of the books of the season; and there are many things in the book which even the most outside of lay readers cannot fail to appreciate, enjoy."—Spectator.

The Hastings Chess Tournament, Aug.-Sept., 1895.

With Annotations by Pillsbury, Lasker, Tarrasch, Steinitz, Schiffers, Teichmann, Bardeleben, Blackburne, Gunsberg, Tinsley, Mason, and Albin; Biographical Sketches and 22 Portraits. Crown 8vo, cloth extra, coloured top, 7s. 6d.

"The whole volume forms a feast which all chess players will appreciate, and the book will be indispensable to every chess student."—Times.

Famous Violinists and Fine Violins: Historical Notes, Anecdotes, an Reminiscences. By Dr. T. L. Phipson. Crown 8vo, art canvas, gilt top, 5s.

"In this neat volume we have one of the brightest and most enjoyably chatty books yet published on this subject. . . . . Something of the kind has been attempted before, but nothing that has shown so much pains and research; and nothing that bears such an impress that it was a labour of love."—Tablet.

A Manual of Mending and Repairing. By Charles Godfrey Leland. With Illustrative Diagrams. Crown 8vo, cloth extra, 5s.

"It is more difficult to mend than to break; but to those who can imbibe any portion of Mr. Leland's enthusiasm for the art, it should be almost as amusing. . . . . It is one of those books which no household should be without."—Scotsman.

PROSPECTUS.

This Company is formed to acquire and work the Gold Mining Lease No. 480 E, known as the "Mona," situate at Broad Arrow, Western Australia, consisting of twelve acres. The property was originally brought under the notice of the Gold Lands Corporation, Limited, by their own special representative upon the fields, Mr. J. J. O'Brien, C.E. and M.E., who thinks most highly of it, and upon whose report, confirmed by the opinions of Captain Hambly (Manager of the Arrow Proprietary), a report from whom is given below, and the Hon. Henry J. Saunders, the directors have no hesitation in offering the property to investors. The following is an extract from the report received from Mr. O'Brien by the Hon. Henry J. Saunders, who represents the Gold Lands Corporation, Limited, in Western Australia :—

REPORTS ON THE "MONA" MINE, LEASE 480E, BROAD ARROW.
Coolgardie, April 21st, 1896.

Hon. H. J. Saunders, Perth.
Dear Sir,—

I have great pleasure in bringing the above-named property under your immediate notice, as it comes nearer to my standard of quality and price than anything I have met with for a long time.

The lease referred to is situated 2½ to 3 miles south-east of the town of Broad Arrow, and about 35 miles north-east o fCoolgardie.

It comprises 12 acres, and is bounded on the east by the Paris, on the west by the Mona Extended, on the south by the Minnie Palmer, and on the north by the Arrow Proprietary.

It is distant from the very rich mine known as the Pakeha about 16 or 18 chains, and the other properties mentioned are also very desirable neighbours. This lease has a considerable amount of development work done.

There are four shafts, varying in depth from 85 ft. to 35 ft. besides several small costeens or holes from each and all of which very good prospects can be obtained by "dollying" and pan-assay, and in every working I inspected gold could be seen in the stone by the naked eye.

The owners (two in number) meet their current expenses by dollying the choicest of the stone. They showed me two samples in bottles of several ounces of coarse and fine gold obtained by their simple process.

There are four reefs running parallel with each other, trending N.N.E. and S.S.W. throughout the greatest length of the property, varying in thickness from 3 to 12 ft., and slightly dipping to the east.

You will see by the Assay Certificate which I enclose that No. 33 gave 1 oz. 10 dwt. 20 gr. This was a mixed sample taken from different parts of the Western Reef.

No. 34 from different parts of the two middle reefs gave the grand result of 2[illegible] oz. 15 dwt. 8 gr.

The result of No. 35, viz., 6 dwt. 14 gr., is very satisfactory, as it is taken from a very large ironstone lode, 10 ft. to 12 ft. thick, on the eastern side of the lease, and wholly dipping into it.

I have no doubt this great ironstone lode will improve at a depth. It protrudes above the surface, and some of it is light and gossan-like, indicating that gold has probably been shed from it.

At various places on the surface of this Lease very good alluvial gold has been obtained by "Dry-blowers."

This is a really good battery show of 2 oz. to 4 oz. all through, and is situated in one of the best districts.

There is an abundance of timber, and plenty of water may be obtained by sinking or by conservation.

. . . . . .

Trusting it may meet with your approval, I can safely recommend it.—Yours faithfully, (Signed) J. J. O'BRIEN, C.E. and M.E.

Arrow Proprietary Gold Mines, Limited,
Broad Arrow, W.A., June 11th, 1896.

Hon. H. J. Saunders, M.L.C.,
Attorney for the Gold Lands Corporation,
Limited, Perth, W.A.

Sir,—Pursuant to your request, I have this day inspected the Mona Gold Mining Lease, and beg to make the following observations respecting it :—

Name—"Mona," Number 480E.

SITUATION.—This lease is situated at Smithfield, Broad Arrow, and in the celebrated belt of the latter place. Area of Property, 12 acres; held and secured under the laws and regulations of the Gold Fields of Western Australia. This property is bounded on the East by the Paris G. M. Co. ; on the West by the Mona Extended, Rosebery, Durham, &c. ; on the South by the Minnie Palmer, and on the North by the Arrow Proprietary, Paddington Consols, &c.

LODES.—There are several traversing the entire length of property, but operations have been confined to three only, and for your better guidance of this lease and lodes, I enclose a rough sketch plan, showing position of claims, and run of some of the lodes of the mines under my management, viz., "Arrow Proprietary."

DEVELOPMENTS.—In the most southerly point and within 100 yards of the Minnie Palmer, a costeen pit is made on the back of lode, which is over 4 ft. wide, composed of quartry and lithomarge, and by pan assay producing 1¼ oz. of gold per ton of stuff. The object of this test pit was to open on and trace the Minnie Palmer lode ; this done, a shaft was commenced 67 yards north of same, and sunk vertical 50 ft. At this point the lode was intersected, and sunk on its line for 20 ft. The lode, for depth sunk, maintains its size, which is 4 ft. in width, but a change for the better in character, composition, and yield. Sample taken indiscriminately from 25 tons of stuff stacked at the surface assayed by pan 1¾ oz. per ton of very fine or flour gold.

No. 2 SHAFT.—This shaft is sunk 30 yards north of No. 1, and now down to a depth of 40 ft. Operations here were confined to the underlie of the lode which is slightly east. In carrying out this work about 40 tons of stuff are stacked at surface, from which I took a fair sample, assaying 2½ oz. per ton.

No. 3 SHAFT.—This shaft is sunk 60 ft. perpendicular, and the lode just intersected in the bottom of same, but the little work done on it I should say was not because of its character and general make-up, but for the want of funds on the part of the prospectors. In a pit 30 ft. south of this shaft the lode shows great strength, being over 6 ft. wide ; its bearing or strike is much greater than the other lodes to the west of north.

No. 4 SHAFT.—This shaft is about 180 yards north of No. 3 Shaft, and is sunk perpendicular to the 80 ft. level. At this point a lode is met with, producing a little gold, but in the judgment of the present operators the great lode running through the Gaul portion of the Arrow Proprietary Company Claims is to the west of this ; and I quite agree with them in this respect, and strongly recommend the continuation of the present cross-cut west, which is now driven about 100 ft. at a distance from shaft of 80 ft. ; a portion of a lode was passed through for 7 ft. in width, but the lode referred to in the adjoining property is 30 ft. wide. It is to be hoped a lode of similar worth and size will be also met with here.

No. 5 SHAFT.—This shaft is situated 33 yards west and 40 yards north of No. 4 Shaft and sunk to a depth in a perpendicular lode varying from 2 to 3½ ft. in width ; this lode carries visible gold. At times rich deposits were met with by the prospectors. The sample which I took from the heap at surface produced 7 oz. of gold per ton. At the bottom of this shaft a cross-cut is driven east about 50 ft., and a lode about 4 ft. wide passed through, composed of ferruginous quartz and gossan ; sample taken from stuff broken gave, by pan assay, 1½ oz. per ton.

I like the appearance of this lode, and would recommend its being vigorously developed.

The foregoing remarks comprise all the work of any consequence done on the property, and is rather more than is generally done by prospectors, whose means as a rule are very limited, but in this case the yield from these lodes kept them and helped them to develop certain portions of the lease as it is.

WATER.—In the Arrow Proprietary we met with water at 105 ft., and seeing that the shaft is only about 300 yards from your boundary, I should say you would meet with it at a similar depth.

TIMBER.—On this lease is abundance for most of the mine's requirements.

In conclusion, I would like to say the lodes operated on in your property are compact and of a very kindly nature, some of which are permeated with iron, closely resembling the same lodes in adjoining properties ; and from the favourable position of the Mine with regard to other proved mines, the amount of work done to develop it, the size of the lodes, and the cheapness with which it can be worked, warrants my saying you have a property which will, with economical and judicious management and the necessary machinery, pay a good profit on the money invested, and I can strongly recommend it as a sound investment.

I am, Sir, your obedient servant,
WM. HAMBLY, M.E.
Manager, Arrow Proprietary Gold Mines.

The following is the translation of a cable received from the Hon. Henry J. Saunders (the words in brackets being inserted on translation) :—
19th June, 1896.

"(To) GOLD LANDS (CORPORATION, LIMITED).

"Captain Hambly, Manager, Arrow Proprietary, reports :—MONA—Several reefs traversing the entire length property.—Developments—(a) costeen pit (has been) sunk to the south. The width of reef is 4 ft. Sample assaying 30 dwt. per ton. 200 ft. to the north, shaft has reached a depth of 50 (ft.); the width of the reef is 4 ft. down to the bottom of the shaft. 25 tons stacked (assays from which show) 35 dwt. per ton. 90 ft. to the north, shaft has reached a depth of 40 ft. 40 tons stacked, assaying 2 oz. 10 dwt. per ton. No. 3 Shaft has reached a depth of 60 ft. Lode shows great strength. No. 4 Shaft has reached a depth of 80 ft. Have driven crosscut 100 ft., passing through lode 7 ft. wide. No. 5 Shaft has reached depth of 30 ft. Carries visible gold. Sample from stack assaying 7 oz. per ton. Water plentiful. Plentiful supply of timber."

The Hon. Henry J. Saunders adds in the above cable :—

"I consider the Mine a good investment and a very profitable undertaking."

Mr. J. J. O'Brien reports by telegraph under date June 22nd, as follows :—

"'Mona'—Since last report had cut large black soft lode ; assays 6 dwt. per ton—of great value on account of its bulk."

The Vendors, the Gold Lands Corporation, Limited, have fixed the price to be paid for the property at £50,000, payable as follows :—£25,000 in cash, and £25,000 in cash or fully-paid shares, or partly in cash and partly in fully-paid shares. Mr. Girdwood, being Managing Director of Gold Lands Corporation, Limited, is interested in the sale.

Twenty-five thousand shares are appropriated for subscription for providing working capital, this amount being considered ample.

The Vendors will pay all the expenses of the formation and promotion of the Company up to the first allotment of shares.

The following contracts have been entered into :—An Agreement dated the 5th day of May, 1896, between Allan Stewart Allison and Richard Jones Pughe, and John Joseph O'Brien (Agent for the Vendors), and an Agreement dated the 29th day of June, 1896, between the Gold Lands Corporation Limited, of the one part, and Cecil Patey, as Trustee for the Company, of the other part.

Agreements and arrangements have been and may be entered into with third parties as to the promotion of the Company, and the subscription of a portion of its capital, to none of which the Company is a party, and applicants for shares will be deemed to have had notice of the contents of these, and to have waived their right, if any, to particulars thereof, whether under Section 38 of the Companies Act, 1867, or otherwise.

Copies of the Report and Contract above particularised, together with the Memorandum and Articles of Association, are open to the inspection of intending subscribers at the Offices of the Solicitors.

Applications for Shares should be made on the form accompanying the Prospectus, and forwarded to the Company's Bankers, together with a remittance for the amount payable on application.

In cases where no allotment is made the amount deposited on application will be returned at once without deduction. If the number of Shares allotted be less than that applied for, the surplus will be credited in reduction of the payment on allotment ; any balance will be returned.

Prospectuses and forms of application may be obtained from the Bankers, Solicitors, and Brokers, and at the Offices of the Company.

CONDENSED RULES.

All answers to the current Puzzle must be sent in on or before the morning of the Monday week following the date of that Puzzle's publication, to the Puzzle Editor, Truth Buildings, Carteret-street, Queen Anne's-gate, London, S.W. The answers must be signed by a nom de plume of not more than twelve letters, and must not be sent on post-cards, nor by telegraph, nor by hand; whilst in the case of new competitors the real name and address must be forwarded with the first reply sent.

"TRUTH" PUZZLE, No. 917.

It has been repeatedly proved in these pages that Shakespeare had a kind of instinctive acquaintance with most of the inventions and discoveries that now occupy the attention of the public. Let us, then, test the Bard's omniscience once more by offering the usual prize of Two Guineas this week to the competitor who sends

THE BEST QUOTATION, NOT EXCEEDING FOUR LINES IN LENGTH, TENDING TO SUGGEST THAT SHAKESPEARE HAD AN ANTICIPATORY KNOWLEDGE OF THE MOTOR CAR OR HORSELESS CARRIAGE.

Of course the quotations will have to be taken verbatim from some part of Shakespeare's works. Competitors may send more than one quotation if they please, but all their answers must reach me by the morning of Monday, August 31 at the latest.

"TRUTH" PUZZLE, No. 913.

The Prize in this Competition has been divided between Godfather, and Almaviva, whose "Hunting Songs of the Future" appeared in Truth for August 13.

I would at the same time specially commend the Songs received from Christie Dean, Baritone, Vox, Oom Paul, Georgina, La Plata, Antelope, Dodo, K. W., Nitram, and Stephanotis.

Answers to Correspondents.

 The real name, with the address, of Carfex, winner of Prize No. 909, is J. A. Cassels, Esq., 62, Buchanan-street, Glasgow.

Stephanotis.—Your correction reached me in due course. I regret that I was unable to find space to print your clever lines.

Hibernian.—Many thanks for your suggestion of a subject suitable for competition.

Mona.—Your suggestion that "Should we take things easy?" would be a good subject for discussion during the Silly Season, failed to reach me. I am sorry you do not see the point of the selected name.

Rugeley, H. P. D., and Lily.—Your descriptions of "Cycling Tours" arrived a day too late to be printed with the others.

Theology.—I fear that the subject you suggest would not meet with general approval.

Arch. Gibbs.—Thanks for your postcard. I think your criticism is in part well directed.

Desmotropy.—I am much obliged to you for your suggestion, though I fear it would make a rather too difficult competition.

E. Graham.—Your proposal is certainly an original one, and I have made a note of it for future use.

Master Gunner, Theology, and Box.—By an oversight, which I regret, the acknowledgment of your "Hunting Songs of the Future" was omitted last week.

THE PUZZLE EDITOR.

"TRUTH" PUZZLE, No. 914.—ASSORTED SPECIMENS—GOOD AND OTHERWISE.

SUGGESTIONS AS TO HOW THE SIXTIETH YEAR OF THE QUEEN'S REIGN MAY BE MOST SUITABLY CELEBRATED.

1. To raise a capital sum so that the interest of which would give "the poor and sickly London children" a fortnight or three weeks at the sea. 2. To establish a "home" in some healthy place in the centre of England for our neglected soldiers and sailors so that they would not have to end their days in the workhouse.—Hibernian.

The building of a palace where foreign crowned heads could be royally lodged when visiting London. Rebuilding Kensington Palace for the above purpose, as it is so closely associated with the youthful days of the Queen.—Rasana Arrange some function in which women would be the principal performers. Assuming female costume to change materially every ten years, I suggest a grand review in Hyde Park of 6,000 ladies, forming six regiments, respectively representing the six decades of her Majesty's reign. Ladies of each regiment need not dress exactly alike, but must conform to the characteristic costume of the decade. Each regiment would have its band and banner, with appropriate motto; e.g., the crinoline regiment would remind us, with mournful music, that 40,000 women were martyrs to that odious fashion. Such a review—novel and intrinsically interesting—would tend to decide which decade of costume was most becoming and should be permanent if women (by refusing to go into uniform at the command of some irresponsible autocrat of fashion) ever cease to exemplify Virgil's description—"Varium et mutabile semper fœmina."—J. McGrigor Allan.

The Church's part.—A special thanksgiving service, without an offertory, at a time when the people can attend. The State's part.—Remit the income tax on incomes below £300 a year, and give 5s. to every poor person above 60 years of age to provide a good square meal on the Sunday following September 23. The Queen's part.—To open the doors of the prisons for all criminals committed for one year or less, and to provide at a nominal cost, a medal for all Board and National school children and workhouse children; to give 1 lb. of tea to all the workhouse paupers, and medals to all soldiers, sailors, hospital and convalescent patients.—Dorset.

By the subsidising of Elementary schools to the end that the German language may be efficiently taught therein.—W. G. B.

For the Queen to abdicate in her son's favour.—Krakatoa.

The Queen to give to her people Buckingham Palace-gardens, "with necessary reservations." Her people all to contribute towards the re-arrangement of the grounds, making them beautiful, and a storehouse of everything that can go towards the commemoration of her sixty years reign. So that the rounds would be a grand historical memorial, and contain all that is best to remember of her reign symbolised in every possible way. A store garden of delight to future generations.—Eve

1. Endow an In Memoriam bed in each of the hospitals. 2. Raise the value of all the small livings in England and Wales to £200 per annum. 3. Provide summer clothing for policemen, soldiers, and railway porters.—Qu'Appelle.

1. The renovation of the interior of Westminster Abbey, the side chapels of which are in a very neglected condition. 2. The making of some good thoroughfares in London, running north and south, corresponding to those running east and west, to be named Avenue Victoria and Queen's Avenue. This would be a great convenience, though a very costly affair.—Excelsior.

For the Queen to abdicate in favour of the Prince of Wales.—Jeff.

1. That the Queen should formally appoint the Prince of Wales her deputy, to assist in all public functions, the Queen making him a liberal allowance from her own income. 2. That a feast should be provided for all in workhouses, orphanages, asylums, hospitals, and prisons, and as many of the poor and homeless as can be reached.—Esperanza.

Abolish the monarchy and proclaim a republic.—H. E. G.

By the organisation of the life-boat system of the British Isles, under Governmental support and direction.—Mismol.

1. To issue to soldiers half-fare railway tickets for any period (long or short) for any distance over twenty miles. 2. To rise a private soldier's pay to one shilling per day clear.—P. J. M.

1. Abdicate. 2. Proclaim a "British Republic." 3. Disestablish the State Church. 4. Close the House of Lords.—Theology.

House of Lords, usually picture of inertness' might transform picture and produce pleasing transformation scene by transforming for a week or so hereditary chamber into palace of varieties. A series of popular entertainments given personally by our own hereditary legislators in their own hereditary sanctum would command general approbation, confer general satisfaction, demonstrate that peer-age need not necessarily mean sere-age, and should produce such a goodly "pile" as would form the handsome nucleus for building fund of a yet handsomer pile to be called "Sex-Sepogenarian Jubilee Hospital."—Stephanotis.

Provide a country holiday for all the poor children in London, and other towns. This could be carried out by each town being divided into districts, each district having its own committee, who would receive all subscriptions, select the place for the day's outing, and carry out all details. The accounts of each committee would be audited, and any cash not expended to be handed over to the various hospitals and unions for the entertainment of the children of these institutions. I feel sure that a good sum could be collected if it was well advertised.—Luxor.

1. Celebrate sex-a-gerant teas, at which all women whose marriage (induction into government) took place sixty years ago, or more, will be fêted by the rest of the community. 2. A public subscription to provide annuities of equal amount to all women of the three Kingdoms who, having attained to the Queen's age, will accept them. 3. Adopt the French custom of doffing hats to all women of our acquaintance, and so do homage to the Queen's sex, irrespective of social position. 4. Let men, recognising the divided authority once solely theirs, acquiesce in the general adoption by women of that divided garment the wearing of which, having lost its cherished significance, will better symbolise the altered state of things. 5. Enrol women (as volunteers) in arms. 6. Establish municipal drawing-rooms, where all women may "Queen" it, according to ability. 7. Finally, for the advancement of the sex, introduce two, or more, shifts into domestic service, and so popularise it. (N.B.—This is not a lingerie proposition.)—Nitram.

1. An amnesty for the Irish political prisoners. 2. A free national boarding school under the patronage of the Queen for the maintenance and education of poor children. To be undenominational, endowed with an annual Imperial subsidy, and assisted by voluntary subscriptions. — Common Sense.

May it please her Majesty to abdicate in favour of a deservedly popular Prince in celebration of the sixtieth anniversary of her glorious and happy reign.—Pigtail.

A collection to be made in the homes of each of the Queen's children and grandchildren (and in other mansions and palaces whose inmates may be wishful to contribute), to be called "The Royal Thank-offering," and to be distributed in the cities and towns of England among—

"The homeless girls whose fingers thin Push from them, daily, want and sin."— Rugeley.

The building of a hospital in London or elsewhere which shall be known by the name of "The Victoria," or some other name having reference to the Queen. The expenses of building to be met by donations, the annual expenses by the subscriptions of subscribers who shall be enrolled in a society under the name of "The Victorian Hospitallers," or some more appropriate name. The rules of the society to contain the following:—1. Each member engages to either pay his annual subscription for life or to get some one enrolled in his stead who will pay the subscription. 2. In case of the death of one of the members, another to be appointed in accordance with the rules drawn up by the committee. 3. The number of members of this society never to be allowed to get below the original number.—Miserrimus.

1. The Queen to graciously abdicate the throne in favour of H.R.H. the Prince of Wales. A grand coronation at Westminster Abbey; the procession going to and fro in full state. A monster fête to take place in Hyde Park; limited refreshments to be supplied by tickets provided either by Government or Crown. The park to be well illuminated at night with a good display of fireworks. Also a really clever statue of the Queen, to be subscribed for by the nation and placed opposite Buckingham Palace amid artistic fountains. 2. State prizes to be given for competition in poetry, music, painting, statuary and inventions; the winners to be crowned with laurels during the afternoon by the Queen. 3. Similar fetes to be arranged throughout the British nation.—Pan.

An establishment of old age pensions. Donations from all sorts and conditions of men, together with a sum voted by Parliament, would form the capital. The income derived from this sum, together with an annual amount voted by Parliament and provided for in each year's Budget, to be applied in pensions for the deserving, aged poor. I would, moreover, by inviting colonial co-operation, make the scheme an Imperial one. Imagine each subject of the Empire, in every part of the globe, able to count upon an old age secure from want! It sounds too good to be possible. Could the greatest of English Sovereigns have a more magnificent memorial?—In Hoc Signo.

The most rational way of celebrating her Majesty's sixtieth year of reign would be for the nation, through its representatives, &c., to present her with an artistically illuminated figuration of the amount of money uselessly spent upon and in connection with English Royalty during the sixty years of her illustrious reign. As the direct monetary grants, allowances, &c., come to about a million per annum, this item would multiply up to about £60,000,000; and the indirect expenditure connected with Royalty, such as preparations for receptions, pageantries, banquettings, "toastings," &c., would no doubt tot up, in the time, to an additional £40,000,000. The total would thus come to the tidy bagatelle of £100,090,000! spent without absolutely any useful or necessary service in return! Some relevant and interesting statistical legends might also be inscrolled underneath, such as the number of years it would take a man to count this sum of money in sovereigns, the extent of cubical space it would require to contain it, &c. She should then be respectfully, but firmly, asked to resign, the Prince of Wales being appointed as King-President at an adequate and generous salary of, say, £30,000 to £50,000 per annum. All the rest of the "Royalties" should live on the vast hoards accumulated during the past—that is if, in justice, they would not be required to restore a considerable part of them to the commercial and industrial community, from which they were filched. This would be the most complimentary method of signalising the approaching epoch, as it would prove that her reign at long last produced subjects with a modicum of commonsense, and the consistency to act accordingly.—Shamrock.

By an international exhibition.—Tutte-frutte.

That each family or individual in the United Kingdom should give sixty coins of the realm, from farthings to pounds, to form a fund for the relief of the deserving unemployed and destitute amongst Her Majesty's subjects—to be called the Victorian Sixtieth Anniversary Fund.—Clear.

To celebrate the Queen's sixtieth year of reigning institute decimal coinage, and include two gold coins, one value 50s. to be called a Jubilee, one of 60s. to be called a Reine or Reign. The former coin would be of more practical use than the £2 piece, and the "Reign" would be valued as a memorial, if not so useful for general circulation.—Woodhurst.

By giving Home Rule to Ireland—of course with certain restrictions.—Pelican.

By giving a free pardon to all political prisoners, and ditto to all poor women imprisoned for infanticide.—Bunny's Mama.

Let her Majesty's lieges throughout Great Britain and the colonies contribute, according to their means, money and books, to establish public libraries wherever possible, to further the enlightenment attained during her reign.—A. E. L.

The Queen as a thankoffering for her long and glorious reign should give a sum of money for each year she has occupied the Throne, and the total amount should be given to the London Hospitals in such number and in such proportions as Her Majesty may herself determine.—Spencer.

1. The abolition of the Income Tax. 2. A National Institution and Fund for the benefit of widows and orphans of soldiers and sailors. 3. Release of all political prisoners, and prisoners undergoing punishment for first offences.—Georgina.

A series of bonfires to be prepared, each visible from the next, and extending from end to end of the kingdom. The first of the series to be lit by, or on behalf of, Her Majesty, close to her residence at the date, the rest to be lit as seen in succession. In any districts affected by thick fog at the time, the succession to be assured by rockets or telegraph. The order may be reversed, or more than one starting point arranged if considered best —Cartoon.

The granting of a generous measure of enfranchisement to the people of India—i.e., either by allowing them to elect a parliament of their own under needful restrictions, or by giving them direct and adequate representation in the British Parliament.—Metchley.

Let the Queen and the Prince of Wales or the Prince of Wales and the Duke of York visit Ireland. —Si je Puis.

The establishment of a Victoria Bureau of Universal Information, to which all classes of her Majesty's subjects, under all circumstances, may apply and obtain free the best advice which it is possible human wisdom can bestow. Its committee to be sole arbitrators in all matters of dispute. To be supported by a tax (a most necessary one) of 21s. annually on cycles. The foundation of this Bureau (to be connected by telephone with offices in every town) would alone effect a saving annually in litigation of £500,000.—Nemesis.

The abolition of the top hat.—Almaviva.

Formation of a national council for arbitration and settlement of all trade disputes.—Bo-peep.

1. An annual day of self-denial. Every person to sacrifice a day's income, and form a superannuation fund (with a suitable name) so that all of good character, on attaining the age of sixty, shall be entitled to a pension of not less than 60d. or 5s. per week. 2. Liberate and pardon all political prisoners.—J. O. N.

1. Give the Queen herself an entire privilege of establishing one new, or abolishing one old law. 2. Establish a new regiment consisting of the tallest men in the British Army, to be called "The Queen's Sixty," with a special uniform and colours selected by Queen Victoria.—Done Again.

Raise a fund for the free provision of artesian wells in the centre of waterless villages, the ironwork to be impressed: "Victoria, 1896. For the free use of all for ever."—Co.

That a special order might be founded exclusively for women who have served their country well by acts of conspicuous bravery and philanthrophy, or by any other means have earned the recognition of their sovereign and their fellow-countrymen. The honour should never be held by more than sixty women at once, and surely the first woman to be invested with the Order would be Her Majesty, who will have completed the 60th year of a reign devoted to her country's good.—Three Sisters.

Start a 60-pence gold piece.—Nina.

The establishment of a Royal residence (somewhat like Balmoral) in Ireland, with the promise, by the Queen, of an annual visit to it.—M. H. Hayes.

Abolish vivisection.—Desmotrophy.

That her Majesty should visit Ireland.—Zerneene.

1. As the Queen hardly ever uses Buckingham Palace, would it not be a fine thing to turn it into a home for deserving old soldiers and sailors? The endowment to be raised by public subscription (voluntary, of course). The majority of the board of management should consist of practical business men of the greatest integrity. The names of Lidderdale, Rothschild, Donald Currie, and Sutherland occur in this connection. 2. Abolish the workhouse uniform, and separate the deserving from the undeserving poor.—Oom Paul.

Found and endow an institution or almshouses for "sixty poor and indigent widows" of the East End of the metropolis, the inmates to be over sixty years of age. This building or buildings should be called the "Queen Victoria Institution," with proper trustees, &c., exactly the same as those of our oldest and best beneficent establishments of the kind. This would be no asylum for court flunkeys or dependants, but a royal "widow's cruse," that would be a perpetual boon and a blessing to future generations.—East Anglian.

By establishing a Board of Arbitration, whose decisions would have the force of law, to settle all trade disputes affecting wages between the employers and the employed. Also an efficient European Board of Arbitration to settle all international disputes between one country and another. —Rex.

Establishing a National Charitable Fund for assisting persons that have been sixty years (or the nearest approach to that time) in the Public Service. —Coloniensis.

Provide "Victoria Houses," or Homes in all large centres giving shelter, fire and attendance to refined and pitifully destitute ladies over 60 years of age.—Denizen.

Give every inmate in our Union Workhouses and Prisons a good dinner on the day in question, and every female employé in H.M. Service a holiday (when practicable) and a week's pay as gratuity.—Marplot.

1. Establish a penny telegram to be paid by stamps. 2. Build and endow a lifeboat to be called the Imperial Lifeboat, and to be stationed where decided to be most needed by a committee of members of the Royal National Lifeboat Institution.—Echo.

1. Abolish the 4s. and 2s. coin and issue a 1s. 6d. coin with scalloped edges, one side portrait, reverse the sexigesimal era, Sept. 23, 1896. 2. Ornamental card, say 12 in. square, suitable for hanging up or framing, with portrait and short summary of reign up to date headed The Sexigesimal Era, Sept. 23, 1896, and underneath a poem specially composed by the Poet Laureate. 3. Special prayer by the Archbishop to be read in all the churches on the following Sunday.

And may every heart rejoice and say:—
Many more years may she reign, and reign in peace
Her people contented, her Empire ne'er decrease;
And when on her is laid Death's cold hand
May she be found ready to go and reign in the better land. Snibor.

The establishment of a national bureau to procure employment for all who wish to work as a means of earning a living.—Pansy.

Let her Majesty spend at least one month of the season at Buckingham Palace, and by thus showing herself to her people she would best celebrate the sixtieth year of her reign. She might also, should she continue to enjoy her present good health, supplement her trip to the Riviera by a visit to Ireland.—Dumnorix.

Money should be collected in England and Scotland so as to make preliminary arrangements, by committee, for her Majesty having a Royal residence in Ireland. It is rather late in the century for it, but better late than never!—Ratseny.

That a building be erected in every village, proportionately to the inhabitants, where the infirm and aged poor might take refuge among their own kith and kin, instead of being handed over to the mercies of workhouse officials—and we are told that the mercies of the wicked are cruel.—A. A. B.

1. That a thanksgiving service should be held in all churches in the realm (no collection). 2. That each householder in the kingdom should submit to a tax on the rating of his or her house—above £40 of one penny in the £, and for all houses rated below £40 a tax of one halfpenny in the £, to be collected with the next rate following the date of H.M.'s sixtieth year on the Throne. That the amount so gathered be held in trust by the Lord Mayor or Mayors in each city or town through the United Kingdom, and be employed as a fund entitled "The Victoria Commemoration Hospital Endowment Fund," and be in aid of each chief hospital in city and town through the country. In London the chief hospitals, these to be decided upon by the Lord Mayor and two Councillors as trustees with him.—Sille.

ENTRE NOUS.

During the visit of the Emperor of Russia to Balmoral he is to be entertained by the Duke of Fife with a series of deer drives in Mar Forest. The Prince of Wales will arrange for a drive of red deer in the Queen's Whitemonth Forest, and there are to be roe deer drives in the woods of Abergeldie and Birkhall. The Emperor Nicholas is by no means a keen sportsman.

The Emperor and Empress of Russia are to be accompanied to Balmoral by a very small suite and as few servants as possible, but there will be considerable difficulty in finding accommodation at the Castle for the Imperial party, as the Queen's list of guests includes the Prince of Wales, the Grand Duke and Grand Duchess of Hesse, the Grand Duke Alexis, the Grand Duke Serge, and the Grand Duchess Elizabeth, the Duke and Duchess of York, the Duke and Duchess of Connaught, Princess Louise, Princess Victoria of Schleswig-Holstein, Princess Louis of Battenberg, M. de Staal, and Lord Salisbury. Abergeldie Castle and Abergeldie Mains will both be occupied by those Royalties and their suites for whom accommodation cannot be provided at Balmoral.

It is expected that Princess Beatrice, in consequence of her deep mourning, will be absent from Balmoral during the stay of the Emperor of Russia, and she may very likely pass the time with the Dowager Duchess of Athole, at Dunkeld House, Perthshire.

Lord Churchill and General Gardiner are to be the Lord and Groom in Waiting at Balmoral during the Imperial visit, and it is probable that the Queen will appoint Lord Clarendon and Sir John McNeill to be in attendance upon the Emperor of Russia during his stay in this country.

Lieutenant-Colonel Arthur Davidson and Lieutenant-Colonel Carington are to be the Equerries-in-Waiting on the Queen from Tuesday next until October 1, replacing Major Legge and Colonel Byng.

One of the papers has given reasons why Sir Edmund Commerell was selected to represent the Queen at the funeral of Sir John Millais, which reasons are purely imaginative. Sir Edmund attended on the part of the Queen simply because he happened to be the Groom-in-Waiting on duty. When the Court is at Osborne or at Balmoral, the Queen does not usually require the attendance of either the Lord or the Groom-in-Waiting; but they must always hold themselves in readiness to take any extra duty which may arise. If there should be any extra duty when the Lord or Groom is at Court, then it has to be taken by the functionary who is next in waiting. This arrangement was made recently in consequence of the constant difficulty in finding Court officials ready to undertake such extra duty as representing the Queen at funerals and other functions, or meeting unexpected Royal visitors.

Bushey Park has been granted by the Queen to the Duke and Duchess of York, as I stated long ago would be the case. I hear that a very large sum of money is to be expended in alterations and repairs during the next few months, but surely the cost of all this waste is not to be defrayed by the public? By every principle of law and justice, the estate of a "beneficiary" should be liable for "dilapidations," if he leaves a Crown residence in such a condition that an extensive outlay is necessary before it can be again occupied. The Duc de Nemours enjoyed the free use of Bushey Park for forty-seven years, and the least he could have done was to keep up the place well.

The jubilation at Dover over the installation of Lord Salisbury as Lord Warden is not shared at Deal and Walmer. For the first time on record the whole of Walmer Castle is now closed to the public, the significant hint "Private" is exhibited on all the gates leading to the park, and at the drive through the park, which has hitherto been freely used by the public, policemen are on duty to see that the notification is obeyed. Under previous Lords Warden a certain portion of the Castle has been open to the public, even when the Lord Warden has been in residence, and the withdrawal of this privilege, to say nothing of the closing of the right-of-way, has caused much disappointment and annoyance recently to visitors to the place, and is proportionately resented in the neighbourhood. Lord Salisbury's morbid love of seclusion has never been more unfavourably exhibited.

The fireworks let off at Dover to celebrate Lord Salisbury's installation as Lord Warden of the Cinque Ports were ordered of a local chemist. Why chemist? The vendor of drugs thus favoured is not known to his fellow-citizens as an artist in pyrotechny, and there is no reason to suppose that he actually manufactured the fireworks which marked this historical event. But he is a J.P. and Town Councillor, which probably accounts for the order going to him, rather than to any of the less glorified citizens of the borough who pay for licences to keep fireworks. That is the way things are usually done in Dover, which is a hot-bed of municipal jobbery; and failing a chemist, no doubt the order for fireworks would have been booked by a butcher or a publican on the Town Council.

Last week at the Viceregal Lodge was chiefly given up to cricket, Lord and Lady Cadogan entertaining the Zingari team together with other visitors. Matches were played each day in the Phœnix Park, the weather being variable. On Thursday and Friday the match between the Zingari and the Gentlemen of Ireland was played on the Phœnix Cricket Ground, and resulted in the victory of the latter. Lord and Lady Cadogan and a large Viceregal party were present each day. The Viceroy's family was largely represented amongst the players, Lord Chelsea and Mr. Cadogan playing with the Zingari at the last match. On Friday evening a "Zingari" dance was given at the Viceregal Lodge, to which, amongst others, all taking part in the cricket matches were invited.

An invitation from the Lord Lieutenant in Ireland is supposed to be, like one from the Queen whom he represents, a command. Irish society, however, does not always treat it as such, but, according to convenience, either honours it in the breach or the observance. A "society" person may throw over a previous engagement in favour of a Viceregal invitation without being considered to have committed a breach of manners. He may also refuse the Viceregal invitation if so minded. Irish society is not servile on this point, but exercises common-sense and the liberty of choice in the matter of amusing itself.

The death of Lord Limerick leaves a vacancy in the order of the Knights of St. Patrick. The pale blue ribbon and diamond star—which the knights supply for themselves—are much prized, even struggled for, by those who are eligible to wear them; that is, Irishmen who are peers. Popular rumour in Ireland assigns the vacant ribbon to Lord Roberts, the suitability of a distinguished soldier for enrolment in a knightly order being more evident than that of a distinguished brewer. Lord Iveagh is the junior knight of the order, and the first created during the Viceroyalty of Lord Cadogan, who is the ex-officio head of the Knights of St. Patrick.

The Irish Viceroy has the power of creating knights. Last week he knighted the Irish official who bears the curious title of Ulster King-at-Arms. The appointment to this place fell vacant during Mr. Morley's tenure of the Irish Chief Secretaryship. He considered the subject of its abolition, but contented himself with abolishing some of the salary. As a rule, the holders of this office—like the officials at the Heralds' Office in England—exercise the curious prerogative of ennobling the ancestors of those whom the Sovereign ennobles.

Foreign Royalty has always taken more interest in visiting Ireland than the Royalty which rules the country. Of late years many princes and princesses have been amongst the tourists who crossed the Irish Channel from England. Last week the Crown Princess of Austria, travelling incog., and accompanied by a suite, visited Killarney, Kilkee, and many picturesque places in the South and West of Ireland. The weather, though somewhat broken, was not enough so to spoil the enjoyment of the tourists.

This week Dublin and its neighbourhood are crowded for the Horse Show, and tourists have converged from all parts of the country to the capital. Each year the attendance grows larger; it is expected to beat the record this season. The cycle and auto-car may have a great future before them, but the horse will take a great deal of beating, and the present is all his as yet, especially in Ireland. The Horse Show authorities, with great magnanimity and absence of jealousy, have made special arrangements for the accommodation of "bikes."

The Duke of Roxburghe's trustees have let his four principal salmon fishings in the Tweed at the satisfactory rent of £2,200 for the season. The Floors upper water has been transferred from the Duke of Portland to Lord Leconfield, Mr. Charles Perkins has taken the lower water in the place of Mr. Walker, and Colonel Percy has the Sprouston stretch, while Lord Home is again the tenant of Birgham Dub, which is the best cast in the Tweed.

Mr. Robert Wringe, master of the yacht Ailsa, sends me a categorical denial of the statement that no word of thanks was offered for the picking up of one of the Ailsa's men by the steam yacht Thistle. He states that he personally thanked the captain of the Thistle on board that ship, and also another gentleman whom he took to be the owner. He also states that when the man was picked up, Ailsa's crew cheered and clapped their hands. I am bound to say that I had the original account of the incident from an eye-witness on board the Thistle, but perhaps the eye-witness was at fault as an ear-witness.

There will be no guests during Doncaster race week at Welbeck Abbey or at Wentworth Woodhouse, but there are to be large parties at Wortley Hall (including the Duke of Cambridge), Sandbeck Park, Hickleton Hall, Escrick Park, Serlby Hall, Tranby Croft, Warter Priory, and other country places in the neighbourhood. Sir Tatton and Lady Sykes have taken a house in the town of Doncaster. The Prince of Wales will be the guest of Lord Crewe at Fryston Hall, and H.R.H. is to travel daily by special train between Pontefract and Doncaster. The Duke and Duchess of Devonshire and Lord and Lady Londonderry will be included in the party at Fryston.

The late Mr. Graham-Stirling, of Strowan, who died last week at the age of eighty-six, was one of the most popular landlords in Scotland. He served in the 42nd Highlanders for ten years, but retired from the Army in 1837, and he had ever since lived at Strowan House, supervising the management of his estates, and taking a prominent part in Perthshire public affairs and in all local business. Mr. Graham-Stirling was a "laird" of the best type, and was always most generous and considerate to his tenants, and kind and hospitable to all classes of his neighbours. He was a keen sportsman and a renowned farmer, being, indeed, one of the most successful breeders of Shorthorn cattle in Great Britain.

I was right it seems. The Hon. Mrs. Randolph Clay is the widow of an American "Honourable," being herself of Scottish origin. The gentleman who sends me this information is loud in the praise of the lady, as well as of her late husband and his family, and he describes the lady as "distinguished," but in what respect, beyond the fact of being the widow of a distinguished man, and a contributor to a lady's paper "and other Court journals," he omits to mention. I am glad to make public this information for the benefit of those who, like myself, are ignorant of the Hon. Mrs. Randolph's antecedents and distinctions; but I would suggest that we have now heard quite as much as we want to hear about the lady.

Totnes was mentioned somewhere the other day as a popular Devonshire "health resort." According to some residents who have been writing in the local papers, the drainage of this town is so scandalously defective that it was officially condemned many years ago by the Local Government Board; but it has never been thoroughly reconstructed, although there are frequent cases of typhoid fever among the inhabitants. There are open drains in the streets for the benefit of the numerous houses which have no proper convenience, and the sewage of the town flows into the Dart, causing a most poisonous stench at low water.

A new terror has been added to life in hotels. A visitor to Harrogate tells me that at the hotel where he is stopping it is the custom to have a collection for some local charity at the table d'hôte every Sunday. For this purpose one of the guests, in the capacity of chairman of the table d'hôte, is requested every Sunday to say a few words recommending the charity to the benevolence of his fellow visitors, after which a plate for contributions is handed round with dessert. An incidental objection to these proceedings is that a visitor to the hotel is called upon to recommend some institution as to the merits of which he probably knows nothing whatever. I trust that this new form of charity touting will be nipped in the bud, or the next step will be that male and female collectors will be coming to the private rooms of guests with collecting boxes. There is quite enough of this sort of thing going on in the streets of pleasure resorts, without its being started indoors.

On July 9 attention was called in TRUTH to a complaint by a visitor to a well-known New York hotel, that though his baggage had been rifled in the baggage-room of the hotel, and the contents abstracted, the proprietor had failed to make good the loss, although he had promised to pay the amount claimed, sixty dollars, before the guest left for England. I was in hope that this reference to the matter in TRUTH, especially when coupled with an intimation that if the hotel proprietor paid up the amount it was to be given to the TRUTH Toy Fund, would lead to a speedy settlement of the obligation. But notwithstanding that the complainant sent a copy of TRUTH to the hotel proprietor, and requested him to forward the sixty dollars to the TRUTH Toy Fund, the money has not been received. The hotel in question was the Astor House Hotel, and I think I am now justified in formally calling upon the proprietor to hand over those sixty dollars. He has had a very long credit, and it is time he paid up.

A regular visitor to a well-known City restaurant noticed a mistake in his bill, and being led thereby to check those documents systematically, he discovered that such mistakes were the rule, the mistakes being invariably against the customer, and amounting to as much as 5s. to 8s. on luncheons for a party of five. Making further inquiries, he learned that the waiters at this establishment receive no remuneration of any kind, not even their meals, and this, no doubt, is the explanation of the systematic cheating of the customers. The system is equally unfair to the customers and the waiters, for it means that the latter are under a direct inducement to blackmail the former, either by downright cheating or by paying them no attention unless they give extravagant tips. It strikes me that it would pay a restaurant-keeper to introduce the rule now prevailing at all the best theatres, that "no gratuities are allowed, and that any attendant receiving one will be liable to dismissal."

WATER SUPPLY FOR MANSIONS, &c.—Artesian Bored and Driven Tube Wells, Wind Engines for pumping, &c.—State your requirements to ALFRED WILLIAMS & Co., 39, Gt. Eastern-st., London, E.C.

It will interest many readers of TRUTH to learn that divorce proceedings are on the road to extinction in England. We have substituted for divorce, it appears, a new method of dissolving the matrimonial tie which is at once simple, efficacious, and devoid of all the unpleasant details incidental to proving a case in the Divorce Court. The process is that of obtaining a declaration of nullity of marriage. Those Englishmen who have hitherto supposed that this antiquated legal process comes into operation about once in five years, should look at the Paris Figaro for August 12, where they will find that it is the newest and most fashionable idea—devised, apparently, to get over British squeamishness about Divorce Court revelations. The writer, who is discoursing on "La Déchéance du Divorce en Angleterre," tells us :—

> Quand, au bout de quelques années de ménage, on a cessé de se plaire, dans la haute société anglaise, on s'aperçoit tout à coup que l'union malheureuse était entachée de quelque vice de forme, de quelque illégalité entraînant la nullité. Et vite on porte l'affaire devant les tribunaux qui s'empressent de déclarer que les deux conjoints n'ont jamais été mariés. Et le tour est joué.
> N'est-ce pas délicieux? Et comme c'est bien plus commode que le divorce dont, comme de la calomnie, il reste toujours quelque chose! et puis, c'est plus expéditif. Quand le tribunal prononce le divorce, l'arrêt est provisoire et ne devient définitif qu'au bout de trois mois. Avec la nullité, rien de tout cela ; on peut reconvoler le lendemain, le jour même.

"N'est-ce pas délicieux?" The writer is M. Paul Villars, and in another part of his article he remarks with reference to this "procédé admirable," "je regrette d'ignorer le nom de l'homme de génie à qui on en doit l'application courante." This is mere affectation. There can be no question that the name of this "homme de génie" is Paul Villars.

Mr. Joseph Latimer, the poet of the Royal Irish Constabulary, on whose volume I lately made some remarks, writes to tell me that I am quite mistaken in seeing in his book evidence of the improved condition of Ireland. So far, he says, from his poems having been thrown off in leisure moments, due to the absence of crime in the once distressful country, some of the verses were written as far back as 1884. All will agree that this is a most interesting statement, and I hope, for Mr. Latimer's sake, that it will lead to an increased inquiry for the volume. All through the stormy times which preceded the introduction of the first Home Rule Bill—possibly even in the stirring times when Mr. Balfour ruled Ireland with the assistance of his "Maiden"—Mr. Latimer was combining the production of poetry with the arduous duties of an R.I.C. man under a coercionist régime. It only shows that if a man has poetry in him, it will come out.

The St. James's Gazette published an article a few days back in which reference was made to Thackeray's club experiences of "a quarter of a century ago." As a matter of fact, Thackeray had been for nearly eight years in his grave "a quarter of a century ago."

In reference to my observation that, in the arrangement of the scene in which Mr. Crozier lost his life, there was "an utter absence of all precaution," Mr. Walter Tyrell writes from the Novelty Theatre :—

> As this is utterly untrue and distinctly against the evidence, I must ask you to contradict it in your next issue, the fact being that a property dagger was provided and offered to and refused by Mr. Franks, and this fact was sworn to both at the inquest and police-court, and the statement made in your leader is calculated to do the management an undeserved injury.

I was, of course, well aware of the evidence that a property dagger was provided, and offered to and refused by Mr. Franks. It was refused, I understand, by both actors concerned, and it excited laughter when produced in court. The question, therefore, is whether providing a property dagger which the actors object to use, and then leaving them to make the arrangements which resulted in a deplorable catastrophe, can be considered as taking proper precautions. In my opinion, it is not; and I should have hoped that by this time managers would have arrived at the same conclusion.

I publish with pleasure the following letter. The moral of it is the familiar one that nobody in these days can afford not to read TRUTH. Scarcely a week passes without some example of the consequences of neglecting this first duty of every citizen. As Mr. Thomas has already decided not to enter any more pupils for the "Kensington Locals," it is unnecessary to go further at this moment into the character of these swindling examinations; but I must say that it is quite time that every schoolmaster was informed respecting the character of the man Sturman and the examining body run by him, and if there are many more in the same state of innocence as Mr. Thomas, the profession must be very badly served by its own organs :—

> DEAR SIR,—My attention has been called to a paragraph in TRUTH (August 20) relating to some of my pupils, having passed the Kensington Local Examinations, and referring to the exposures of Sturman (by whom apparently the exams. are conducted) that have been published in your columns during the past three or four years.
> I certainly knew nothing whatever of these "exposures," nor of the connection of Sturman with these exams. I considered them bonâ-fide examinations, and that they might be useful in stimulating young pupils in their studies, and also act as stepping-stones to more difficult exams.

> This is the first time I have sent in pupils for this exam., and it certainly will be the last; had I known that there was anything discreditable connected with the examining body, I should have had nothing to do with it.

For some years I have regularly obtained successes in the College of Preceptors and Cambridge Local Exams., and it is on these exams. that I depend as a test of efficiency. As you published the article referred to, I think, in justice to myself, you should insert this letter.—Yours truly, Much unfavourable comment has been excited in the diocese of Exeter by the announcement that Bishop Bickersteth has been so complaisant as to permit the vicar of St. Barnabas, Dartmouth, to accept the incumbency of the Anglican Church at San Remo. It is altogether wrong that any clergyman should be allowed by his diocesan to absent himself for half the year from his parish, and such an arrangement is particularly objectionable in the case of a large and important parish. There is a strong feeling in the parish on the subject.

Canon Scott-Holland is to be in residence at St. Paul's Cathedral during September, and Canon Duckworth will be on duty at Westminster Abbey.

With reference to the suspension of the evening services at Westminster Abbey, I have been reminded by a clerical correspondent that the responsibility in this matter rests solely with the Dean, and that the Chapter have no share in it. In the recent remarks on the subject in Truth the Dean and Chapter were coupled, and I cheerfully withdraw the aspersion on the Chapter. Not only is the Dean technically responsible, but there is every reason to suppose that a majority of the Chapter, if not all of them, would readily put an end to this particular scandal, if they had the power. The closing of Westminster Abbey at the ordinary hour of Divine Worship on Sundays is indeed a proceeding calculated to arouse a feeling of shame in every Churchman. What would be the amazement of any of the thousands of Englishmen now on the Continent were they to visit some famous Cathedral on Sunday and find it locked up? Yet that is what thousands of foreign and provincial visitors to London at this time of year experience when they propose to attend the ordinary Sunday evening service at the most famous of English churches.

The Chancellorship "of the Church at York" has been conferred by Archbishop Maclagan upon the Rev. John Randolph, who has held the rectory of Donnington for fifty-one years, and he is the senior member of the Chapter of York, having been collated to a prebendal stall in the Minster so far back as the days of Archbishop Harcourt.

The spectacle of Charles Surface putting his ancestors' portraits up to auction fades into insignificance beside the spectacle of the Church selling an ancient piece of communion plate to augment the parson's stipend. This is what has just occurred at Tong, Shropshire. In 1629 the church at Tong was presented with a splendid ciborium, which has always been described in the parish records as a communion cup, and which has frequently been used as one till quite recently; but after being retained through all the vicissitudes of nearly three centuries, it has now at last been disposed of, upon the suggestion—or, perhaps, it would be more accurate to say, by the order—of Lord Bradford, the patron of the living. The other day a Vestry meeting was quietly convened to go through the form of consenting to Lord Bradford's proposal, the sanction of the Bishop and his Chancellor having been previously obtained without the knowledge of the parishioners. Lord Bradford's agent attended the Vestry meeting, and explained that his lordship wished the ciborium to be sold, but that he was not at liberty to mention the purchaser's name or the amount offered; and, though one workingman had the courage to object, the other persons present—less than a dozen in number, and all tenants of the noble lord—obsequiously passed the required resolution. It is discreditable to the Church that such a sale should be allowed at all, and the mysterious, hole-and-corner fashion in which the business has been carried through the Vestry is anything but satisfactory.

What next? A testimonial is actually being promoted to Mr. Harry S. Foster, M.P., "in recognition of his untiring, able, and successful advocacy of the rights of private patrons and the just liberties of the clergy." Touting is going on busily among the clergy of all grades on behalf of this precious project, and even the unfortunate curate is being dunned for his subscription. Good Heavens! Think of the struggling curate, or the half-starved incumbent of a small country living, presenting his half-crown to a City plutocrat like Mr. H. S. Foster in sheer enthusiastic admiration of the said plutocrat's exertions on behalf of the rights of private patrons! There are two-and-twenty beneficed clerics on the Committee of this egregious movement, and I verily believe that if Simon Magus were still living among us, the clergy of the Established Church would get up a testimonial to him.

The closeness of the alliance between Bung and the Bishops, the publicans and the parsons, the Church and beershops, has often been illustrated, especially at election times; but, if a report that reaches me is true, never has it been made more conspicuous than on the occasion of a recent bazaar at Fonmon Castle, Glamorganshire, in aid of the restoration fund of Penmark Parish Church. It is said that considerable quantities of beer, wine, and spirits were contributed by the publicans of the district, and that during the three days the bazaar lasted one of its great attractions was a drinking booth wherein these liquors were sold for the benefit of the restoration fund. The bazaar was opened by the Bishop of Llandaff. Was it with his approval that a drinking booth was included in the arrangements?

There was a fresh and interesting development of the Church scandal at Rosliston last week, when the notorious Vallancey, the perpetual curate of the parish, was convicted of brawling in the churchyard which has so long been the scene of his irreverent and outrageous performances. It will be remembered that one of Vallancey's first exploits two or three years ago was to bring an action for trespass and damage to his herbage against a Miss Wright, who had clipped the grass above her sister's grave. On the present occasion, it appeared, he ordered the sexton to hack to pieces the mound over this same grave, and himself stood on guard, armed with a revolver in one hand and a stick in the other, to prevent the interference of members of the Wright family and other persons who were present while the sexton did his work. The magistrates had no difficulty in coming to the conclusion that the Rev. Vallancey was guilty of both indecent and violent behaviour within the meaning of the Act 23 & 24 Vict., cap. 32, and they fined him £2 and costs. The prosecuting counsel mentioned that these proceedings had been instituted by the advice of the Bishop of Southwell, and, now that a conviction has been obtained, it is to be hoped that his lordship will see whether further steps cannot be taken to put an end, once and for all, to the unhappy state of things existing in this parish. The retention of a perpetual curacy by such a man as Vallancey has shown himself to be is a perpetual disgrace to the Church.

It seems quite the usual thing for distinguished personages of all sorts and conditions to patronise charity lotteries in Ireland. Since I mentioned last week one at Cork under the patronage of the Lord Lieutenant, my attention has been drawn to the fact that the Catholic Soldiers' Institute recently held a lottery which was announced as under the patronage of the Lord Bishop of Kildare, Lord Wolseley, Lord Roberts, and many other distinguished military and civil personages. On top of this come particulars of another "Grand Bazaar" (the Irish for "lottery," apparently), run by the Sisters of Mercy, Roscommon, "under the patronage of the Lord Bishop of Elphin and the Right Hon. Lord Crofton." I am far from saying that all this is wrong, but what I do say is wrong, is that while this sort of thing goes on in Ireland, it should mean fine and imprisonment to start even a charity lottery in England.

Once again I have been questioned as to the genuineness of the snowball appeal on behalf of Guy's Hospital, which is being run by a Miss Weston, of Heather Lee, West Dulwich. That the thing is genuine may be assumed, I suppose, from the fact that the hospital authorities allow it to go on without protest. But in so doing the hospital authorities have inflicted upon themselves and the hospital grave discredit in the eyes of a large section of the public; and in the long run I think it will be found that this snowball, which has been circulated to an enormous extent, has done Guy's Hospital more harm than good.

In reference to Miss Smallwood's Society for the Assistance of Ladies in Reduced Circumstances, Mr. C. N. Bass, of Kidderminster, writes me a letter in praise of the institution, to which he has acted as honorary auditor since its inception. He states that he has "audited the accounts in the usual way," and has satisfied himself of their absolute correctness; but he thinks that the Society has now grown to a point at which the services of a professional accountant ought to be engaged. In this I think he is right, though in what I said last week I was far from suggesting that Mr. Bass himself is not a competent auditor; what I meant was that the auditor ought not only to be competent, but should state precisely how far he vouches for the accuracy of the accounts. The reason I made this remark was that in the published accounts of this Society Mr. Bass gives no certificate of any kind beyond his signature, while his brother auditor contents himself with a very limited certificate referring only to the balance in hand. I am not sure that I know what is meant by "the usual way" of auditing; there are so many of them, and many are not quite what might be desired. But if Mr. Bass has been over the whole of the books, has seen vouchers for receipts and expenditure, and is satisfied that everything is correct and in order, it would be better that he should clearly certify this.

In connection with the 4th Hussars scandal, I would call the attention of Lord Wolseley and Sir Redvers Buller to the punishment lately awarded by the United States military authorities to a party of cadets at West Point Military Academy. These youths were found guilty of the offence of "hazing" their juniors, and their punishment is a year's confinement to their quarters, which means that they lose their holiday leave and may not go beyond the street in which their several quarters are situate, except for drill and military duties. The punishment is warmly approved by the American Press, the only fault found with it being on the score of leniency; and I am specially impressed with the remark of one journal that youngsters who are capable of brutally bullying a junior of their own class cannot be entrusted with authority over private soldiers. That is a view equally applicable where the bully is a subaltern, and whether the private soldier is a Briton or an American. By the way, how are Lord Wolseley and Sir Redvers Buller getting on with their little personal inquiry into the Hodge and Bruce cases? Time is flying, and the 4th Hussars will soon be flying too, to India.

There are loud complaints against the ruthless severity of the newly-appointed Board of Examiners for Lieutenants of the Royal Engineers. It is said that every candidate who has recently been up has been rejected. People are asking, and not unreasonably, whether the examiners could themselves pass so hard an examination in two entirely distinct subjects.

Several further instances of the erratic marking of Sandhurst examination papers have been sent to me, apropos of the cases given in last week's TRUTH. It is rather remarkable that in one of these cases also the subject was geology. There seems every reason to believe not only that different examiners judge the papers of candidates by totally different standards, but also that the same examiners are by no means consistent in their judging from year to year. It behoves the Civil Service Commissioners to look into the complaints on this subject, for such eccentricities on the part of examiners mean heavy loss to parents, and often irreparable disaster to candidates.

By the way, it surprises me to hear so much about geology in this connection. On what principle is this science regarded as a matter of importance in the education of an officer and a gentleman? Geography I can understand the use of. Orthography also has obvious advantages. But, in the name of wonder, why geology? Can it have occurred to somebody at the War Office that a competent geologist would know all about earthworks?

Parliament was lately informed on behalf of the War Office that no complaints have been received as to the quality of the Lee-Metford ammunition. An infantry officer tells me, however, that he has recently found a very large percentage of miss-fires in the ball ammunition issued to his company. In one case a man had three miss-fires in one packet, and the company officer subsequently satisfied himself by experiment that the cartridge, and not the rifle, was at fault. It is a characteristic circumstance that though this officer duly reported what he had noticed, nothing is known on the subject at headquarters.

A recent article in the Civil and Military Gazette, Lahore, gives an interesting comparison between the rate of promotion in the Staff Corps and the British Regiments at present serving in India. The following are shown to be the average periods at which the several steps have been obtained in the Home Army, as compared with the regulation period in the Staff Corps:—

	British Army.	Staff Corps.
Captain	8·19 years	11 years.
Majors	16·91 ,,	20 ,,
Lieut.-Colonels	25·86 ,,	26 ,,

Only in the rank of Lieutenant-Colonel are the periods at all on an equality, and as regards the other ranks it must be remembered that the disparity is sometimes very much more marked than appears from this table. It is this disparity which is at the bottom of the old grievance about the supersession of Staff Corps officers by men junior to them in the British Army. An attempt recently made to adjust these differences by granting temporary rank, seems to have done more harm than good; and it is not likely that the grievance will ever be removed until promotion in the Staff Corps has been so accelerated that the two Services are more or less on an equality.

In Chandos-street, Strand, there is a drinking bar known as "The Chandos Buffet." At this establishment it is actually the practice to levy an extra charge, ranging apparently from 40 to 100 per cent., on liquors sold to soldiers in uniform. My authority for the statement is a Volunteer officer, who personally witnessed the imposition of this tax upon a quartermaster-sergeant, a colour-sergeant, and a corporal of two Guards regiments. For a twopenny glass of beer these men were charged 4d., and for a sixpenny whisky and soda 8d. My informant tested the facts by getting one of the non-commissioned officers to give an order, for which the charge was 1s. 2d., and then asking what the price of the same drink would be to him. The answer was 10d. This surpasses anything of the kind that I have yet heard of, and it would be a proper course for the Commanding Officers of the regiments represented on the above occasion—the 2nd Life Guards and the Grenadier Guards—to interrogate the proprietor of the bar as to whether he has a standing rule to the above effect. If he has, the next step should be to bring the matter before the Licensing Justices.

On what principle should the sergeant-instructors of musketry in a Militia Battalion be allowed to wear plain clothes habitually? A permission to this effect seems to have been given to the sergeant-instructor of the 4th Battalion South Wales Borderers—a battalion where irregularities of one kind and another seem to be rife. The N.C.O. in question performs no duty which makes the wearing of civilian clothes specially necessary for him, and there is naturally not a little jealousy among his brother N.C.O.s at his enjoying a privilege which seems to denote some sort of superiority.

From what I am continually hearing on this subject, I have come to the conclusion that there is no foundation for the idea, so prevalent among civilians, that the wearer of the Queen's uniform is an object of admiration to the civil population, especially the female section. A soldier, so far as I can see, invariably regards his military garb as a degradation, and his highest ambition is to get rid of this mark of servitude whenever he is outside his barracks. Why this should be I do not know; but it looks highly unwise and shortsighted on the part of the military authorities to countenance the idea as much as is now done.

Is it the invariable rule of courts-martial in the Army, that the prisoner shall stand throughout the whole of the proceedings, however protracted? I ask in view of a recent trial which lasted for five days, and ended in the prisoner's acquittal. On each of these days the prisoner was on his legs from 10 a.m. till 5.30 p.m., with only half-an-hour's interval for his lunch; and nobody who knows what the interior of a court of law is—civil or military—will question that the fatigue of standing for such a time must seriously prejudice a man in the conduct of his case. A military correspondent, referring to a rule of military law, that the President of a court-martial should consider himself as the prisoner's counsel, asks whether counsel in any court would allow his client to stand all through a trial. It would be well if the next President of a court-martial, when struggling to assume the rôle of prisoner's counsel, would remember this question. I fear that it is too much to expect that any President of such a court will play the part of prisoner's counsel with much success; but only to get as far as offering the prisoner a chair would be something.

Reference was made in Truth of the 13th inst. to an allegation that in the Army Service Corps at Aldershot an order is in force that only three men per company are allowed passes from church on Sundays. I am assured, on what ought to be a very good authority, that no such order is in force, that men can get passes almost when they like, and that in one case as many as fourteen to sixteen per company got passes for Sunday. At the same time it is difficult to believe that men would take the trouble to complain to me about a rule of this kind if no such rule existed. Possibly the grievance referred to is confined to one or two companies only.

A question asked the other day in Truth, as to the intention of the benefit given last September to the band of the Berkshire Regiment by the Plymouth Pier management, seems to be fully answered by the programme and tickets issued on that occasion. On both of these the entertainment is described as a "grand complimentary benefit to the members of the band of the Royal Berkshire Regiment." A benefit to the members of the band is clearly a very different thing from a benefit to the Band Fund, and the proceeds of the entertainment ought unquestionably to have been divided among the men.

My attention is called by a Guardsman to the history of a man now serving in one of the Guards' battalions as an officer's servant. The man in question enlisted about five years ago, and went in due course to the depot at Caterham. He never even completed his recruit's course, but after a week or two at the depot was taken into the battalion as an officer's servant, in which position he has since remained. The soldier who gives me these facts states that this military valet cannot shoot, and is totally ignorant of drill and other military duties; and he asks what use it is to the Army to have dozens of men of this class on its "strength." This is a question which was asked in Truth only a few weeks ago, and it seems well worth the attention of Army reformers. If a man enlists as a soldier, and is paid and counted as such, he ought to be an efficient soldier in all respects, whatever non-military duties he may be employed upon. A suggestion has been made that Reservists should be employed as officers' servants, and this seems a promising proposal. If it cannot be carried out, I should have thought that it would be better that officers' servants should be civilians in name, as well as in fact.

A report reaches me that it has been decided that the 2nd Battalion Wiltshire Regiment is to leave the Portsea forts in October and go into Victoria barracks for the winter. Up to the present time I have not seen any official statement on the subject, but I sincerely hope that the report is well founded, both for the sake of the battalion and because it will afford a most striking and conclusive proof of the accuracy and justice of what has been said on the subject in Truth.

The following incident should be read with some of the recent remarks in Truth about the exclusion of British soldiers from the "civil lines" in Indian stations. A few weeks ago two N.C.O.s belonging to the 1st Battalion Duke of Cornwall's Light Infantry attended evening service at Christ Church, Lucknow. There were several other soldiers in church, to the number of about twenty altogether. It is the custom at the church to serve out Prayer Books to those in the church in want of them; but in this instance when the functionary who performs this duty came round to where the soldiers were sitting, many of them without books, he deliberately turned away and went back to his own seat. His action was construed as an intentional slight to the soldiers, and, so far as one can judge, must have been so intended.

Prince of Wales Hotel, Harrogate.—Finest position, facing the Stray. Redecorated and sumptuously refurnished. New management. Excellent stabling. Electric light throughout.

Is there no intention to issue any rewards in the way of promotion, &c., to the subordinates of the Commissariat, Medical and Ordnance Departments engaged in the Chitral campaign? Gazettes have long since notified the honours and rewards granted to the officers concerned, but not a word has ever been said about those subordinates who have been recommended for rewards, and who have in many cases borne the burden and heat of the day.

An officer stationed at Aldershot told me the other day that I should render the greatest service to the British Army by agitating for the removal of the tramway terminus in the Westminster Bridge-road to a point south of York-road. The interest of the Army in the tramway terminus lies in the fact that officers, N.C.O.s, and men, on their way to Aldershot, are continually missing their trains at Waterloo through the block of traffic where the tramway ends. This is really a grievance which the Army shares with all other members of the public who use Waterloo Station. All that is necessary to mitigate the evil is that the tramway terminus should be moved a few yards down the road, so as to prevent the stoppage of cars and the consequent block of traffic just at the corner of York-road. No one would be appreciably inconvenienced by this alteration, and I would suggest to the Railway Company and the London County Council that they might take some steps between them to get this public improvement carried out.

New surprises constantly await the civilian who devotes his attention to military matters. Is there nothing in the Army Regulations to prevent an officer or soldier on full pay engaging in trade or other civilian pursuits? I ask in view of the following circumstances. Just outside the barracks at Hamilton there is a bookseller's and stationer's shop. The surname over the door corresponds with that of a quartermaster-sergeant on the permanent staff at the depot; and the quartermaster-sergeant who bears this name is constantly to be seen in the shop of an evening, either behind the counter or in the circulating library at the back. It is generally understood in the neighbourhood that the quartermaster-sergeant is the proprietor of the business, and whether this is so or not, there can be no doubt that he assists to carry it on. As this is done without any attempt at concealment, and is common knowledge in the neighbourhood, it must be presumed that the N.C.O. has gone into trade with the full approval of his commanding officer. I have looked into the Queen's Regulations, and I cannot find anything which forbids such a thing to be done. But it strikes me as somewhat at variance with military propriety; and the neighbouring shopkeepers, who in their capacity of taxpayers help to keep the bookseller and stationer in his capacity of quartermaster-sergeant, have a reasonable ground for objecting to a state of things which means that they are taxed in order to subvention a rival tradesman.

In answer to my comment on the detention of certain men of the 1st Dorsetshire Regiment in India for a full twelve years, when they re-engaged for eleven, an officer refers me to the paragraph in the Regulations which provides for a man's detention with the colours an additional year, if he is abroad when his engagement expires. That, I have no doubt, is the ground on which the War Office proceed. But the point is, that these men extended their engagements under a special arrangement, made in view of their going to India, and expressly providing that they were to complete eleven years' service only. If it is now to be argued that this special contract is over-ridden by the general rule of the Service, I can only say that I never heard of even a Government office having recourse to such unscrupulous chicanery.

A complaint reaches me from the 1st Battalion East Yorkshire Regiment, at Belgaum, in which it is stated that no account in connection with the Canteen Fund has been published for two years past. Considering how much dissatisfaction and mistrust prevail among soldiers about these regimental funds, it is very stupid, if nothing worse, on the part of the authorities, not to issue regularly the fullest possible financial statement.

At an inquest held at Weedon Barracks the other day, concerning the death of a driver in the Royal Artillery, the extraordinary statement was made that the deceased man and two others had to be sent to draw a water-cart full of water to the married women's quarters because, as the troops were away, there was no horse available for the work. The result of employing the men was that in descending a hill the cart got beyond their control, and the unfortunate soldier who was between the shafts was crushed to death against a gatepost. It seems incredible that it could have been really necessary to put men on this duty—indeed, that it was not so is conclusively shown by the fact that an arrangement has now been made for a horse to be used to draw the water-cart in future. If it be true, as I am informed, that this is the second accident of the kind that has occurred—the victim on the first occasion being a labourer who lost the use of an arm—somebody would appear to be seriously to blame for not having arranged for a horse to do the work before the sacrifice of a life had enforced the desirability of such a step.

Enteric fever still runs its course gaily in the various Dublin barracks. The latest Board of Inquiry on the subject assembled at the Royal Hospital last week, to inquire into the case of a private of the 15th Hussars. How much longer is this idiotic farce of holding incessant inquiries, which lead to no result, to be persisted in? It has long since become evident that the military authorities are totally destitute of all sense of responsibility for the pestilential condition of the Dublin barracks; and the only chance of terminating the scandal, so far as I can see, is that when the next death occurs the coroner's jury should bring in a verdict of manslaughter against the Secretary of State or the Commander-in-Chief, and that one or other of these functionaries, or both, should be put on their trial in a criminal court.

Yet another example of the blind unreasoning ferocity of Naval courts-martial. A boy named Kavanagh, of H.M.S. Blenheim, was ordered by Commander Currey to receive twelve strokes with a birch, and very probably with good cause; but, on receiving his sentence, Kavanagh straightway went for the Commander and struck the sacred person of that officer. The result to the Commander is not recorded, probably because it was too awful, but the result to Kavanagh is that he has been sentenced by court-martial to twenty-four strokes with the birch, twelve months' hard labour, and to be dismissed from the Service. Kavanagh may be an incorrigible desperado—though there is a Captain Marryatish flavour about his insubordination which makes one think he might have had the making of a sea-dog in him. But of this I am confident, that he was infinitely better fitted for his position in the Service from which he has been expelled than any of the officers who awarded this monstrous punishment. Here is a lad so young that he is liable to the punishment of whipping, and he is not only ordered that punishment but in addition to it a year's hard labour—a punishment which an adult on shore would only get for a very serious crime. Again, if the boy is to be kicked out of the Service, what excuse is there for thrashing him well first, and then treating him to a year's criminal discipline—and all this for losing his temper and aiming a blow at a superior? "Discipline" is the excuse, of course, for this sort of vindictive barbarity, but I can only say that those who suppose that this is the way to preserve discipline are living a full century behind their time. Can nothing be done to rescue this boy Kavanagh?

The fact that the Government possess £260,000, which ought properly to have been distributed long ago as prize money, is very discreditable to the authorities at the Admiralty, which is a perfect hot-bed of red-tape. If such matters were managed at Whitehall in accordance with common sense and ordinary business principles all the money would long ago have been divided among the sailors who were entitled to it. The result of the dilatory policy which has been followed is that most of those who ought to have received a share are dead, while the survivors are unaware of the state of affairs. During the last year certain payments of prize money have been made in connection with the capture of slavers, but even in this department there is actually a balance in hand of £7,657, which is described as "unclaimed."

It seems desirable that the attention of the owners of the South African lines of passenger steamships should be directed to the rowdyism and misbehaviour that go on among their second-class passengers, to the annoyance of all decent people travelling by that class. I have a statement before me of various occurrences that have taken place on three recent voyages to the Cape. In each case complaints have been made to the officers of the various ships, but without the slightest result. On one recent voyage the second-class passengers complained to the Captain no less than five times of the obscene language and insolent behaviour of a small ring of cads on board. In another instance the victim was a German journalist, almost unable to speak English, who, besides being baited and annoyed all through the voyage, was on one occasion subjected to a filthy insult in his cabin. The Captains of the South African lines must be very weak-kneed specimens of their class if they cannot put a stop to this kind of blackguardism.

Whether the Executive of the National Lifeboat Institution have inquired into the case at Castletown, to which reference was made in Truth of the 13th inst., I do not know. But without waiting for the result of any such inquiry, I think I can now say with confidence that the facts do not bear out the observations originally made on the subject in the Isle of Man. As mentioned in my paragraph, it was not clear in the accounts given whether the lifeboat had really been used for the rescue; but I now understand from a local correspondent that the lifeboat was not used; while one of the gentlemen rescued has written to the local papers to state that he paid the men for saving his boat, not his life. The case resolves itself, therefore, into one of property salvage once more; and if four boatmen, whether lifeboat-men or not, choose to go out in their own boat on an errand of this kind, it is, of course, no affair of the Institution. Whether the sailors were justified in screwing out the last sixpence they could get from a man under these circumstances may be open to question; but if the man who had to pay does not object, nobody else need.

In the last week of the session, Mr. Kimber, M.P., called attention once again to the abuse connected with the employment of "personal clerks" or "hired writers" in virtually permanent posts in the Civil Service, these individuals having been appointed on the personal nomination of heads of departments, and having passed no entrance examination of any kind. This is an abuse which has been frequently denounced in TRUTH, and questions have been asked about it in Parliament two or three times in as many years, but the practice goes on unchecked, and it is clear that it will only be checked by decisive action in the House. In the "Department of Civil Engineer-in-Chief, Works Loan," at 47, Victoria-street, the whole staff of draughtsmen and accountant clerks, eight of the former and six of the latter, are described as "temporary," and there does not seem to be anybody of junior rank in this office who has passed a Civil Service examination. A very similar state of things may be found in some other departments. At this rate the system of competitive examination for the Civil Service will soon become a complete farce; and already those who have entered by the legitimate process are suffering grievously in promotion and prospects by this illegitimate competition.

A curious statement appears in the administration report of Mr. H. H. Cameron, the late Government Agent for the North Central Province of Ceylon. It seems that Mr. Cameron was vexed at the omission of many of the Kandyan population to register their marriages, and it occurred to his ingenious mind that the best chance of inducing them to fulfil this duty "lay in devising some means by which a social penalty should attach to the neglect of the desired ceremony." He, therefore, proclaimed that if, after a certain date, any of the 5,000 couples in default "were still living as man and wife without having duly registered their union, they would be considered to be 'dhobies,' and would be condemned to the ignominy of washing their own clothes, inasmuch as I should forbid the dhobies to wash for them." The dhoby caste is a very low one, and looked down upon by the others; and the result of this proclamation was that, within a year, 3,626 of the 5,000 couples referred to registered their marriages. Mr. Cameron was, doubtless, actuated by the most benevolent and paternal motives towards the Kandyan population, but was it a regular and legal course that he took? Is the registration of marriages in such cases a legal obligation? If it is, is it customary in Ceylon for Government Agents to punish disobedience to the law by imposing a penalty of social ostracism, and compelling people to do their own washing?

A firm of stockbrokers at Aberdeen report a case which affords a conspicuous example of the injury done by carelessness in the transmission of telegrams. They received a cipher wire from London, and on the strength of it sold certain stocks. Some little time afterwards the same wire was received again, and the stocks were again sold. It turned out that the second message was an accidental repetition of the first, and the stocks had to be bought in again, at a loss of £20. No redress, of course, can be obtained for a mistake of this kind, beyond the receipt of the usual form of apology kept in stock to send out as occasion requires. But there seems to me no valid reason why any one injured in this way by gross negligence on the part of a public Department should not have the same claim to compensation, as he would have for the like negligence on the part of a private firm or individual.

The interesting disclosure has just been made at Portsmouth that on various occasions when deputations from the Improvement Committee of the Corporation have come to London to interview the directors of the railway companies, with a view to securing improved train services and accommodation for the town, they have travelled with passes obtained from the general managers by the Chairman, Alderman A. L. Emanuel. This gentleman says he thought there would be no harm in applying for passes, and thereby saving fares which would have had to be paid out of the rates. There may have been "no harm," but there was assuredly a lamentable lack of dignity in the representatives of an important municipality seeking such a favour; and the fact that Mr. Emanuel has often distinguished himself by the severity of his strictures on the two companies makes it the more astounding that he should have been ready to apply for free passes. Ratepayers very properly keep a sharp watch on the expenditure of municipal deputations, but they have no wish to see their representatives travelling as railway deadheads, and it is satisfactory to learn that the Improvement Committee have now given up the practice.

With reference to my note last week on the boarding-out of pauper children in the Lincoln Union, a correspondent writes to say that no blame can be attached in this matter to Miss Mason, the Local Government Board Inspector of Boarded-out Children. I did not in any way imply that blame did attach to Miss Mason, who is, I believe, an excellent officer; but I suggested that she should make inquiries concerning the condition of the children from the Lincoln workhouse. I now find, however, that the Lincoln Guardians board out their children within their own Union, and that consequently they are not subject to the inspection and supervision of Miss Mason, whose duties are confined to children boarded out beyond the limits of the Unions to which they are chargeable. It is highly desirable that all the boarded-out children, whether they are living in their own Unions or away, should be under official inspection, and for this purpose another lady should be appointed as an assistant inspector. Meanwhile, I hope the Local Government Board will have special inquiries made into the matter which I mentioned last week.

For the second time within a few weeks the management of the Meath Hospital, Dublin, has come in for unfavourable notice at a coroner's inquiry. The latest case was that of a man subject to suicidal mania who had been admitted to the hospital suffering from a self-inflicted wound in the throat. He was in charge of a constable who, one day last week, allowed him to go to the lavatory with a mug to get a drink of water. There he found a bottle of carbolic acid, and drank enough of the stuff to kill himself. It seemed that the carbolic acid was used in the lavatory for disinfecting purposes, and the doctor expressed the opinion that that was the proper place in which to keep the bottle. The jury, however, censured the hospital authorities for leaving the poison within the reach of the deceased, and though the coroner disagreed with this censure, it will be generally endorsed by the public.

In connection with another inquest at Dublin last week the jury made a strong complaint respecting the condition of the Coroner's Court. A body in a very advanced state of decomposition was lying in the room immediately below, and the odour in the little court, where about forty people were crowded, was most objectionable and sickening, causing several of the jurors to become ill. It seems that this disgraceful and dangerous state of things has been repeatedly brought under the notice of the Dublin Corporation, but hitherto without effect. If the authorities disregard the further representations on the subject which have now been made to them by the coroner, the best plan will be for jurors and witnesses and everybody else concerned to go on strike, and refuse to attend inquests held in such an abominable den as the Morgue appears to be.

For years past complaints have been rife about the condition of the River Brent, but no one who has not actually seen and smelt the river can have the faintest conception of the actual state of things. Between Ealing and Harrow, at the present moment, the Brent is merely an open sewer, in which a stream of fœtid black liquid flows between banks of stinking mud. On hot days recently the smell from it has been perceptible at least a quarter of a mile away, and at points near Perivale, where the road is close to the river, the stench is intolerable. That such a state of things should exist close to thickly-populated suburban districts, and within four or five miles of London, is a disgrace to the local sanitary authorities. I take it that the authority on whom the chief responsibility rests is the Middlesex County Council, and if I am right in this, the Middlesex County Council ought to be ashamed of itself.

I alluded a short time ago to an incident in an Indian city where the remains of an old English soldier had been allowed to lie for hours on the roadside by which he had died. The evidence which was given at an inquest at Hinton Charterhouse last week, however, shows that it ill becomes us to comment on any callousness and indifference which may be witnessed in such a matter in a foreign land. A poor widow died suddenly on the road near the railway station at Midford, and there her body lay for three hours to be stared at by curious yokels. The village policeman made every effort to obtain some shelter for the corpse, but neither at the public-houses nor anywhere else could anybody be induced to receive it, and finally it had to be removed late in the evening from Midford to the woman's home at Hinton. Yet this is a civilised country, and the people of Midford doubtless profess and call themselves Christians.

The Scotsman states that considerable sensation has been caused in Uddingston by "an apparently heartless case of officialism," and if the facts are correctly given the indignation of the public can hardly be wondered at. The report is to the effect that a miner, out of work, and without money to pay his wife's funeral expenses, applied for relief to the Inspector of Poor at Bothwell, that this official sent him to the Fiscal at Hamilton, that the latter referred him to another Inspector, that he was next directed to go to the Sheriff, and that finally, after tramping about ten miles, he had to return home without having obtained the required assistance. It is further alleged that it was only by the kindness of neighbours—themselves in a state of poverty owing to the stoppage of the collieries—in undertaking to pay the cost that a coffin was at last procured, and by that time the body was in a most offensive condition. In connection with a similar story which was recently told at Aberdeen it was found that there had been exaggeration and misrepresentation; and for the credit of the authorities it is to be hoped that these allegations may also be refuted. They certainly ought not to be passed over, however, without some explanation.

A barrister and magistrate of many years' experience has been good enough to answer the question in last week's TRUTH with regard to proceedings before the Justices for the recovery of rates. He explains that in the case of rates made by the vestry for poor-law purposes the Justices do not sit as a Court of Summary Jurisdiction, and consequently rates beyond six months in arrear may be ordered to be paid, and, in default of distress, the defaulter may be committed to prison. In the case, however, of rates made under the Public Health Acts, the Justices sit as a Court of Summary Jurisdiction, the summons is limited to the past six months, and, in default of distress, the party sued cannot be committed without proof of his means to pay. If he is committed, the imprisonment does not purge the non-payment; but in practice the defaulter who has been sent to gaol is rarely proceeded against a second time for the same sum. It is not an altogether uncommon thing for district rates to be lost to the authorities through the collectors allowing further time for payment beyond the six months' limit, and possibly it was in this way that the vestry lost the rates in the case to which I referred last week. There is a simple means of preventing such losses by taking out a summons, and then, if grace be given, getting it adjourned by consent, which will prevent the time-limit operating. Vestries should see that their collectors do this.

The last annual report of the Commissioners of Lunacy is not pleasant reading, principally because it records the startling fact that, whereas in the year 1859 the ratio of known lunatics to population was 18·67 per 10,000, on January 1 of the present year the same has increased to 30 per 10,000. To account for this persistent spread of brain disease the usual argument will no doubt be brought forward, that every year the pressure and strain of living become greater. This would carry weight unquestionably, were it not distinctly shown that the increase is entirely confined to the pauper class of the community. Unfortunately, therefore, it is evident that heredity, drink, and unhealthy conditions of life are principally answerable for such large additions to the irresponsible portion of our population.

It is gratifying to learn that even German officialdom is amenable to the voice of TRUTH. It seems that the case of Henry Ebbett, the Grimsby smacksman whose arrest and imprisonment were commented upon in TRUTH of the 13th inst., had not been finally disposed of, and the man was brought up again on the 17th inst. In the meantime the German visitors and others who had interested themselves on the man's behalf, brought the TRUTH article before the notice of the authorities. Post hoc—modesty forbids me to say propter—Ebbett's sentence was reduced to a fortnight's imprisonment, and as he had already served that time he was forthwith discharged. He was ordered to pay 30 marks costs; but this part of the sentence was subsequently remitted, and I understand that a subscription has been got up for him on the island, which ought to be sufficient to bring him back safely to England. I have also to acknowledge the receipt of a postal order for 5s. on his behalf, which shall be forwarded to him in due course.

However, it is to be hoped that what has happened will cause attention to be directed to the doings of the Wachtmeister, and to the administration of justice in the island. I hear now that the captain of the smack offered to give bail to the amount of £10 for Ebbett's appearance; and, in view of what has now happened, the probability is that, had bail been accepted, the man would have been acquitted at the trial, and would never have suffered imprisonment at all. He has, therefore, a serious grievance against the officials who locked him up and refused bail; and from what reaches me (from German sources) it would seem that he is not the only party aggrieved.

Never, I should think, has a taxing-master struck out and cut down charges more rigorously than in the case of the bill of costs of Mr. John Walsh, a draper, in some arbitration proceedings with regard to the acquirement of his premises by the Sheffield Corporation. To begin with, the solicitor's bill was reduced from £989. 17s. 11d. to £585. 17s. 3d., though "counsel's fees and payments" alone had figured at £554. 18s. 1d. This is not bad; but it is in his treatment of the charges under the heading of "witnesses" that the taxing-master is seen at his best. Here are a few instances:—A firm of accountants asked for £1,073. 2s. 9d.; they got £262. 10s. A surveyor wanted £91. 19s. 6d.; he has to be content with £10. 10s. One "trade expert" charged £737. 10s. 8d., and another £841. 3s. 7d.; the amounts allowed them were £73. 10s. and £63 respectively. Two "drapery valuers" fared even worse. One claimed £737. 9s. 3d., and the other £661. 17s. 6d., but the remorseless taxing-master appraised their services at the modest price of £21 each. Miscellaneous items to the amount of £232 were wholly expunged; and altogether the bill against the Corporation was brought down from a total of £5,611. 4s. 1d. to £1,122. 17s. 3d. I gather from the Drapers' Record that the "trade experts" and "valuers" are aghast and indignant at the conduct of the taxing-master, and talk of appealing against his decision. Decidedly an appeal is desirable if there is any chance of its being successful, for the figures as they stand reflect anything but credit upon the reputation of the parties concerned.

The Times has opened its holiday columns to a discussion about lawyers' fees, on which subject barristers and solicitors write learnedly. The main complaint is that some barristers, at the head of their profession, charge too much for their services. I have little sympathy with the complaint, because no one who thinks these charges too high is obliged to pay them, for he can, if he pleases, obtain the services of other barristers for less money. There are, however, two things incidental to legal expenses which have always seemed to me to be open to a reform which would be greatly to the advantage of clients. Solicitors should be allowed to practise in all the courts. The result of this change would be that there would be a partnership between solicitors and barristers, as in America. The firm would get up the case, and one of the firm would state it in court. If an important case, a leading barrister would be retained, with the barrister of the firm acting as junior. This would considerably reduce the cost of litigation.

An edifying little dispute between neighbours has just been adjusted through the medium of the Sheriff's Court of Aberdeenshire. Some months back, Captain Brooke, of Banchory, Kincardineshire, missed two valuable dogs, a collie and an Irish terrier, belonging to his wife. He subsequently found that the dogs had been shot on the day they disappeared by his neighbour, Mr. Davidson, of Inchmarlo. Mr. Davidson, when interrogated on the subject by Captain Brooke, disclaimed any knowledge that the dogs belonged to Mrs. Brooke, but seeing that the families were not only near neighbours but on visiting terms, the disclaimer makes rather a large order upon one's credulity. The matter was placed in the hands of a solicitor, and, after some negotiations, in the course of which Mr. Davidson had been informed that the dogs had been purchased as puppies for £22. 10s., a writ was issued claiming £25 compensation. This amount Mr. Davidson has now paid up without going into court, and Captain Brooke has handed it over to the Royal Infirmary, Aberdeen. The case has attracted special interest in the locality owing to the fact of Mr. Davidson, the dog-slayer, being a man of conspicuous piety.

By way of warning to the public, a notice has been affixed to the automatic machines in some of the Irish railway stations, recording a sentence of two months' imprisonment—pilloried in TRUTH at the time—which was passed upon a boy at Holywood, county Down, for obtaining goods from a machine "by fraud." It is all very well to punish the people who steal, but what about the machines which do likewise? I am continually hearing of the petty larcenies committed by instruments which take your penny and then refuse to deliver up the sweetmeats, or matches, or whatever you have paid for. It would put the business on a fairer basis if some director or official of the company were to get two months for such thefts.

Last week a farmer at Eastwood, near Nottingham, was summoned for cruelty to a mare which had been found lying in one of his fields in a truly pitiable condition, its body covered with suppurating sores and swarming with maggots. It was not disputed that the wretched animal ought to have been slaughtered, but the defence was that if the farmer had had her killed without first receiving the permission of the Horse Insurance Company, Limited, for which he had applied, he would have lost the insurance money. The magistrates dismissed the case, and, under the circumstances, I do not think much exception can be taken to their decision. It seems to me, however, that the insurance company are very seriously to blame for making it a condition that their formal consent shall be obtained before a diseased or injured animal is destroyed. Surely their interests might be sufficiently safeguarded by requiring a veterinary surgeon's certificate or having a post-mortem examination made.

The Mayor of Boston has brought an entirely new and original notion to bear on his dispensation of justice—courtesy compels me to call it justice. Last week one Taylor was brought up in custody charged with stealing a cat; and after hearing the evidence his worship addressed the defendant as follows: "On paying the costs for the trouble you have given, 9s. 6d., you will be allowed to go. We are inclined to think that you did not steal the cat." So this worthy magistrate acquits the man of the charge, but punishes him for "the trouble" he has caused by being falsely accused! Could anything be fairer?

At Port Elizabeth there are some old tumble-down barracks which, after being evacuated by the military thirty years ago and remaining unoccupied for a considerable period, have, during the past few years, been patched up and made to do duty for the police, though the buildings are notoriously unfit for habitation. A man who recently joined the force refused to live in the barracks, stating that he expected to find a decent place, not a pigstye, whereupon he was haled before the magistrate, Mr. W. M. Fleischer, for disobeying a lawful order. It transpired that there had been an outbreak of typhoid fever in the barracks, and the magistrate himself admitted that "they were not as barracks should be;" nevertheless, he fined the defendant £1, or seven days. The defendant apparently thought gaol would be preferable to the barracks, but on his electing to take the seven days, the magistrate recalled his first sentence, imposed a fine of £10 or a month, and dismissed the man from the force. If this is the way in which Mr. Fleischer is accustomed to administer justice it is time some superior authority called him to order. When a sentence allows the option of paying a fine, or serving a term in prison, the defendant has an undoubted right to choose for himself which he will do, and it is an utterly wrong and unjustifiable thing for the magistrate to increase the punishment because he disapproves of the choice which is made.

In my Legal Pillory this week the Lewes Bench gains the first place with a very effective illustration of the relative heinousness, in the magisterial judgment, of the offences of brutally assaulting a wife and poaching three rabbits. The lucky wife-beater gets off by paying the costs and undertaking not to thrash his spouse for the next three months; while the poacher goes to prison for a month. Wife-beating also appears to be a ridiculous cheap pastime for those who care to practise it at Portsmouth, Alloa, and Kirkcaldy. At Dundee the lenity of Hon. Sheriff-Substitute Johnstone in dealing with a charge of gross cruelty to a horse, stands out in marked contrast to his colleague's severity in a trumpery case of larceny by finding in the same Court. Among the other cases I would particularly call attention to the amazing indulgence with which a vile outrage on a little child has been treated at Redditch, to the monstrous punishment of a refractory fishing apprentice at Brixham, where the magistrates seem to have been corrupted by the evil example of the Grimsby Shallows, and to the flagrant disregard of the First Offenders Act at Stamford and at the Mansion House. The name of the City Alderman who was sitting at the Mansion House is new to me, but in future I mean to keep a special watch on his sentences, for he is evidently a thorough-going Draco. It will be noted that the Mayor of Honiton has made a promising début as a judicial humourist by inflicting a fine of 10s. on a labourer convicted of sleeping out, and "not having visible means of subsistence." His worship might as well have awarded the seven days without going through the farce of asking a penniless man to pay half a sovereign:—

Lewes Police-court. Before Messrs. J. G. Blencowe, A. Hillman, H. Scarlett, R. M. Beard, H. C. Lane, and Captain J. Shiffner. James Marchant, charged with assaulting his wife. He threw her down on the floor, knocked her about the face, giving her two black eyes, and otherwise ill-treated her. He had assaulted her on previous occasions. Ordered to pay 10s. 6d. costs, and bound over.

Dundee Sheriff-court. Before Hon. Sheriff-Substitute Johnstone. James M'Kay and Wm. Coupar, convicted of cruelly ill-treating a mare. Defendants covered the animal's head with a sack, tied her to a tree, and beat her on the head with a hammer for about twenty minutes, killing her. Fined £1 each.

Bishop Auckland Police-court. Before Mr. H. Chaytor and other Justices. Henry Burrosford, charged with wounding James Brown. While complainant was on the ground defendant beat him with a stick, inflicting wounds on his head and leg, and rendering him partially insensible. The charge was reduced to one of common assault, and defendant was fined £1 and costs.

Kirkcaldy Police-court. Before Bailie Tait. John Johnston pleaded guilty to assaulting his wife by striking her on the head and face and kicking her on the body, and also to assaulting his wife's sister by striking her in the face to the effusion of blood. Fined 21s.

Lewes Police-court. Before Mr. F. B. Whitfeld and Mr. H. Whitfeld. Arthur Worthington, charged with poaching. He was caught with three rabbits in his possession. One month.

Wolverhampton Police-court. Before Messrs. C. Neve, R. W. Lewis, and W. F. Mee. Edmund Chell, charged with sleeping out. One month.

Dundee Sheriff-court. Before Hon. Sheriff-Substitute Paul. Margaret Cook, a middle-aged woman, charged with stealing one shilling. She found the coin in the street, and failed to give it up to the police. Ten days.

Market Rasen Police-court. Before Messrs. C. Holdershaw, T. Nettleship, and H. W. Marriott. Charles Booth, charged with stealing a briar pipe, value 6d. He found the pipe lying on a seat in a public-house, picked it up and began to smoke it, refusing to give it to the owner when asked to do so. Fourteen days.

Honiton Police-court. Before Mr. D. W. B. Buchanan (Mayor), Harry Bazley, labourer, charged with vagrancy by sleeping out, and being without visible means of subsistence. Fined 10s., and in default of payment committed for seven days.

Hungerford Petty Sessions. Before Mr. W. H. Dunn, Colonel Willes, Major Aldridge, Dr. Maples, and Mr. N. Bennett. Thomas Little, charged with assaulting Edith Kate Wallace on two occasions. On the first occasion defendant knocked complainant down, knelt on her, and tore her dress; on the second occasion he cut her in the face with a stick and used insulting and threatening language. The Bench said he had acted in a most disgraceful and cowardly manner. Fined £2 and costs, and bound over.

Alloa Police-court. Before Bailie Grant. Peter Conoboy convicted of a brutal assault on his wife. He went home drunk, and maltreated the woman so seriously by striking her with his fists and kneeling upon her, that she had to go to a doctor. Fined £2, and bound over.

Portsmouth Police-court. Before the Mayor (Mr. J. J. Young), Messrs. G. Curtis, and H. G. Matthews. George James, charged with assaulting his wife. He kicked and struck her, inflicting several bad bruises, and she had to go to the hospital. The Mayor said it was a cowardly thing to beat his wife as he had done. Bound over to keep the peace for three months.

Redditch Petty Sessions. Before Messrs. E. W. Haywood, W. Smith, and W. H. Yeomans. John Smith, a young man, convicted of assaulting a little girl aged 7. He took the child to a shed, and indecently assaulted her. A doctor described an injury which the child had received, and which, he said, was, no doubt, caused as the child had stated. The report states that "as the costs (34s.) were heavy" the Bench fined defendant 10s. only; and allowed him a month to pay.

Croydon Police Court. Henry Day, and Mary Ann Poynter, his sister, convicted of assaulting Emma Brickwood. Complainant, who was Day's housekeeper, was treated with shocking brutality, being pulled by the hair and kicked by the man, while Poynter savagely beat her until she was insensible. When rescued she was bruised all over, and bleeding from the eyes, ears, nose, and mouth. Day, one month; Poynter fined 31s.

Macclesfield County Police court. Before Messrs. F. D. Brocklehurst, E. H. Greg, H. C. Yates, W. T. Birchenough, and Rev. F. Richardson. James Timperley, charged with poaching. Three months.

Tunbridge Wells Police-court. Before Mr. H. Browell and other magistrates. William Page, charged with sleeping out. Seven days.

St. Augustine's Petty Sessions, Canterbury. William Pierce, jun., charged with trespassing in search of conies. Fined £1. 19s., including costs.

Brixham Petty Sessions. Before Mr. N. Baker, Major Harlowe-Turner, and Colonel Sir John Daubeny. Frank Clark, fishing apprentice, charged with refusing duty. He had been previously convicted. One month.

Heanor Petty Sessions. Before Messrs. E. M. Mundy, J. J. A. Woolley, W. Smith, J. K. Fletcher, and Lieut.-Colonel F. C. Corfield. James Vicars, charged with stealing one pennyworth of apples from an orchard. Fined £1. 7s., including costs.

Burnley County Police-court. Before Mr. J. Baron and other magistrates. Joseph Ellor and John Slater, convicted of trespassing in pursuit of game. Fined £2 each and costs.

Stamford Borough Police-court. Before the Mayor (Mr. J. S. Loweth), Messrs. H. T. Betts, H. Knott, and C. Chapman. Charles Lansdale, engine-driver, charged with stealing 17¾ lb. of coal belonging to his employers. He had been in their employ for fifteen years and bore a good character. Twenty-one days.

Mansion House Police Court. Before Alderman Alliston, Margaret Taylor, domestic servant, charged with stealing sixpence from her employer's till. The prosecutor recommended her to mercy, on the ground that this was her first offence, and that she had previously borne an excellent character. The Alderman sentenced her to six weeks' hard labour.

It might be too much to say that the Houghton-le-Spring Justices have surpassed all previous performances under the Game Laws, but they have certainly made a bold bid for that distinction by punishing a man for the horrible crime of looking into a rabbit-hole. The defendant was a drayman, and as he could not leave his work he sent his wife to represent him at the Court. The technical charge against him was one of trespassing in search of game, but that the act I have described constituted the head, front, and whole extent of his offending was proved out of the mouths of the witnesses for the prosecution. Here is the report of their evidence:—

Police-constable Sanderson, stationed at Coxgreen, said that he saw defendant walk along a path from a house where he lived to a rabbit-burrow near the Spa Well, in which was a rabbit-trap. There were also snares about. Defendant looked into the rabbit-burrow, and then walked back again. John James Dickeson, gamekeeper, said he was concealed with the officer when he saw defendant look at the rabbit-hole. Mr. Miller (magistrates' clerk): Was that all he did? There is no harm in looking into a rabbit-hole. Did he look at the snares? Witness: No.

After hearing this evidence the magistrates, Messrs. E. Richardson, J. D. Fairless, W. O. Wood, and Colonel Gregson, "consulted as though they were not sure what to do," but, continues the report, "it was at last concluded that defendant had no defence to offer, or he would have appeared at court," and a fine of 10s. and costs was inflicted. It would seem from this that these sapient gentry are actually ignorant of the elementary principle in English law and judicial procedure that it is for the prosecution to prove the defendant's guilt, not for the defendant to prove his innocence. If the Bench wished to deal with the man's failure to answer the summons in person, there was a regular way of doing so, but they had no right to fine him on that account, and it was a preposterous thing to fine him for looking into a rabbit-hole. In everything that concerns the game-preserving interest, however, the administration of the law by the rural magistracy is still very much what it was in the days of Squire Western.

One further point in the case is worthy of notice—I refer to the gamekeeper's statement that he was "concealed with the officer." Times out of number the highest authorities, including the most eminent of her Majesty's Judges, have pointed out that it is no part of the business of the police to act as game-watchers; and if there are men in the Durham Constabulary who have nothing better to do than to mount guard over rabbit-holes the force ought in justice to the ratepayers to be reduced.

A cruel instance of the persecution of an ex-prisoner by the police has been brought under my notice. Last October a man was sentenced at West London Police-court to six months' imprisonment for receiving stolen goods, and, on the expiration of the term in April, he immediately went to a different neighbourhood, where he succeeded in obtaining employment and earning an honest living. He continued to do very well in this place until two or three weeks ago, when the police acquainted the vicar of the parish with the fact of the conviction, and, this information being passed on to the employer, the man (who has a wife and two children dependent upon him) was at once discharged and obliged to quit the neighbourhood. Even if the sentence had included a term of police supervision the action of the police would have been wrong, for so long as an ex-convict duly reports himself and tries to lead an honest life he ought not to be interfered with. But in this particular case the man was not (legally) under supervision at all, and the course taken in officiously warning people of his past is, therefore, all the more unwarrantable and reprehensible. It is precisely by such methods that "old offenders" are manufactured. And then judges lecture them upon the iniquity of pursuing a "career of crime," as though any other career were open to them!

In connection with the "Watizit" swindle, my attention has been called to the following paragraph in a ladies' paper called Woman at Home for July 2:—

Have you seen "Watizit?" If not, I advise you to send at once for a copy of this fascinating puzzle to Miss Edith Hamilton, 2, Arthur-street, Bloomsbury, W.C. The price is only 1s. 6d., post free, and besides you stand a chance of winning the £60 prize. "Watizit" will help to fill up many an idle quarter of an hour in the intervals of tennis, cycling, and picnics, and, moreover, it "can be done," for I have succeeded in solving the puzzle—with the help of a key!

This occurs in a ladies' letter written under the nom de plume of "Etheldreda." The explanation of it apparently is that the "Watizit" swindle had been advertised in the Woman at Home, as had also the previous swindle on the same lines under the name of the "Wizard's Secret." It is bad enough that proprietors of professedly respectable papers should allow these advertisements to appear in their columns at all, but the scandal becomes disgraceful when such advertisements are actually "written up" in the editorial columns.

Although it is not an unknown thing for a political charlatan to push himself into Parliament, it is something new to hear of an itinerant, advertising, trumpet-blowing medical quack as a member of a legislative body. One of my Australian readers tells me that this is the position of a certain Dr. Maloney, who, after a tour in India, is now travelling about his native Australia with "a new and unique method" of curing every ill to which flesh is heir, combined with a "laughter-provoking electrical entertainment." This individual is a member of the Victorian Legislative Assembly, and, says my correspondent, a possible Minister of the future. For aught I know, he may be a sound legislator, but his own advertisements are sufficient to stamp him as a medical quack of the most pernicious class. I see, by the way, that his entourage includes a "Monsieur Richard," described as an "electrical healer." Can this be—as I am assured he is—the "Professor" Richard whose rascally career was exposed in TRUTH a year or so back, with the result that he promptly quitted England? If he is the same man, my Australian contemporaries do an ill service to the public in hiring out their columns for puffing him. If he is not, the sooner he makes the fact known the better both for himself and Dr. Maloney.

A correspondent who has had the misfortune to fall into the clutches of Isaac Gordon writes to inform me that that insatiable and inexorable bloodsucker and "James W. Ryland," of 6, Livery-street, Birmingham, are one and the same individual. This is a fact which I have previously mentioned, but as, judging from the copies of his polychromatic circular which I am getting from all parts of the kingdom, "James W. Ryland" is just now Isaac's favourite nom de guerre, it may be worth while to repeat the information. There is really no end either to his aliases or his addresses, and under any name and at any address he is always the same unmitigated scoundrel. Had he been sentenced to twenty years' imprisonment, instead of twenty months, at Worcester Assizes in 1889, it would have been greatly to the advantage of the country.

Reference was made in TRUTH a fortnight ago to the circulation in Devonshire of indecent advertisements issued by an individual carrying on business at Plymouth as an "Australian herbalist," under the name of Phillips. I have since heard a good deal about this business, which seems to be of the most disreputable kind. It is not, however, carried on actually in Plymouth, but at Stonehouse, a suburb outside the borough borders, and this is only one out of the many scandals ensuing from the exclusion of Stonehouse from the jurisdiction of the Plymouth police. There have been one or two attempts, I believe, to amalgamate the two places, but the Stonehouse authorities resist it obstinately. Why? Have any of them a vested interest in misgovernment?

Cabby is not a bad fellow in the main, but he appears just a little too prone to listen to counsels which are neither wise nor prudent. He is contemplating going on strike once more, with the result that he will inevitably alienate much of the sympathy of a public which not only dislikes being inconvenienced, but very naturally inquires why it should always be made to suffer when he and the proprietors or the proprietors and the Railway Companies fall out. As to whether the privilege question does or does not require revision, I give no opinion; but I can safely predict that it will not be settled by any amount of striking, which in the end will most certainly prove disastrous to cabby. He would do well to remember that in New York the cab or hack is rarely, if ever, resorted to by the inhabitants, who judiciously patronise the public trams. Our underground lines and increased omnibus routes would readily lend themselves to a similar course of action, if the long-suffering Londoner were driven too far.

In one of the communications respecting Dr. Nansen's expedition, it is stated that electric light was generated by means of a windmill. Why should not this be done in latitudes lower than those of the Arctic regions? What is needed is that a wheel should go quickly round. This is generally done by the consumption of coal; sometimes by the fall of water. It is true that the wheel of a windmill only turns when there is wind enough to make it. But then there is such a thing as the storage of electricity. Therefore electric force might, one would suppose, be produced by a windmill and by an electric engine, the latter only being worked when the wind fails. Thus electric power might be generated with a smaller consumption of coal than is now the case. Perhaps some electric engineer will kindly tell me why this joint motive power should not at once be adopted; and if not, why not?

Judging from some remarks in a Kentish journal, the new and more scientific system of hop cultivation, which enables the grower to defy insect and other plagues, is by no means regarded as an unmixed blessing. Washing, syringing, and other new-fangled methods have, it seems, pretty well eliminated the element of chance which formerly existed through the vagaries of the destructive aphis, and a grower can no longer speculate upon the possibility of his profiting by his neighbour's loss. In fact, the journal referred to, in its observations on this season's prospects, laments that a blight, "the one and only event that used to render profitable hop growing possible," is now out of the question; and winds up by expressing the hope that "some avalanche, blizzard, tornado, or tempest will find its way over the south of England and blow half the hop crop to smithereens." No doubt this would be very good business for growers whose crops were left; but what about the others?

I find myself in rather hot water owing to my remarks last week on the subject of gardeners' perquisites from seedsmen and florists, which have excited the wrath of several worthy individuals. This is the sort of epistle I am receiving:—

> DEAR SIR,—In reference to your paragraph in this week's TRUTH, I object to it most strongly as a gentleman's servant. It ought never to have been published. We have very few to take our part, and are often blamed for things over which we have no control, and are in very many cases a down-trodden class. I admit there are some of the character you write, but the majority, both of male and female servants, are far more honest and God-fearing than their employers. Expose our faults, but give us the credit we deserve, &c., &c.

Another critic of the same class bids me finish that article in my next issue, "by telling all the truth," which seems to be that in twenty-three years' experience of the gardening profession, the writer has never known a gardener guilty of a dirty trick. My worthy friends, let me remind you that we are all, including even journalists, descended from the first gardener, Adam, who bequeathed to his posterity sundry failings which we all share in common. I have never suggested that gardeners, or any other class of servants, are worse than the rest of human kind. The worst I think about them is that human nature is much the same in servants and employers; and that employers are far from perfect I need no reminding, for TRUTH largely exists for the purpose of exposing their imperfections.

Lord Wemyss has enriched the journals of the House of Lords with a protest against the Irish Land Act, which is about as long as an ordinary newspaper article, consisting of seven elaborate denunciatory clauses, and the fact is that this diatribe seems to be really a speech intended to have been delivered in opposition to the second reading of the measure to which it refers. Lord Wemyss winds up his characteristic attack by asserting that the Act "establishes further vicious precedents that will infallibly, in due course, come home to roost in the homesteads and industries of Great Britain." The real meaning of these mandrake-like wailings is that Lord Wemyss dreads the day when the advantages of the Irish Land Laws will be conferred upon the tenant farmers "of Great Britain."

Since writing last week upon the stupendous folly of the scheme for constructing a railway to Uganda, on which three millions of our money (to begin with) are to be squandered, I have received the following account of the amazing way in which this fatuous project has been inaugurated at Mombasa. The gentleman who sends me the statement remarks that it reveals "a case of really grossly illegal and tyrannical conduct on the part of the Consular officials in the Protectorate of Zanzibar," and his language does not seem a bit too strong. The rights of the landowners in the island of Mombasa, some of them Europeans, appear, indeed, to have been treated with just the same scant respect which the makers of the railway will, by and by, show for the rights of the natives whose property they require on the road to Uganda. Here is an outline of the chief facts:—

. . . The railway engineers landed at Mombasa in November last, and surveyed the island with a view to locating the central station and commencing the line. Under the direction of the Consul-General, they proceeded in a few weeks to take possession of various private lands, and to begin destroying trees, cutting roads, and erecting buildings without notice or reference to the owners of the properties seized. Protests were lodged by the landowners, but it was not till February 29 last that steps were taken by the local officials to legalise their position and recognise the rights of private individuals, and then only (as subsequent events proved) with the settled purpose of forcing them to accept the award of a dummy Commission. Most of the protests by the landowners were ignored, but in replying to one the Consul-General wrote as follows:—"As a matter of fact no Act of Parliament is necessary in the Zanzibar dominions to enable the Administration to expropriate private owners in the public interest. The private rights of British subjects are protected at Mombasa by the treaties between her Majesty and his Highness the Sultan, but her Majesty may waive or surrender the privileges which these treaties confer." However, the Consul-General was good enough to add that "there was at present no question of expropriating owners," and it was at length arranged that a Commission of five members, two being officials, two representatives of the landowners, and one a merchant, should be appointed to assess the value of the properties taken for the railway. Then, without any warning, it was announced that the number of the Commissioners had been reduced to three, only one to be a landowner. The owners naturally objected to this change, and would only consent to take part in the proceedings on condition that their right of appeal to the Judge of her Majesty's Consular Court at Zanzibar was acknowledged. As this condition was not granted they withdrew from the Commission, and the two other members then proceeded to make an assessment of the properties, which is regarded as altogether unreasonable and inadequate. The landowners took action in the Consular Court to obtain an injunction against the trespassers on their property, but meanwhile the local authorities had secured an order in Council giving them fresh powers, and rendering the position of the injured parties more helpless than ever. All the landowners have asked for was a judicial award by her Majesty's Court at Zanzibar; but after the most extraordinary subterfuges and changes of attitude the Consular officials have refused to agree to it. Why they should refuse, unless there has been something wrong in their course of procedure, it is impossible to understand.

It is to be regretted that no opportunity was found of raising this matter before the prorogation of Parliament; but nevertheless I hope that the representations of the landowners concerned will result in a strict inquiry being made by the Foreign Office into the treatment they have received. There are two or three points to which attention ought to be specially directed. First, there is the singular action of the Consul-General in threatening the abrogation of British Treaty rights for the purpose of expropriating a few British landowners in Mombasa—surely a most unjustifiable proceeding. Then there is the question, not mentioned in the above statement, of the quantity of land which will be required for the purpose of the railway at Mombasa. As I understand, the authorities have seized a block of no less than 400 acres, about a third of the island, comprising nearly all the available building sites of the new town of Mombasa. Is it seriously contended that all this land will be required for the alleged purpose of a station and station-yard for the Uganda Railway? Finally, there is the important point whether some change ought not to be made in the system under which Orders in Council are obtained by officials in such cases without the knowledge of persons directly and injuriously affected.

SCRUTATOR.

THE NEGATION OF GOD ON EARTH.

ONCE there were, in all probability, living things in the moon. Very possibly, in those long-vanished times, there were rival nations and eminent statesmen, so mighty and so wise that all thought that the memory of them would endure for ever. Yet, with these nations and these statesmen, their schemes and their dreams, it is as though they had never been. They have vanished into space, like the baseless fabric of a vision. So it will be with us. Our globe is cooling down, and when the temperature has fallen to a certain point, not one living thing will remain on it. And yet the lifetime of our planet is almost an eternity compared with that of one of the human grubs that for a few brief moments live—as we call it—upon its surface. Is it not, then, wonderful that for long successive generations of these grubs they deluded themselves into a notion that sun, moon, and stars were made for them to look at? Is it not wonderful that we, who know what a speck our planet is in the universe, and how brief is our existence on it, should take ourselves so very seriously?

Still here we are, and it is perhaps as well that we should rather endeavour to make the best of things whilst we are here, than lose ourselves in the consideration of our utter nothingness. We cannot meddle or interfere in what is going on outside our world; otherwise, with the illusion which possesses us, that we are a sort of universal Providence, we probably should do so. And thus I arrive at the conclusion that, being citizens of the British Empire, we should do well not to meddle and interfere outside that Empire. It will be full time for us to do this when we have put an end to the want and misery within our borders.

We live under a system of Party Government. Since I have known politics, I have heard it urged that we all should unite in some sort of National Party. But there has always been this difficulty, each Party desires to have its views adopted by the other. Yet this has come to pass in respect to our foreign policy. Since Mr. Gladstone withdrew from public affairs, this continuity has been served by the Liberal leaders accepting, and even exaggerating, the foreign policy of the Conservatives, and every Liberal not disposed silently to assent to this surrender, and to laud what he previously cursed, is denounced by the Press as a pestilential idiot, seeking, so far as he can, to bring his country into dishonour and discredit. And what has been the outcome of this continuity? Our armaments are increasing in such proportions that they soon will absorb our entire revenue, and with the increase of our armaments our swagger daily increases. Only a few months ago we were rejoicing in the thought that possibly we should be at war with the entire world. We welcomed this outlook, for we felt that the world ought to be made to understand, once and for all, that in us it has its master.

I suppose that we have given up all thought of frightening the German Emperor, of threatening France, of going to war with the United States, and of forbidding Russia to extend her frontiers in Eastern Asia—at least we are not disposed to do all this at once, as was suggested to us last autumn by our intelligent Press. Just now we seem to be concerning ourselves with the Turkish Empire, and some of us are minded to accept a European war, in order to free the Christians in Turkey from the yoke of the Sultan.

Wondrous, indeed, is the change. For years we have stood forward as the friend of the Turk. Thanks to us, the existence of the vilest Government that can well be imagined has been artificially prolonged. After the last Russo-Turkish war a large portion of European Turkey, which had been freed from Turkish misrule by the Treaty of San Stefano, was restored to it by the Treaty of Berlin. The better government of Armenia had been secured by a provision in the same treaty. We could not permit this, owing to our jealousy of Russia. All this was in accordance with our traditional policy, which has been to make the Turks a barrier against Russian approach to the Mediterranean, and to sacrifice to this aim the well-being of the Christians in Turkey. I am glad that public opinion has at length awakened to the iniquity of this policy, although I think it exceedingly probable that our statesmen, who are most of them wedded to the old anti-Russian policy, will pay very scant attention to public opinion. Our humanitarianism is short-lived. How long is it since we were clamouring for a stop to be put to the Armenian atrocities? They are still going on, but our newspapers hardly condescend to allude to them. Crete now occupies their attention.

What I would have the country realise is this: So long as the Turkish Empire has sway over subject Christian populations, so long will its rule over these populations be a negation of God on earth. The misgovernment will be now more, now less, acute, but it will be the normal state of things. The only way to put an end to it is the "bag-and-baggage" policy advocated by Mr. Gladstone in respect to Bulgaria, and which has proved so successful in that Principality. I do not believe in our undertaking a crusade to drive out the Turk. I no more regard this as our duty, than it is our duty to reform the Chinese Empire. We should have all Continental Europe against us, because the great European Powers distrust our good faith. Is this surprising? We got hold of Cyprus as a condition of aiding the Turk to maintain his hold over the Christians of European Turkey. We interfered in Egypt to secure to usurers their ill-gotten gains, and although we pledged ourselves that our occupation would be but temporary, we have established ourselves there as though it belonged to us, and we are now engaged in making the Egyptians conquer the Soudan in order to increase the area of what really is our rule. For the well-being of no country outside the British Empire, would I risk becoming parties to a great European war. In the case of Turkey, I do not believe that this would be necessary. Once let us distinctly declare that the integrity of the Turkish Empire is no concern of ours, and that Empire would not last another ten years as an independent Power. When King Bomba outraged the public conscience by his misgovernment of Southern Italy, did we send an army to dethrone him? No, we put him under a ban by withdrawing our Minister and refusing to have any relations with him. This was enough: in a few years the Bourbons ceased to reign in Naples. So it will be with the Sultan, so far as his power to oppress is concerned. We ought to withdraw our Embassy from Constantinople, on the ground that no civilised country can have official dealings with Turkey. This would be enough. I am no believer in bluster. In the present state of Europe we cannot attack the Turk without risking a great war. This risk we should not be justified in incurring. But what we can do, we ought to do. Our miserable jealousy of Russia, and our absurd notion that if Russia were paramount at Constantinople, this would be the end of the British Empire, has kept the Turk on his legs. We are the crutch on which he has leant. Let us, at least, withdraw the crutch, unless we are the most contemptible of hypocrites.

Russia ought to have an outlet to the Mediterranean. Were we in her geographical position we should long ago have insisted on this. So far as we are concerned, we cannot ask for more than a right of way through the Mediterranean, because this is our nearest road to our Eastern Empire. But as, in the event of a great maritime war to which we were parties, we could close the eastern outlet from the Red Sea to our enemies and revert to the Cape route, the Mediterranean has not to us the importance which is ascribed to it by some. What are the two territorial neighbours of Turkey? Russia and Austria, and to Russia and Austria we ought to leave all relations with that Empire. The result would probably be that the sphere of influence of Austria would extend to Salonica, and that of Russia embrace the rest of the Empire in Europe and Asia Minor. This would be far better than a concert of Europe which really is no concert. Between the trio, the Christian populations would be fairly governed, owing to the pressure that these two Powers would exercise, whilst the Eastern Question would be localised. If all the islands in the Levant were handed over to Greece under some sort of vague Turkish suzerainty, such as exists over Cyprus, this would be most desirable. By degrees the Sultan would be reduced to the position that the Sovereign of Hindustan occupied in India—a mere royalty, without more political power than any other inhabitant of Constantinople.

HOTEL v. LODGING-HOUSE.

Recently some discussion took place in TRUTH on the charges of English as compared with those of Dutch hotels. One result of it was to bring me a very interesting and suggestive communication on a cognate subject—the charges of British lodging-house keepers. The writer addressed me from Liverpool, and his address would signify that he belongs to the comfortable classes. His letter had reference to a watering-place on the shores of the Irish Sea, much patronised by Liverpudlians. He indicted the place by name, but as it seems to me that the indictment would apply equally well to a dozen other places round the coast, I will take the liberty of veiling the name under the symbol "X," which will represent any sea-side place the reader happens to be familiar with, and also the price of lodgings, which is often an "unknown quantity"—until you have got your bill. The facts relied on in the indictment were in substance these: For the best flats on the Parade at X. the proprietors are asking at present ten and twelve guineas per week; for inferior accommodation in the same houses the price is seven guineas. In side streets the price drops down to five guineas for a set of rooms at a considerable distance from the sea. These charges, however, are supplemented by innumerable extras. Further, it is the regular practice—one might almost say it is an understood thing—for the landlady and her family to subsist upon the victuals of her lodgers. A joint sent down-stairs re-appears in an attenuated shape, having lost several pounds in its descent and return. The same process occurs in the case of bread, milk, butter, cheese, and sugar. In some cases, even wines, spirits, dessert, and other luxuries, kept in the lodgers' rooms, pay toll on the same scale. Thus the lodger, during the period he is in residence, has to cater for an unknown number of individuals in addition to his own family. "The cry is," wrote my correspondent, "that X. is only half-filled," and he went on to imply that X. had only itself, and the organised brigandage carried on by its inhabitants, to thank for this result.

This set me thinking, and my thoughts took this shape: Why on earth do people who can afford to pay anything from five to twelve guineas a week for a set of three or four rooms go to lodgings at all when away for their holidays? Take the case of a paterfamilias who is paying, say, ten guineas a week for perhaps three bedrooms and a sitting-room in the best position at some fashionable watering-place — Eastbourne, Scarborough, Llandudno, or wherever it may be. His party will comprise, let us say, himself and wife, three children, and a maid. His ten guineas per week are swollen to £12 by the time he has paid the extra charges for "kitchen fire," 6d. per gas-burner, 1d. or 2d. for each pair of boots cleaned, 2s. 6d. per week for the famous lodging-house "cruet," various items for "washing linen;" and so on, and so on. For this expenditure he gets simply his lodging. He has to board his whole party at extortionate sea-side prices. He is the prey at every turn of tradespeople who, like the landlady, have to make their profit for the whole year in the space of six weeks or two months. He is, for the most part, badly as well as dearly served. Finally, he has to pay toll on every article of food purchased, to the landlady, her family, and her servants. Now, in any one of the towns I have mentioned, the same paterfamilias would probably have no difficulty in finding an excellent hotel where his party would be accommodated at an inclusive charge amounting in the aggregate to about sixteen or eighteen guineas per week. At that rate, I question whether he would be out of pocket as compared with his lodging-house, and how would he stand in other respects? He might not have the best bedrooms in the house, nor would he have a sitting-room to himself; but what of that? Instead of a single sitting-room to live, eat, smoke, and snooze in, with his children always obtruding themselves, he will have the use of as good dining, drawing, reading, smoking, and billiard-room as in his own house—probably also a comfortable lounge, and some sort of garden, where he or the younger generation can play tennis. He and Mrs. P. will have a chance of making friends and enjoying a little society outside their own circle, if they care for it. He will have an unlimited supply of newspapers, periodicals, and stationery gratis. He will have a first-rate table and a liberal choice of viands at every meal, beyond all comparison with anything he could get in lodgings, except at ruinous cost; and, what is probably of more consequence, he will get decent cooking instead of the abominable process passing by that name at most lodging-houses. He will have a staff of competent and trained servants at his beck and call, in place of an ignorant, and probably draggle-tailed, lodging-house slavey, and he will have a dozen other small conveniences and comforts which no lodging-house can possibly afford. Last, but not least, Mrs. P. will be relieved from all the trouble and bother of marketing and arranging meals, and the holiday will be a holiday for her as well as for the rest of the family, which it very seldom is in a lodging-house.

When one figures out and sums up the pros and cons of the account, I confess I wonder that so many people make martyrs of themselves in dear and nasty lodgings, when they might be enjoying their holidays in comfort, at little or no extra expense, and often at a saving, in excellent hotels. For the humble middle-class man who must find accommodation for himself and family at two or three guineas a week, the lodging-house may be a dreadful necessity. The only consolation for him is that he spends most of his time out of doors, and only comes in to feed and go to bed. If it happens to rain for a few days in succession, life indeed becomes a burden to him, and well may he return to his daily round with a sad conviction that holidays are a fraud. But for the man who can afford to spend three or four guineas a week per head for the board and lodging of himself and household at the sea-side, or who is prepared to pay it even if he cannot afford it, to go into "apartments" while there are on every side hotels, either licensed houses or "private," which will provide a family with every comfort at about this rate, seems to me the extreme of folly. Many people have a reluctance to take young children into an hotel, and if the darlings are to be introduced into the public rooms, far be it from me to reason against this very becoming feeling. But at all good hotels, young children will be just as well looked after, in charge of a maid, in the "steward's room," as in the public dining-room, and will be far happier in that unconventional region. As the cost of their board will be reduced in proportion, their parents will have a substantial compensation for this temporary severance from their offspring. No, my worthy Paterfamilias. Depend upon it, even if it costs you two or three pounds more per week to take your family to a quiet, well-managed hotel, you will find the money well spent, and will enjoy your holiday all the better for it; while as for Mrs. P., poor lady, for whom the summer holiday has hitherto simply meant an aggravation of all the worry and annoyance of house-keeping, she will have such a time as she has never yet known since she entered into the bonds of wedlock. That is my advice to you in future, when you complain to me about the rapacity and dishonesty of lodging-house keepers.

EMIGRATION AND ASPDINISM.

The Emigrants' Information Office has just issued another of its useful warnings to intending emigrants, which it is to be hoped will reach the many whom it concerns. The latest warning is specially directed against the "farm-pupil premium system," the workings of which have so often been shown up in these columns, and against the frauds perpetrated on British emigrants by vendors of land in California, mostly American companies. With regard to the farm-pupil traffic, the Emigration Office say nothing but what ought to be familiar to my readers; but as several of the more active agencies in this line of business are still as busy as ever, and must be reaping every season their periodical crop of victims, it seems desirable to remind the public that everything that has been said in TRUTH on this subject is borne out by official utterances. The following extract from the last Government warning is a good example of the kind of swindle which I have so frequently exposed. It has reference to a party of young men who had been booked to Kansas by one of the English farm-pupil agencies:—

> The young men appear to have come out in response to an advertisement in the English newspapers. . . . I understand that those who are remaining in Canada paid some £25, and those who left for Kansas some £45. This money was paid in consideration of a situation being found for them here, and for the purpose of paying their immediate fare from Liverpool to Montreal, and first-class fare from there to Toronto, which altogether amounts to about 36.65 dollars. This would leave over some 73 dollars that each young man pays to an agency for service in placing them on a farm to work the same as farmers' sons, on the following terms:—
> The first six months for nothing, the next twelve months for 5 dollars a month, and then for what they are able to obtain. The young men have had to pay their hotel expenses during their journey. They are of the better class, and several very well educated.
> In nearly all cases the young men are grievously disappointed, expecting to be placed on first-class farms, which, however, is seldom done, the farms allotted to them having very poor accommodation, and consequently they eventually drift back to the cities, where they fail to find employment, and thus swell the already large number of distressed British subjects.

To this it is added, on the authority of the British Vice-Consul of Kansas city, that during the last year "over sixty young men were sent into this Vice-Consular district under false pretences from Great Britain." All these youngsters had paid handsomely in advance to be apprenticed on a "large stock farm;" they were all placed on small farms, and "in some cases not provided with work, but left to the mercy of strangers, which forced them to seek advice and assistance from the Vice-Consul." The Vice-Consul adds, what I think no one will deny, that all such agencies ought to be suppressed.

One of the most flourishing of these agencies is the one familiar to my readers as the "Canadian Farm-Pupil Association," conducted by James Aspdin, of Pendock, Tewkesbury, under the utterly false pretence of being not a commercial, but a philanthropic undertaking. In my last reference to this individual I promised to give some further particulars of the experiences of his "pupils," and here is one case which will serve as an illustration of many more. As in the last case to which I drew attention, the pupil was the son of a retired officer, whom it will be sufficient to designate as Colonel R. The parents got into communication with Aspdin through an advertisement in the Church Times emanating from a man named Collinson. This is a characteristic touch at the outset, the Aspdin Association having given up advertising in their own name since they attained undesirable notoriety by being shown up in TRUTH, and being generally content to advertise through a decoy, in the shape of a farmer about to return to Canada and desirous of taking out young men with him. Having answered Collinson's advertisement, the parents received a letter from Aspdin. In the course of the correspondence which ensued, Aspdin undertook to place the son on a farm in Ontario at the usual price of £30. This sum was to include the fare from Liverpool to Western Ontario, and all charges for placing the youth, as well as for supervision during the period of pupilage—the kind of supervision until recently undertaken by that disreputable old disgrace to his Church, the late Rev. Dr. Armstrong, of Mooretown. The pupils, Aspdin stated, were placed with "good practical farmers, who make a business of agriculture, and make it pay." All pupils, he also asserted, received in addition to board and lodging, payment for their services, "therefore they are self-supporting from the first;" and they would enjoy "most of the conveniences, if not all the luxuries of civilised life together with the safeguards which are so essential in starting a young fellow successfully in life." In another letter Aspdin stated that a pupil usually received from £10 to £12 the first year, in addition to board and lodging, double that amount in the second year, after which "he should be able to earn good pay." The £30 having been paid, young Mr. R. went to see Aspdin, that individual having expressed a desire to meet him personally before he sailed. On his arrival in Canada, Aspdin's agent was not there to meet him as had been arranged, and he went to the nearest hotel, where Aspdin's agent eventually found him. After remaining at the hotel for two days at his own expense, he was taken to a farmer, who, however, was not willing to receive him. He was then taken to another place, which he describes as being so filthy and dilapidated that he refused to stay in the house, and he was finally deposited on a third farm, the owner of which undertook to take him for a month on trial. He found the life intolerably rough and uncomfortable, and he was kept at work every day from 5 a.m. till 8 p.m. He had to share a small room with two other young fellows, and to sleep in the same bed with one of them, who was so dirty that Mr. R. says he left his impression on the bed every time he got up from it. At the end of the month the "pupil" asked for the 5 dols. which he had been promised, but the farmer declined to pay him anything, saying that he would receive nothing but his board and lodging. The young man accordingly left, and, like so many others in his position, made his way to Montreal, and endeavoured to find work there. The winter having set in, and the unemployed being numerous, he soon found that there was little or no chance of getting work, and eventually returned to England, his little trip having cost close upon £60.

When his son came back and reported his experiences, Colonel R. wrote to Aspdin, pointing out that the conditions of the contract had not been fulfilled, and asking for a return of some portion of the money that had been paid. Aspdin, precisely as in the last case to which I called attention, retorted by making all sorts of charges against young Mr. R., contending that he had broken his contract by leaving his place without notice, but offering to find him another if he liked to return to Canada. He concluded by saying that if necessary he would obtain "statements on oath relative to the matter" for the father's satisfaction. No doubt he would! Readers of TRUTH have seen these statements on oath already, and I doubt not that Aspdin can always get as many of them as he requires for any purpose from the parties with whom he works in Canada. That is all the satisfaction that the father has been able to get, and it is as much as any one is likely to get who pays money to this gang. When they have pocketed your money and given you nothing in exchange, they add insult to injury by defaming the character of their victim with sworn declarations. In my recent article "James Aspdin Unmasked," I dealt with certain infamous libels of this character which he had been surreptitiously circulating in answer to previous statements in TRUTH. I have since heard from Canada that one of the men who made these declarations was an individual of doubtful character and shady record. A man of this type is, of course, ready to swear to anything to justify himself and the agency with which he does so lucrative a business.

Even if it were credible that the complaints of farm pupils continually coming to hand are pure inventions, the fact would still remain that the business carried on by Aspdin and others of his class is essentially a fraudulent one. The point to be considered is, that any respectable Canadian farmer will cheerfully take a well-behaved, industrious lad in return for his services, teach him all he can, board and lodge him, and be ready to pay him a small and gradually increasing wage as soon as he proves himself worth it. All that is necessary is for the emigrant to find such a farmer, and this, as I have pointed out again and again, the Emigration Office in London, and the Canadian Government authorities on the other side, will do for every emigrant absolutely free of charge. The whole fee, therefore, that is levied by men like Aspdin—with the exception, of course, of the five or six pounds which is the cost of the passage out—is simply a charge for doing what the emigrant could get done for nothing if he were sufficiently wide awake. In other words, the Aspdin fraternity trade solely upon the ignorance of their victims.

Reference has once or twice been made in TRUTH to another concern called the "International Emigration Association, Limited," of 47, Victoria-street, Westminster. I recently received a circular issued by this Association, and headed "Important to Emigrants," which is, from beginning to end, a tissue of falsehood and misrepresentation. "We do not dispute the fact," says this precious Association, "that a young fellow may do equally well by going out independent of our cadet system, yet at the same time, the chances are greatly against his so doing." They go on to say that by going "independent of our cadet system" the emigrant, on reaching his destination, "has to take his chance of employment (sometimes very difficult to obtain) in addition to the worry and anxiety of having no guarantee of a comfortable home or payment of wages." They add a warning to parents against sending their sons abroad "without friends, to be at the mercy of touts and agents, whose advice is often misleading," and so on. Compare this with the following passage from the last official warning to emigrants issued by the Emigrants' Information Office:—

> Under the farm pupil premium system certain agencies in this country, some of which are now notorious, undertake, on the payment of specified fees, to find situations for young men on farms in Canada, and their operations extend also into the United States. There is no real consideration for the payments, which are in all cases unnecessary and in some cases simply fraudulent. . . . .
> The services of the Canadian Government agencies, both in this country and in Canada, are freely available, so are the services of the British Consuls in the United States, and the Emigrants' Information Office was instituted for the express purpose of giving gratuitously trustworthy guidance and advice. There is no reason whatever for employing agents who make their living out of the monies which they receive from, or on behalf of, intending emigrants. . . . .

Every sentence here gives the lie to the statements and suggestions of the "International Emigration Association, Limited," and proves up to the hilt what I have said in regard to Aspdin and all his class. I would earnestly urge upon my brother-editors, more especially in the provinces and the country districts, the desirability of doing more to bring the true state of the case before their readers. Although TRUTH has a very extensive circulation, it does not always reach the class from which many of the victims of farm-pupil agencies are drawn. In spite of the repeated warnings that I and others have given, the greatest ignorance on this subject still prevails among fathers of families, and the Press cannot do a better service than help to dissipate this ignorance on which alone farm-pupil harpies live and thrive.

LEIGH SAMPSON UP TO DATE.

As usual in these cases, the exposure in TRUTH of the frauds of Mr. Levi, alias Leigh, alias Lloyd, alias Donald Sampson, has brought me a great deal of correspondence disclosing further cases in which this wily and unprincipled rascal has imposed upon the good nature of benevolent people in his character of the impecunious artist. They are all much of the same character, but one or two are specially noteworthy as evidence of Sampson's artfulness. Here is a letter written by him in October last:—

> 44, Amesbury-avenue, Streatham Hill, London, S.W.,
> October 16, 1895.
> DEAR SIR,—You will possibly remember my writing to you last year on the subject of my drawings in water colour.
> You sent me very kindly £2. I have long meant to paint you something for that money, and I now beg to send you a hand-painted satin sachet for a lady's handkerchiefs of equal value, and I beseech you to accept it in exchange for the £2 sent.

Learning, Dear Sir, you are in London for a few days, I earnestly and respectfully beg you to consider if you could purchase one of my drawings in water colour at a time of the greatest moment to my fortune.

I have had the greatest misfortune lately, and for the past five months have not sold a single work.

Recently I applied for a situation as Teacher of Art in a school at Adelaide, South Australia, and as the enclosed letter shows, I have obtained it.

I am writing to respectfully ask you if, as I have to pay my own passage, you could purchase of me a really pretty drawing in water colour of "Where Shakespeare Sleeps, Holy Trinity Church, Stratford-on-Avon, at Sunset."

The price is only twelve guineas. I shall be most deeply and sincerely grateful did you kindly consent to retain it.

Knowing the price is a low one, I beg to invite an expert's valuation, by which I would gladly abide.

I beg to add that I do not ask for charity, nor could I accept it. I seek only to sell you the drawing subject to an expert's valuation.

For years I have suffered extreme privations, and I am most anxious to emigrate.

I shall be most deeply grateful did you kindly purchase the drawing.—I beg to remain, Dear Sir, your obedient servant,

L. Sampson.

It will be seen from this letter that the gentleman to whom it was addressed had first of all been applied to to buy a picture, and not being disposed to buy it sent Sampson £2 by way of charity. The virtuous Sampson, although, as he now proudly declares, he cannot and will not accept charity, pocketed the £2 and lay low for a year. He then evolves an ingenious scheme for bleeding this gentleman again, and as the first step sends him a bit of fancy work, which he pretends to have painted himself, but which he doubtless bought for the purpose. By this dodge he puts himself in the position of having wiped out all obligations in respect to the previous £2, and prepares the way for a fresh deal, by means of the other false pretence about the art appointment at Adelaide. He seems to have come across a very open-handed gentleman, and the trick succeeded only too well, the gentleman buying the picture at Sampson's price of £12. 12s., although he tells me that he had so little use for it that he has not to this day even opened the parcel in which it came. Sampson's letter acknowledging the cheque is another characteristic piece of humbug. He writes to the gentleman's son :—

Whatever my fortune in Australia may be, I shall never cease to think of Mr. ——— save with a full and grateful heart. I will try my very best to succeed, and, should fortune smile upon me, I shall attribute my success in the main to the benevolent patronage of your esteemed father.

Was there ever such an oily-tongued impostor ?

In a later case he appears in a new character, and under a new alias. This time, as he is writing to a Scotchman, he becomes a Scotch artist again, but for some reason he avoids the sobriquet of "Donald" Sampson, which he has lately used when writing to some of his Scotch "patrons," and comes out as Mr. "Alexander Clark." There is a peculiarly fine Scotch atmosphere about this work of art—one of the latest that Sampson has executed :—

100, Disraeli-road, Putney, London, S.W.,

Dear Sir ——,

May I most respectfully ask, now that you have come to reside in London, if you are inclined to purchase a few pictures of Scottish scenery ?

I am afraid you will think it great presumption my writing to you, but I am a poor man with many to provide for.

The dealers are over-stocked and refuse to buy, private buyers no longer exist, and the trade in art is greatly depressed.

Not having sold anything for many months past I am rendered extremely anxious to do so now, and I most humbly entreat you, Sir ——, to honour me by kindly examining the accompanying three pretty drawings in water colours, price only twelve guineas each, or £35 for the three.

One is called "Caledonia, Stern and Wild" (a scene near Abbotsford, the home of Sir Walter Scott). The next "Afton Water" (from the poem by Burns). And "By the Winding Ayr" (from "Highland Mary," by Burns).

In humbly apologising for the intrusion, I beg to say that I write only as a last resource, having had the greatest possible trouble of late months, and knowing of your great interest in Scottish Art.

I shall be most grateful did you purchase of me, Sir ——, but I wish specially to say I do not ask charity, nor could I accept it ; I seek only to sell the drawings, subject to the valuation of an expert, which I specially invite.

With much respect, and earnestly hoping for a favourable reply, I beg to remain, Sir ——, your most obedient humble servant, Alexander Clark.

P.S.—I have often sketched round ——.

This epistle was addressed to a gentleman occupying an official position, and came into the hands of a secretary, who happened to be a reader of Truth, and smelt Leigh Sampson behind "Alexander Clark." This gentleman wrote to "Clark" saying that he had seen similar letters with similar wording, but over another name, and had also read certain articles in Truth which had probably come under Mr. Clark's notice ; accordingly, he had not forwarded the letter to Sir ——. He added that the drawings had arrived, and would remain at the artist's risk, and would be handed over to him on the amount due for carriage, which he had (as usual) omitted to prepay, being forwarded. Sampson was not in the least taken aback by this communication—his impudence is proof, I imagine, against a great deal more than that. He replied by enclosing six stamps in payment of the carriage of the pictures, and sent a carrier to fetch them away, without further remark.

Mr. "Alexander Clark," however, is not always a Scotchman. He possesses an adaptable nationality, and was born, I imagine, in the same kingdom and county as any patron of art whom he happens to be addressing. Here is an extract from a letter written so recently as July 29 to a gentleman residing in Surrey. This also is dated from 100, Disraeli-road Putney, which may therefore be taken as the very latest of Sampson's numerous addresses :—

Dear Sir,—I beg you most respectfully not to be offended at my addressing you on the subject of my pictures.

Two years ago I did so, and your reply declining them, sympathised with young Surrey gentlemen who were unable to sell their pictures, and hoped to hear of my future success.

Since then, dear sir, I have experienced the greatest misfortune, and for the past five months I have sold nothing whatever, nor can I do so now, and I am filled with anxiety. I have therefore decided to emigrate, believing there is no opening in England for me. This is the reason I take the extreme liberty (for which I humbly apologise, and which I hope you may forgive) of sending for your kind inspection the accompanying good drawing in water-colour, &c.

This letter is signed "Alexander Clark," and goes on in the same strain as the last one I quoted. The gentleman addressed in this case had no recollection whatever of having written to "Alexander Clark," and replied requesting that individual to let him have a copy of his letter, which, it is needless to say, he never received. ately afterwards his attention was called to the last article on Leigh Sampson in TRUTH, and he has consequently not as yet purchased the "good drawing in water colour."

It will be seen from all this evidence what a cool hand this Sampson is, and what a wonderful variety of resources he possesses. From what I have seen of gentry of this character, I do not suppose that the mere exposure of his tricks in TRUTH will lead him to abandon his dishonest practices and set about earning an honest livelihood. For this reason I would recommend the public to be on the look out for him in any new disguise which he may assume. I heard accidentally the other day that he had been staying at Margate, where possibly he has been recruiting his energies after the depressing consequences of his exposure; and as he appears to have no means of subsistence apart from his connection with the picture trade, he is pretty sure to be trying his hand before long at some new swindle at the expense of patrons of art. If any of my readers should come across him, or any one at all resembling him, I trust that they will not fail to inform me of the facts, and I will do my best to keep on Mr. Levi Sampson's track.

NOTES FROM PARIS.

FRENCH BREAD ON BELGIAN WATERS.

THE Citizen King did a good thing for his posterity in letting Belgium become an independent State. He cast his bread upon the waters, and his descendants are finding it after many days. The Belgians have afforded the highest rank and great wealth to his eldest daughter, her children, and children's children. They are now taking on a daughter of the Comte de Paris as a coming Queen. She is a sonsy, German-looking girl—fair, fresh, and agreeable, but not likely to improve when beauté de diable gives way to matronly appearance. Her nose is retroussé, mouth cherry ripe, demure, and made to say soft things. The cheeks are well rounded, but with an oval contour. She has a charming figure, that goes well with the face. I fancy she is domestic, like her sister Hélène, who acted as her governess, and was indeed a mother to her younger brother and sisters. This match will draw, I hear, a lot of money out of the Duc d'Aumale's capital. He had intended to leave the best part of his fortune to his namesake, Prince Henri. But he has been brought to take an interest in the family of the Comte de Paris. He helped to secure a Royal match in Italy for the Princesse Hélène. The Queen of the Belgians came to ask his formal sanction of the marriage of Prince Albert and the Princess Isabelle, who are his grand-nephew and grand-niece. Her Majesty does not often trouble Chantilly with her presence. She only stayed there an afternoon and night, and had with her the Princesse Clémentine. The heir to the Comte de Flandre and the Belgian throne is a brilliant match for a Princess whose brother is a King in partibus. The drawback is his appearance. Prince Baldwin, who died a few years ago, was singularly handsome. Flattery could hardly speak of Prince Albert as well favoured and of ruddy countenance. Physically he is said, by those who wish to pay him their court, to resemble the Duke of Burgundy, grandson of Louis XIV. That Prince was slightly awry, and looked better in a carriage than on horseback.

There is no Prince in Europe more royally lodged than the King of the Belgians. I cannot think of any Prince, unless the Comte de Flandre, who is so comfortably cared for. His marine villa at Ostend is near the south end of the tiled Esplanade, and has in front the finest sands and sea view to be had east of St. Malo. The tiled Esplanade, nearly three miles long, is beyond comparison the finest sea-walk in Europe. The house fronts are sumptuously handsome, and the earnest of the splendid interiors. Ostend, need I say, is one of the gambling centres of Europe, and is being made—with, it is said, the sanction and aid of Royalty—a rival of Monaco. The Casino, it appears, stands in the way, and has been a good deal bothered in consequence. Ostend, this season, is almost what Baden-Baden used to be in the days of Benazet. In point of very fine and very fast company, it is quite equal to the Black Forest watering-place in its best days. Every morning, from sunrise to a quarter-past nine, the Esplanade is given over to cyclists. One sees there then only wheel-men and wheel-women. The latter predominate, and equality reigns. Prince, professor, actor, actress, professional beauty, rejuvenated dame, Monsieur Alphonse, Belgian nobleman, artist, corpulent Mynheer, all fly past, mixed up in the same flock. The lovely Liane, who was suddenly threatened with Rubensy flesh, has got rid of it by cycling on the Esplanade and sea bathing. The Queen and her daughters are not fond of Ostend. Her Majesty prefers horsy Spa.

Lodgings in hotels and private houses are fearfully dear at the Belgian Brighton. When I was there I found I could save money by lodging at Ghent or Bruges and passing my days and evenings at Ostend. The hotels in these old towns are really good; railway fares are cheaper than in any other State in Europe. Roads are good for cycling in fairly dry weather. One need not then go on the central cobblestone paving. But Belgium is badly off for temperance drinks, and cycling is such thirsty amusement! Nieuport—in train-communication with Ostend—is much cheaper. It is easy to get away from the latter place to England or Germany, but not to Paris. There are now some charming, and not dear, watering-places near Liége and Namur. An English family is not stared at in Belgium as it is in France. I remember the whole of a French burg turning out to see "un Révérend Anglais" with his wife and their numerous offspring. There were nine girls in all. If the Muses could be imagined as going about in home-made modern dress, with guide-books and Tauchnitz novels in their hands, these rectory girls might have been supposed to personate them. The eldest was long grown up; the youngest was not yet ten. This sight was not, however, so startlingly strange as another reverend and wife who, with their bakers' dozen of lasses of all ages and sizes, walked over the same town in search of an hotel that could take them in. The legend is that there were ten sons left behind in England. In Belgium such a host of children might be exceptional, but not phenomenal. In France it would be startlingly strange. The French have not yet got over the effect on their nerves of Bonaparte saying that boys were future chair à canon. The 6,000 soldiers who died of fever at Majunga have been an unpleasant reminder of the dictum.

Paris often seems to me a cemetery of the great whom I have known and seen. I have had to cultivate the risen. As pre-eminence comes late in life, they soon sank below the horizon, to rise no more. The recent death of the Duchesse de Sesto reminds me of a number of brilliantly lovely women who shone under the Empire. The fairest of these fair were three Italians—all in Society—a Russian, a Spaniard, three Americans, a West Indian creole, and a Saxon. The Empress was the Spaniard; the Duchesse de Morny, since Duchesse de Sesto, the Russian. I used to see the latter at the Palais Bourbon and at Lady Cowley's. I still have her before my eyes, as she first impressed me. Do you remember Kilmeny in the "Queen's Wake," as she seemed to her kindred? After her return from fairyland, Kilmeny "looked up with a lovely grace, but no smile was seen on her sinless face." The Duchesse de Morny did not smile, and yet did not look sad or serious. She had the clearest complexion I think I ever saw, the brown eyes of a fawn, and pale gold, flossy hair that no dye could imitate—hair that softly frizzed and curled, and formed a nimbus round the diaphanous face. There was no mind in the face, any more than in a fawn's; but neither was there vacuity. She looked a strange, eerie being. I did not then know what summer nights in Northern Russia were like. Had I known, she would have appeared to me the Spirit of the Arctic Midnight, clear, still, and of subtle, subjugating golden beauty. Somehow it is not a beauty that awakes enthusiasm. One feels what cold there is behind it. The Duchesse de Morny had a slender figure. She wore a dark green plaid dress of twilled silk, a neat turned-down linen collar embroidered daintily at the corners, a small gold brooch, a large bonnet of white chip, with a blue "curtain" (bavolet), and a large bunch of blue cornflowers at the left side. One of the hands was ungloved. It was also diaphanous and thin. She had "pagoda" sleeves and puffed muslin under-sleeves with linen cuffs to match the collar. There was no bracelet, and the bared fingers were not ringed. There was little to notice in the dress. But the wearer gave it an air of astonishing style and elegance. The corsage seemed rather large, but this added to the effect, by enabling the dress to lend itself to the graceful motions of the Duchess.

This beauty was fast fleeting. The Duchess was married at the age of sixteen, from school, to the most experienced Frenchman of his time in refined dissipation. I believe she did not care for him, but rather enjoyed the sphere into which he brought her and the wealth that he commanded. Two years later she had grown much taller. I saw her then, in a white piqué dress and large crinoline, leading a child—a naughty boy, also in white—down steps into a garden. The hair and complexion were unchanged; but the eyes had lost the startled-fawn expression, and the face had grown too long and thin. Just before De Morny's death she looked witchy, seated among her four children. There was a shrewdish expression in the face that did not embellish it. We did not then know the word inconscient. If we had, I should have said it fitted her, and I should have also said there was something in the bantlings which threatened inconscience. There was a fair child, a perfect little Undine, quite soulless, very animated, and scarcely human in expression. We have known of her since as the Comtesse de Belbœuf. Another of the pretty little girls married a Spanish grandee, and died suddenly as she was going to a ball. The eldest of the two boys was destined to appear as first chief mourner at the most sensational funeral the Boulevards ever witnessed—that of the suicide, Mlle. Feyghine, of the Français. His mourning "supporters" were M. Perrin, manager of the Français, and the Prince de Sagan. The Duchesse de Morny, on her first husband's death, cut off her lovely hair and retired from the world. But the hair soon grew again, and she married the Duc de Sesto, Marquis of Alcenices, grand-master of her Most Catholic Majesty's Palace, and of his Most Catholic Majesty's in the Alphonsist reigns. De Sesto was ardently admired by Queen Isabella and the Duchesse d'Alba. He as ardently admired the Countess of Teba, who preferred to him the Duke of Osuna. The latter only pretended to return her admiration to hide his passion for her sister, who had a jealous husband. The story of each duke's flirtations would make a Comedy of Errors. That of Osuna indirectly but mightily affected the French Empire.

The Duchesse de Morny was said to be of Russian Imperial blood, but did not resemble any member of the Imperial family. She rather prided herself on De Morny's maternal origin. After her second marriage she kept her house in Chaillot, but lived a good deal at Madrid. Her husband was there the companion of the late King in his evening outings. Alphonso in one respect was like the Merry Monarch. His great passion was for a famous contralto singer, now living in Paris with two sons, who are both the image of the late King, and who take the name of Borbon. Nevertheless, Queen Christina judged well to keep on good terms with the Duke of Sesto and his wife. The latter ceased to lead fashion, but retained the old stamp of elegance. She, however, reverted to the Russian ways of her youth and smoked endless cigarettes, was tender to children, took a philosophical view of life, and was happy when her son obtained the richly-dowered daughter of Guzman Blanco. She had not the talent of Russian Court ladies for political or diplomatic intrigue, and was said to be the only virtuous lady in the Empress Eugénie's circle. It is believed that she brought about the existing intimacy between the Grand Duke Vladimir's family and that of Queen Christina—an intimacy that was greatly encouraged by the late Czar.

LETTER FROM THE LINKMAN.

"MARRIAGES," dear Lady Betty, "are made in Heaven"—and Ambassadors are made in TRUTH.

Several weeks ago it was announced in these columns that Lord Salisbury had decided to appoint Sir Edmund Monson to succeed Lord Dufferin as British Ambassador in Paris, and it was suggested that Sir Horace Rumbold, our Minister at the Hague, should be promoted to replace Sir Edmund as British Ambassador at Vienna. The announcement has been proved to be correct, and the suggestion has been adopted.

Lord Salisbury has for several months been offering the appointment of British Ambassador in Paris to titled and territorial magnates who are supporters of the Conservative Party; and it is, therefore, a glorious triumph for the members of the Diplomatic Service that he has been compelled by circumstances to confer the post upon a diplomatist.

Sir Edmund Monson possesses considerable ability; he has had much experience; he has great charm of manner, and he is in every way eminently qualified to undertake the difficult task of acting as our representative in Paris. He is not a rich man—neither is Lord Dufferin; and he is not a peer; but this trifling defect can be easily rectified. It may, indeed, safely be predicted that before another twelve months have passed Sir Edmund will be elevated to the Peerage. Since the days of Sir Robert Stuart, every British Ambassador in Paris has been a Peer—to wit, Lord Normanby, Lord Cowley, Lord Lyons, Lord Lytton, and Lord Dufferin. Custom has now caused it to be considered correct that whoever holds this important office should possess a Peerage, and it is, therefore, probable that as soon as a suitable occasion presents itself the Queen will bestow a Barony upon Sir Edmund Monson, if for no better reason, as a compliment to the French nation.

Lord Salisbury has gained in reputation by promoting Sir Horace Rumbold to be British Ambassador at Vienna. The circumstances of this case have only to be stated to show how unworthily Sir Horace has hitherto been treated. It is admitted by his colleagues that he is one of the most capable men, if not the most capable man, in the Service. He is, moreover, a magnificent linguist. Sir Horace was appointed an Attaché in 1849. Sir Clare Ford, our Ambassador at Rome, joined the Service in '52; Sir Edward Malet, our late Ambassador at Berlin, in '54; Sir Edmund Monson in '56; Sir Frank Lascelles, our present Ambassador at Berlin, in '61; and Sir Nicholas O'Conor, who is our Ambassador at Petersburg, in '66. Therefore, though the great talent and experience which Sir Horace Rumbold possesses are admitted on every side, he has been passed over time after time by his juniors, and it is only now that the Foreign Office has done justice to a very efficient public servant. It is obvious that a malign influence has been exercised behind the scenes to the disadvantage of Sir Horace, and it is altogether to the credit of Lord Salisbury that, even though at the eleventh hour, he has refused to comply with the requirements of this nefarious opposition.

It only remains to be added that throughout the British Diplomatic Service the announcement of the appointments of Sir Edmund Monson and of Sir Horace Rumbold has occasioned much satisfaction; for, in the case of the former, there is the victory of a principle, and in that of the latter a prejudice has been vanquished.

It is probable that either Sir Charles Stewart Scott or Mr. Edmund Phipps will be appointed to replace Sir Horace Rumbold as British Minister at the Hague.—Believe me to be, very truly yours,

MARMADUKE.

SPORTING NOTES.

THERE has been practically no betting on the St. Leger during the last week, for the backers have not, so far, manifested any inclination to lay 5 to 2 on Persimmon. It is inconceivable that any one suffered to go at large would bet such odds two or three weeks before the race is run under any circumstances whatever. A few speculators laid long odds on St. Frusquin and Persimmon coupled early in the summer, and although the bookmakers now have the best of this business, yet the backers are likely to find themselves comfortable enough on the day of the race if the Prince of Wales's colt is then all right. When a man has betted extravagant odds on two, it is, of course, always unpleasant to find one of the pair removed from the scene, but as to this race things might be worse, as a man is said to have remarked who looked into Hades, and saw the Devil dragging off his brother. Persimmon has been going very well indeed in his gallops, particularly last Thursday, when he was sent a mile and three-quarters, finishing on the Cambridge Hill. He was led by Safety Pin and Eclipse, and they came along at a good speed. Many a horse that has won the Derby has failed to stay the Leger course; but, even supposing that Persimmon's stamina is not his strong point, I cannot find anything that is likely to start which would be able to make a cracking pace throughout. Thais is in good work at Newmarket, but she is not likely to start for the Leger if Persimmon is well; and she is more likely to be seen winning one of the autumn handicaps. Thais has no weight-for-age engagements after the Leger. Galeazzo will not run at Doncaster, and I hear that the Duke of Westminster has decided to start Labrador, while Helm will be reserved for the Park Hill Stakes. No sign has been made with either of the French horses, but both Arreau and Trébons are in good work, and they will be perfectly fit to run at Doncaster. It is a fact worthy to be noted that although Arreau won the Grand Prix yet he has been entered for the Cambridgeshire only, whereas his stable companion is engaged in the Cesarewitch. Trébons defeated Arreau in the race for the Prix du Jockey Club. If either animal should be backed it will at once become second favourite, for at present 100 to 8 is everywhere offered bar one, but nobody appears disposed to meddle with the race. A writer in one of the sporting papers asserts that Santa Maura is out of training, being indeed untrainable. It is a pity that such addleheads do not take the trouble to verify their statements on these subjects, instead of thus misleading their unlucky readers. As a matter of fact, Santa Maura has been in sharp work for nearly a month, and she looks and moves well, and will run at Doncaster, if she goes on all right, for either the Leger or the Park Hill Stakes.

Last season's high-priced yearlings have not so far distinguished themselves, and most of them appear to be turning out hopeless failures. St. Ilma, by St. Simon out of Sterling Love, was bought at one of the Doncaster sales by Mr. J. A. Miller for the preposterously extravagant price of 4,100 guineas. She was badly beaten last week in a trial with some moderate animals, and has been scratched for her remaining two-year-old engagements. St. Ilma, indeed, is not likely ever to be of any use for racing purposes, and she will probably be relegated to the stud next season, but she is a very small filly. I hear also that Mr. H. Bass's sister to Meddler, the filly by St. Gatien out of Busybody, who cost 930 guineas as a foal (in July, 1894), is not likely to distinguish herself much upon the turf. Writing about the Stockton meeting a fortnight ago I plumped for Drip for the Great Northern Leger, and I mentioned Cyrenian as being likely to win one of the two-year-old stakes. Drip won her race very easily, as well she might, considering that she was receiving a stone from Symington, and 11 lb. from Serfdom, and the bookmakers were remarkably generous in laying 7 to 4 against Lord Durham's filly. Cyrenian was very heavily backed for the Wynyard Plate, but he ran badly. Next day, however, to the amazement and discomfiture of the backers, he won the Hardwicke Stakes after a terrific finish with Chillingham, who was giving Lord Londonderry's colt 13 lb., so that the winner certainly is not so smart as he was thought to be when he left Newmarket. Helen Mary, whose merits were notified by me a fortnight ago, followed up her Redcar successes by winning the Lambton Stakes very easily indeed, and she is undoubtedly one of the smartest fillies of the season. Red Ray again disappointed Lord Zetland's stable in the Durham County Produce Plate, which race fell to Serfdom, and it was certainly her turn to win.

A somewhat acrimonious controversy has been going on about the recent sale of English mares at Deauville, and it might be as well if an authorised statement was published showing what animals really were sold, and the prices which they fetched. One or two of the sporting papers have indulged in florid eulogies of this sale, and describe it as having been decidedly a success. On the other hand, the Field plainly states that the Deauville sale was "a dire failure," for the excellent reason that "the mares sent over were either so bad that nobody would bid for them, or had reserves which made it useless to bid for them." Which account is correct?

I understand that Goletta will run next for the Rous Memorial Stakes at the First October Meeting, after which she is to start for the Clearwell Stakes at the Second October Meeting, and (missing her engagement in the Middle Park Plate) she will finish the season by running for the Dewhurst Plate, for which race Velasquez is not entered.

The French mare, Ghislaine, who now belongs to Lord William Beresford, is looking and moving remarkably well at Newmarket, and she is certain to win a good handicap before the season is over. It will be remembered that Ghislaine was highly tried before the Manchester Cup, and she will improve on the form which she displayed in that race.

Lord Ellesmere's mare Missive, of whom a very high opinion was at one time entertained, has gone entirely and hopelessly to the bad, and as she is evidently useless for racing purposes, she is to be turned out of training and sent to the stud.

Teufel has been a great public fancy for the Cambridgeshire, but I do not believe that he could stay the course. He was well backed for the Stewards' Cup but ran very badly, and he has since been beaten by moderate animals.

By far the most important and interesting item of news which has lately been published in the official "Calendar" is the entry for the National Breeders' Produce Stakes of £5,000, which race is to be run at Sandown Park in July, 1899. A very large entry has been obtained, the list filling three columns of the "Calendar," and the information given discloses how most of the crack mares have this year been mated. The Prince of Wales has Perdita II. (dam of Persimmon) who has been sent to St. Simon, in the hope of an own brother or sister to the Derby winner. The Prince also has Merrie Lassie (dam of Grig) served by St. Simon; and Fanchette served by Donovan. The Duke of Westminster has engaged seven of his best mares, including Shotover, served by St. Simon; and Ruth, St. Mary, Vampire, Grace Conroy, and Ornament, all of which have been sent to Orme, and if that horse fails at the stud it certainly will not be through the want of chances of success. Of Mr. J. B. Wood's lot of four, Abeyance has been sent to Isinglass and Palisade to Orme. Mr. D. Baird also has a lot of four grandly-bred mares, consisting of Fleur de Marie, Silene, Antibes, and Hamptonia, which have been sent respectively to St. Simon, Ayrshire, Sheen, and Galopin. Mr. L. Brassey has sent Pauline, by Vermont, to Isinglass, which is an excellent cross. Of Mr. D. Cooper's lot of eight, Melody has been sent to St. Simon, Armorel to Carbine, Glare to Isinglass, Footlight to Sheen, and Float to Orme. Lord Derby has a fine lot: Broad Corrie, sent to Sir Hugo, Bridget to Orme, and Travancore to Sheen. The Duke of Devonshire has nine mares, including Applause II. (dam of Marvel) served by Melanion, Poem by St. Serf, and Mon Droit (by Isonomy) by Orme. The Duke has sent Snood to Galopin, and, by the way, I hear that this mare's two-year-old filly by Ayrshire will win a good Nursery in the course of the autumn. Lord Dunraven has L'Abbesse de Jouarre served by Isinglass. Lord Durham has two, one of them being Lady Primrose, served by Crafton. The Chevalier Ginistrelli has the once famous Signorina served by Martagon. This mare has proved a direful failure at the stud up to the present time, and the fathead who asserted five years ago that she was worth £10,000 as a brood mare should eat dirt. Captain Greville has engaged fourteen of his mares at the Burghley Stud, including Ornis and Rosy Morn, both served by St. Angelo. Mr. J. S. Harrison is another public breeder who has been generous in his patronage, having entered twelve mares, including Leonie and Pamela, both served by St. Simon; Hampton Rose, Sea Air, and Boyne, all by Orme; Sweet Lavender, by Isinglass; Isabelle, by Kendal; and Sterling Love, by Common. Mr. J. S. Harrison evidently appreciates the certain fact that in these days the only way to make breeding pay is to send mares to the most fashionable sires, and Sir Tatton Sykes acts on the same sound principle at Sledmere. Mr. Houldsworth has Napoli (dam of Laveno and Orvieto) served by Bend Or. In my opinion he would have been well advised to try another sire for the mare, for it never answers to go puddling on year after year with the same cross. Mr. H. Ingledew has four mares, one of which is Ste. Agatha, covered by Carbine. Mr. A. James has a lot of nine, including Charm and The Smew, both served by Carbine, Lady Heron by Royal Hampton, and Polenta by Sheen. "Mr. Jersey" has sent Lady Rosebery to Ravensbury, which is an excellent cross. Mr. W. Johnstone has a lot of four, including Koorali, sent to Best Man; and Lady Primrose to Orme. Of Mr. J. W. Larnach's pair, one is Pilgrimage (dam of Canterbury Pilgrim) served by Childwick. M. Lebaudy has seven mares, four of which have been sent to Xaintrailles, one of them being Rêve d'Or. Sir J. B. Maple has an entry of twenty-four, including Jennie Winkle, Minting Queen, Simon's Bay, In Bounds, Busybody (dam of Meddler), and Seville, all served by Common; and Superba, Siffleuse, Corrie Roy, Priestess, Mazurka, and Dame President, all of which have been sent to Royal Hampton. Mr. J. H. Marker's lot of seven includes Philomel, served by Kendal. Mr. L. Pilkington has Fair Marion (dam of Glencally) served by Galopin; and Canoness (dam of Canonbury) by Royal Hampton. Mr. Platt has a splendid lot of twelve, including St. Marguerite (dam of Sea Breeze) sent to Isinglass, Lucy Ashton and Maid Marian to Kendal, and Lonely to St. Simon. The Duke of Portland has eleven, and he is evidently bent upon giving the Australian horse Carbine every chance, having sent to him four of his very best mares — Mowerina (dam of Donovan), Memoir, Mrs. Butterwick, and Semolina. Satchel has been mated with Isinglass, and Muirninn, La Rose, and Neenah with St. Simon. I hear, by the way, that last season the Duke could have filled St. Simon's list three times over, at the easy rate of 400 guineas per mare. Of Lord Rosebery's crack mares, Sea Breeze, Bonny Jean (winner of the Oaks), and Cipollina have been sent to Ladas, and Kermesse sent to St. Serf. Mr. Russel has Virginia Shore (dam of Whittier) served by St. Simon. Mr. Sneyd has eight mares, all served by Blue Green; and Mr. A. Stedall has engaged eleven, all of which were sent to Freemason. Of course, an entry of this kind does sometimes turn up trumps, owing to the allowances which fall to the stock of cheap and unfashionable sires. There is a good reason why public breeders should engage their mares for this stake, as there is a sum of £300 for the nominator of the winner, £200 for nominator of the second horse, and £100 for nominator of the third.

Next week there will be some excellent racing at Derby, the meeting extending over three days. There are 170 entries for the Champion Breeders' Biennial Foal Stakes of £1,000, and this will not be a costly event to the fund, as the owners' entrance fees amount to £850. The entry includes the Duke of Devonshire's filly by Ayrshire out of Snood, Sir R. W. Griffith's Merle and Princess Anne, Mr. Leigh's Flying Colours, Duke of Portland's Smean and Lady Frivoles, besides Chantilly (nominated by her breeder, Lady Stamford), Falkland, Galatia, Ste. Adresse (nominated by Sir Tatton Sykes, who bred her), and the Duke of Westminster's smart filly Blue Water. I shall predict the success of either Merle (who was well galloped at Newmarket last week) or Blue Water. The three-year-old heat of the Champion Breeders' Biennial Foal Stakes of £1,000 is run on Wednesday, and 141 three-year-olds are entered, including The Quack, Burgonet, Positano, Nicholas, Bonnie Briar (who was well beaten at Stockton last week), His Reverence, South Australian, La Toison d'Or, Aureus, Rampion, Conroy, and Red Ray. This race ought to be a good thing for Rampion, and if he is not sent to Derby then His Reverence should win on his Ascot running. There are twenty-two acceptances for the Peveril of the Peak Plate of £1,000 (one mile), and Hebron may win if he starts. The Harrington Stakes of £300 should be won by Brigg or Stewarton.

There will also be racing at Sandown Park on the last two days of the week, and there are such huge entries for the four weight-for-age stakes that the lists fill fifteen pages of the "Book" Calendar. A large number of three-year-olds are left in for the September Stakes of £500 (one mile), and this race will be won by either Canterbury Pilgrim or Regret. The Home Counties Plate of £500 may fall to Bay Ronald.

So far as the large yachts are concerned, their career has been prematurely cut short by the fact that they have been ordered by their owners to be laid up owing to the accident that resulted in the deplorable death of Baron von Zedtwitz, the owner of the Isolde. He was a pioneer of yachting in Germany, and he had made himself very popular in English circles. The coroner's inquest, so far as one can judge from the reports, appears to have been rather an unsatisfactory affair. The deputy-coroner, with delightfully cocksure manner, said that he had come to the conclusion in his own mind that the accident occurred owing to the Saint having turned the Isolde out of her course. All the evidence pointed to this conclusion. So he said, and yet Carter, the Captain of the Britannia, said, in answer to the coroner, that the accident occurred through the Meteor trying to pass to windward of the Britannia. It is absurd to try and put the blame on the Saint. There cannot be a Board of Trade inquiry, and the Y.R.A. ought to move in the matter. It is said they will not do so unless the Royal Albert Y.C. brings the matter before them. It is clearly the duty of that Club to do so.

A correspondent from St. Leonards is good enough to tell me that the final test cricket match is over. He considers that on a good wicket the Australians are equal to, if not better, than our players. He considers it degradingly unfair to compare the averages of English and Australian batsmen, and he wishes me to publish the averages of the English against the Australians and the Australians against the English. The latter he can see every week in the dailies and the former are published at the end of the tour in the sporting papers, to which excellent chronicles of sport I must refer him.

Owing to the absence of the sun the Australians did not get punished by the rain at the Oval in their return match with Surrey, who have discovered a most promising colt in Hayes. It was satisfactory to find Hayward in form again, and Abel all last week was playing excellently. This fact made the beating of Surrey by Lancashire all the more disappointing. Earlier in the week, after Lancashire had declared against Sussex when Paul and Ward had both played well, a superb innings by Ranjitsinhji had made the game a draw. However, at the Oval Mold found a wicket to his liking, and although Hayward bowled splendidly and took all the six wickets that fell when the Northerners went in again, they gained a fairly easy victory, thanks to MacLaren and Briggs. In fact, the Oval authorities seem too fond of changing the team about. If a new player does not always come off he is shunted at once, while too much consideration is shown to the old hands. Young Townsend bowled well for Gloucestershire against the Australians, and then Trumble and McKibbin did what they liked and got the county team out for seventeen, of which score the champion made just over half. It was a fine performance for Lord Harris to start first-class cricket again with a century against Somerset. Patterson made a bigger score, and it is a pity that Kent's finest bats are only available in the vacation. In the second innings of Somerset, Woods and Palairet saved the game, and both had bad luck in missing their centuries by one and two runs respectively. Following up his brilliant cricket against Lancashire, Ranjitsinhji gave an even finer display against Yorkshire, making a century in each innings, and he and Killick together saved a match in which Peel scored a century and achieved the feat of taking over a hundred wickets and making over a thousand runs in first-class cricket. Giffen has done the same, and the only other players who have done likewise are, I believe, Davidson, Studd, and Grace, who has done it eight times. Jackson has been batting superbly, and others who are finishing the season in fine style are Stoddart and J. Douglas. The latter has hardly ever failed to score since he did so well against the Australians at Bexhill.

At Wood Green there was some splendid cycling in a six hours' race. Ilsley and King had some fine dusts up and in the end the former won, easily beating the previous record for 150 miles by twenty-five minutes. This pace would no doubt shock that worthy magistrate, Admiral Field, M.P., who last week from the Bench denounced scorching and announced that he never rode more than six miles an hour. That is a very conservative pace. By the way, one day last week, a gentleman, whose right leg had been amputated above the knee, was seen riding a bicycle down the Strand shortly after midday. He managed the machine with ease although he carried his crutch in his right hand. The advantages of cycling to people so unfortunately circumstanced cannot be overestimated.

The different open lawn tennis tournaments do not indicate that the popularity of the game has in any material degree diminished. New names crop up and old ones still remain, and this is as satisfactory a state of affairs as one could wish. At Felixstowe the players were better than the courts, which will have to be amended if the meeting is to retain its popularity. In the singles Doherty and Allen had a hard tussle for the final, which the former won. But the play was spoiled by the ball not bounding truly. At Scarborough there was a heavy programme, and C. Wade retained the county championship, while his twin brother, the old First Trinity oar, also showed good form. He has not yet abandoned everything for golf. The brothers Riseley won the open doubles, and Nisbet the open singles. Altogether it was a very successful tournament.

Needless to say, everything was excellently managed at the Reading A.C. sports. Thomas, the sprinter, won the 200 yards scratch. Being a Welshman, he is going to Jesus, Oxford, but it may be doubted if he will set the running track on fire. At Manchester an invitation 100 yards was won by Morgan. It is races of this class that prove fatal to the reputation of so many amateur athletes. It would be as well if a limit were imposed on the value of the prize. At present the prize may practically be any amount. Then on the question of expenses, it should be the duty of the club secretary who is paying the expenses of the competitors to get an order from some official of the A.A.A. as to what the amount to be paid should be. In fact, a sort of taxing-master should be appointed for each district.

From MOSES MOSS to BENJAMIN BOSS.

Sunday.

MY DEAR BEN,—Although the markets generally are still affected by the holiday season, and the attendance in the "House" continues extremely limited, the revival in the Kaffir Circus has made further progress; and an advance has been established in a number of leading South African shares, which promises well for the future.

The Holiday Season, and After.

According to old-established usage, the holiday season in this country comes to a climax in August; but with the turn of that month a certain proportion of the holiday-makers return, and by the middle of September most Stock Exchange men are in their places ready again for work. Similarly, the public gradually return from their holiday haunts in September prepared for speculative flutters or for investment purchases, and they generally only require a lead from the professional element to resume business. It says a good deal for the position of the South African market that the present improvement should have developed in the very dullest part of the holiday season. Not only were most of the leading jobbers away, but almost all the leading South African financiers had gone either yachting or shooting, and although they probably held a protecting hand over their own stocks, they certainly did not initiate the upward movement which has now begun. That was undoubtedly due to the great improvement in the South African outlook, to the excellent July crushings, to more amicable relations with the Transvaal, and to the defeat of the Matabele. The supply of stock in the market proved extremely limited, and small purchases immediately took effect upon prices, notwithstanding the efforts made by the syndicate of liars to create the impression that renewed trouble would arise between England and the Transvaal. From all appearances we shall, within the next week or two, see the upward movement gather strength; and although it has become the fashion to talk about the improbability of a boom in South Africans, I am not at all sure but that some kind of boom will be upon us much sooner than had been expected. The West Australian market has temporarily receded to the background; but the reason for this pause in the movement of this section is chiefly the disinclination of the large financiers engaged in Westralians to give their shares a lift while so many are away on their holidays. In view of the excellent crushing returns, which are coming to hand daily, there is not the slightest doubt that within a few weeks' time we shall again have an active and rising market. Home Railway stocks have been stagnant in the absence of most of the professional operators engaged in this department; but traffics have remained excellent, and September will doubtless bring greater animation. Foreigners have displayed a firm front, and in view of the visits which the Tsar is about to pay to European potentates, Continental operators will probably look at affairs through rose-coloured glasses. With the Tsar paying complimentary visits, peace for the present at least is assured; and when he reaches Paris, the Bourse will no doubt engineer a special rise for his benefit. In the Industrial department, the announcement that the special settlement of the Dunlop Pneumatic Tyre Company will take place in the first week of September, has created great satisfaction. The only department which at present still looks doubtful, and in which, owing to the uncertainty of the coming Presidential election, a permanent recovery cannot yet be expected, is the Yankee market. Every now and then, when matters get to the worst, the New York bankers make an effort to save the situation, and thus a rally is produced, which in due time is again followed by a reaction.

Champagne.—Périnet & Fils' Cuvée Réservée. Vintages 1884, 1887, and 1889, are of unrivalled quality and highly recommended for present consumption. Of all Wine Merchants.

Home Rails.

While the absence of business has brought about a temporary sagging movement in the Home Railway market, the position remains very hopeful in view of the continued large traffics shown by the leading lines, inherent merits of the stocks thus being improved. So far, there is already an increase of half a million sterling in the receipts of the Companies since July 1, a large portion of which is in passenger traffic. When it is considered that high-class investment stocks are at an almost prohibitive level, it must appear more than probable that on the resumption of active business investors will again turn their attention to this department, in which returns of from 3¼ to 3¾ per cent. are still obtainable on investment with every prospect that with a further increase of profits the yield may improve. One of the most progressive stocks is undoubtedly Dover "A." Although on the results of the past twelve months this stock yields only about 3 per cent. per annum, there is every prospect of a substantial improvement in the dividend, owing both to larger traffics and a decreased ratio of expenses. At the present price of 103 they are therefore an exceptionally promising speculation. Brighton "A," at 184½, are similarly situated, and an advance in Chatham Ordinary is quite on the cards. Among the stocks of the Heavy division North-Western and Great-Western have shown dullness, chiefly owing to the disappointment of those who had bought these on the hope that a splitting movement would be carried out. A relapse in Midlands and North-Easterns was due to realisations. In fact, the moderate reaction generally was due to small sales effected to secure profits. Some rumours have been spread of renewed labour troubles, especially in the North; but so far there is nothing to support these apprehensions, especially in Scotland, where the last strike, which proved so disastrous to the labour party, has not yet been forgotten. All the same, the Scotch stocks have been put down, but, with large traffic returns topping the increases of 1895 over 1894, and in view of the coming satisfactory dividend announcements, I must consider both Caledonian Deferred (Coras) and North British Deferred as exceedingly promising.

Yankee Fears and Hopes.

The movements of Yankee Railroad stocks have been fitful, and the fluctuations wild. There is unfortunately but too much reason for anticipating that this will continue the normal state of this market until the Presidential election solves the burning question as to whether gold or silver will triumph. In the meantime quotations at one time dropped again almost to the bottom prices touched during the present year, as will be gathered from the following comparative table:—

* Cum Fourth Assessment. † Cum Third Assessment.

Even now, quotations are but slightly above the lowest, although the New York bankers have ordered gold from this side in order to strengthen the banks and to allay the nervous feeling as regards the dwindling away of the Treasury reserve, some 2½ millions of dollars in gold being now on the way to New York. It is evident that in the present state of distrust in the United States, this operation will have to be repeated, but ten or twenty millions of dollars in gold could easily be spared in London or Paris; and thus, beyond putting up the rates in the money market here to a slight extent, this movement is not likely to have any effect upon our markets. Far more serious is the future course of events as regards silver in the United States, as the triumph of the silverites would bring about a financial collapse in the United States, which would temporarily, at least, react upon all our markets. I cannot bring myself to believe that the victory will rest with the Democrats under the lead of Bryan; but it must not be forgotten that the silver men have much at stake, and that they are still very wealthy. This is shown by a statement published by the Republican Congressional Campaign Committee showing the part played by the owners of the silver mines of the country in shaping the course of the recent conventions which have declared for the free and unlimited coinage of silver at sixteen to one. The statement is introduced with a table giving the estimated wealth of twenty-two individuals and corporations engaged in silver mining and directly interested financially in the opening of the Mints to free coinage. The table is as follows:—

	Dols.
Hearst estate, California	75,000,000
Fair estate, California	50,000,000
John Mackay	40,000,000
J. B. Haggin	40,000,000
W. A. Clark	40,000,000
William Stewart, Nevada	40,000,000
Francis J. Newlands (Sharon estate)	35,000,000
David Moffat, Denver	30,000,000
Senator John P. Jones (Comstock lode)	25,000,000
Flood estate	25,000,000
Denver Silver Smelting Works	25,000,000
R. C. Chambers, Ontario silver mines	20,000,000
Charles E. Lane, California	20,000,000
L. E. Holden, Old Telegraph mine	15,000,000
Mark Daly, Anaconda, Montana...	15,000,000
Butte Silver Smelting Works	14,500,000
S. T. Hauser, Granite Mountain silver mines ...	10,000,000
French Syndicate, Old Telegraph mine, Utah ...	10,000,000
Leadville Silver Smelting Works	8,500,000
Broadwater estate, Helena, Montana	5,000,000
Senator Henry M. Teller, Colorado	2,000,000
Senator Lee Mantle, Montana	2,000,000
Total	547,000,000

After criticism of some of the wealthy men who are working for free coinage, the statement charges that William J. Bryan has for years been paid to deliver silver orations, and concludes:

> To the silver mine owners the election of Bryan and of a free silver democratic House means millions. Placing the product of their mines at 54,000,000 oz. a year, though it would soon be 100,000,000 oz., and the Government paying them at the rate 1.29 dol. an ounce, and granting, for the sake of argument, that it cost them 68 cents an ounce to mine it, the people of the United States would pay into the pockets of the silver miners 41,000,000 dols. per annum, and make gigantic monopolists of the very men who are crying out against monopolies in their platform. This is an unduly conservative estimate of the profits of the silver barons; the actual figures would more likely reach 75,000,000 dols. per annum. It will thus be seen at a glance what is involved in the election of Mr. Bryan, not counting the evils that would flow from the retirement of upward of 600,000,000 dols. of gold upon which the credit of the nation is founded.

On the other hand, there is no doubt that Mr. McKinley has the whole of the possessing classes in the States behind him, and that business men of all shades will do their utmost to oppose the silver craze. In fact, an American news agency learns "that practically every large railroad company in the central and western belts, with headquarters in New York, are sending out large quantities of sound-money literature to the people along their lines. In many instances, it is being done by the clerical forces of the roads by direct order of the boards. In other cases, the leading officials are doing it on their own responsibility at the suggestion of leading members of the board. In one case the treasurer of the Company states that he has just sent out 20,000 copies of a free-coinage catechism." In this market Louisville and Milwaukee have moved most freely, and they have also been used more especially in Wall-street, for influencing the market. The "Bears" have had a splendid innings, particularly as in view of the silver scare small sales affected the market disproportionately. I still am of opinion that this is not yet the time for making speculative purchases, and it appears even doubtful whether it is advisable to buy on sharp declines. If any one proposes to do so he should be quick to get out again on a rally, but bonâ-fide holders should certainly not throw away their stocks now. Messrs. Woerishoffer & Company make some very instructive remarks in a recent circular which it is worth while considering. They point out how "many of the great fortunes made in the boom that culminated in 1881 with the shooting of President Garfield were based on the purchases made in 1877 and 1878. The circumstances producing the depression succeeding the panic of 1873 were not much like the present, but prices of many stocks were very low, just as now; there were Companies then lately reorganised, as well as others, the stocks of which were selling below 16 dols. per share. There was no speculative disposition; everybody was as blue as indigo, money was high as compared with to-day, the outlook was much less favourable than the present, the situation of the country in 1878 was not to be compared with that of to-day in population, wealth, development, or prospect, and yet the men who quietly absorbed the low-priced securities, then without a market, made from 100 to 1,000 per cent. within five years. In August, 1873, the net deposits of the New York banks were 220,000,000 dols., while to-day they are 447,000,000 dols. Then Six per Cent. United States bonds sold at 107 to 108, now Four per Cents. sell at 112. Then there were 80,800 miles of railroad, to-day there are about 180,000; then the gross railroad traffic was 490,100,000; in 1894 the latest complete returns figured up to 1,080,000,000, with net earnings for 1873 187,575,000 dols., in 1894 322,529,000 dols." The circular concludes with the argument that the States are "a great and constantly growing country, with success finally resting with the 'Bulls' instead of the 'Bears,' and that it will not need even the fingers of both hands to count the fortunes of those who have prospered by attacking credit and betting against the country." I wonder what Addison Cammack, the great "Bear" leader, would say to this? Canadian Pacifics have improved on better traffic returns and on German purchases; but while the American market is in its present state of collapse it is not likely that either Canadian Pacifics or Grand Trunks will rise much above the present level.

Foreigners and South Americans.

There is every prospect that optimistic views will prevail in interbourse securities during the next month or two. The bugbear of the Bourses and of the Stock Exchange has always been the fear of aggression on the part of the Northern Colossus; and now that the Czar is making himself agreeable to the various leading Courts of Europe by paying friendly visits, the inference is obvious that peace will not be disturbed in the near future, and certainly not before next spring. As in Stock Exchange matters, six months is an eternity, the Bourses will be free to burst into activity when business recommences. The view is also taken that the difficulties in Crete will be settled shortly, now that the unanimous action on the part of the Great Powers is forcing Turkey to make the necessary concessions. Spain has once again been helped over the financial stile, and Italy has become very quiet in Africa, which is the best thing she can do. A considerable rally is marked in Turks; but any one who values his peace of mind will do well to leave them alone. Even when the Cretan question is settled, some other trouble is sure to arise in the tottering Ottoman Empire. Argentine Government stocks have suffered as much as any from the prevailing inactivity; yet the position is promising, and according to an utterance of Dr. Romero, the Argentine Finance Minister, gold must go much lower still. He also seems to think that the unification scheme will be readily accepted, at least by the National bondholders. He expresses the view that the nation was in a position to respond amply to the demands for the service of the debt, and asserts that the National Government will have to trouble the market very little, if at all, for gold, having its requirements already provided for. Considerable surprise has been caused, by the way, by the statement also made by the Minister that the Government last year remitted 40,000,000 dols. gold, as against 25,000,000 dols. set forth in the Presidential message. They seem still to manage Government financial affairs somewhat strangely in Argentina. The Review of the River Plate, in its current issue, is pleased to observe that at least one journal at home, viz., TRUTH, is taking up with some vigour the conduct of the Argentine Republic as regards foreign commerce. Unfortunately, there is so far no sign that the Argentine Government is disposed to admit any unfairness in its dealings with foreign shipping or foreign Companies. Only the other day it appears an instance arose in which the shipping dues on a Norwegian steamer were reduced to a nominal figure on appeal being made by the agents on the new treaty made with that nation; and the Review of the River Plate takes it for granted that if other nations were placed upon the same footing as the most-favoured nation clause entitles them, the revenue of the Argentine Republic would be most seriously affected. It seems to me the duty of the British Government to intervene in favour of British trade and shipping, so as to enforce the provisions of the treaty. Equally unjust is the special taxation imposed upon foreign Companies established in Argentina, which is clearly an infringement of treaties which were expressly intended to place the foreigner on a commercial footing in every respect equal to the native. If the Argentine Government wishes to thoroughly rehabilitate the credit of the country, it will have to fulfil such treaty obligations. Uruguay bonds have not altogether maintained the recent rise, the Old Loan standing at 49⅞, after touching 50⅛. The New Loan has, however, been well maintained at 70, at which it is an excellent investment, promising an early rise in capital value. Mexican Sixes have maintained a firm front, and Brazilians have improved, while Venezuelan bonds have risen to 40 x.d., as I anticipated. Costa Rica "A" and "B" bonds, on the other hand, are slightly easier; and it is much to be regretted that this defaulting Government should not yet have made any further proposal for a settlement of the debt. This Republic figures in the appendix just issued by the Council of Foreign Bondholders with a principal outstanding of two millions, and £200,000 arrears of interest. The principal of the Colombia Loan outstanding is, according to the same document, £1,913,500, and interest in arrears £1,522,428; while the wretched state of Honduras figures with as much as £5,398,570 capital outstanding, and £11,046,229 arrears of interest. The miserable price of 5¼ of Honduras bonds sufficiently indicates how hopeless the chance of that Republic returning to honest ways is considered to be.

A Preliminary Canter in Kaffirs.

There is every appearance of my anticipation, that the gradual hardening of prices in the Kaffir Circus in the present month will be followed by an important advance in September, being fulfilled. In fact, it is very probable that the rise will commence as soon as the settlement has been got over. The movement has been opposed in several quarters, and quite a recrudescence of the efforts of the syndicate of liars was noticeable at the commencement of the week. In the Transvaal rumours were spread of an intention of the British Government to take hostile steps against the Republic, while here the report was assiduously propagated that the Transvaal Government had made a secret treaty with a European Power, in contravention of Treaty obligations to England. In fact, it was put forward that the Transvaal was about to renounce the London Convention. Under these circumstances, the letter which appeared in the Times from Mr. J. B. Robinson was doubly welcome, especially as, on the preceding day, a letter had been published in that journal from its Johannesburg correspondent taking a very sombre view of the position. The opinions which he expressed were absolutely unjustified, and he had himself to withdraw them in a cablegram which appeared in the Times on Saturday morning. It boots not to discuss the statements made from so unreliable a source, but it is quite time that the public should ignore such malicious attempts to sow discord between Great Britain and the Transvaal. President Kruger himself has stated to Reuter's agent that the story in question was an absolute invention, and that Mr. J. B. Robinson's statements in his letter to the Times were the true facts of the position. In the light of this announcement special interest attaches to the views expressed by Mr. Robinson, who has all along been in the most cordial relations with the Transvaal Government, and who has done so much to counteract the baneful consequences of the Jameson raid, and to bring about a peaceful solution of the whole matter. Mr. Robinson states that the great desire of the Transvaal is to live on friendly terms with England, and that no act would be committed by the former in any way defiant or aggressive to this country. He absolutely contradicts the rumour of a secret treaty, or of any intention to abrogate the Convention. Mr. Robinson also points to the reforms which are now being passed by the Volksraad, and to the certainty that during the next session of that body further reforms will be granted. There can be no doubt that the Transvaal Government is doing all in its power to assist the mining industry, and thereby advance the general interest of the country. The Boers themselves, moreover, are equally anxious, now that their legitimate grievances have been recognised by the punishment of those responsible for the Jameson raid, to return to their peaceful occupations. It is obviously a hardship for them as an agricultural people to have to leave their ploughs and cattle to take arms, and they certainly would resort to warfare only under compulsion and in defence of their own country. The liquor law embodies one of the most important reforms bearing on the mining industry. The very fact that it was carried in opposition to the large canteen interest, which had put up a sum of a quarter of a million to oppose, either by bribery or otherwise, the passing of the prohibitive measure, is most promising, and shows that the Volksraad is not so corrupt as it has been represented by the enemies of the Transvaal. At the mines this reform will in itself cheapen labour. The native "boy," when drawing his wages on Saturday, used to spend them, more often than not, in drink, and only too frequently did not return till the Tuesday following, and then worked but indifferently. In this way his week's work was generally reduced to three or four days only, and yet he had to be fed in the compounds. Instead of spending his money by purchasing fire-water, he will in future be able to save some of it; and it will be all the easier to bring about that reduction of wages which is about to be enforced by the Chamber of Mines and the new Rand Mining Association. Through the scarcity of labour, wages had been unduly raised, and it is by no means an unjust measure to reduce these again to normal proportions. The consequences will, of course, be a reduction in expenditure and an increase in the profits of the Witwatersrand mines. Other reforms are promised, and it is evident that the mining industry in the Transvaal is entering upon a renewed period of prosperity. It is variously computed that from 500 to 1,000 more stamps will be at work on the Rand by the end of next year, and that we shall then see a monthly output of some 300,000 oz. of gold against the present figure of 200,000 oz. As regards the upheaval in Rhodesia, latest cablegrams encourage the view that the war is practically over, the chiefs in the Matoppos having agreed to surrender. It will doubtless take a long time before the various Rhodesian Companies recover from the blow dealt to them by the insurrection; at all events, this depressing influence will no longer affect the market for Transvaal stocks. For all that I feel pretty well convinced that the market position will be utilised for engineering a considerable rise in Chartered shares, as so many options are running which lend themselves to a stroke of this kind. Yet it would appear to me that there can be no permanent improvement before the Transvaal Government have formulated their demand for an indemnity. For the investor and the speculator, however, the properties outside the Chartered Company undoubtedly offer the best opportunity for profitable operations; and it is not surprising, therefore, to find that the sound Witwatersrand Mines have again generally improved. Advances of from $\frac{1}{4}$ to $\frac{3}{4}$ have again been established in Simmer and Jack, Geldenhuis Deep, City and Suburban, Henry Nourse, Jumpers, Kleinfontein, Meyer and Charlton, Wolhuter, &c.; while dozens of others have gained from $\frac{1}{8}$ to $\frac{1}{4}$. Randfonteins have advanced to $3\frac{3}{16}$, and it is to my knowledge that offers at this price have been made for large blocks, which have been refused. I am firmly convinced that these shares will experience a sharp advance in the near future, not only because they are now most influentially held, and the weak elements have been weeded out, but also because important developments are at hand which will demonstrate the great value of the Company's properties. While the troubles were going on in the Transvaal, the new batteries of the sub-Companies have been completed, and on September 1 the Porges Randfontein will commence crushing with new machinery, viz., 60 stamps. On October 1 the North Randfontein will fall into line with its battery, and soon afterwards the Robinson Randfontein will be crushing. I am also told that negotiations for floating a further block into a sub-Company are proceeding, and when it is considered that there is room on the Company's property for some fifteen or twenty more mines, it will be realised how great the possibilities of Randfontein are. Langlaagte Estate have again improved to $5\frac{1}{2}$, Block B have risen to $1\frac{3}{4}$, Langlaagte Star to $1\frac{5}{8}$, and in these and the other sub-Companies of the Robinson group I look for a distinct revival. On Monday a sale of 2,500 town-stands of the Langlaagte Estate and Building Company will be held in Johannesburg, and is expected to yield excellent results, as these comprise the only direction in which the City of Johannesburg can extend. I have at various times said a good word for Knights, and these shares have done justice to my recommendation by a further rise to $7\frac{7}{8}$. In my opinion this is only the commencement of an advance, which should extend to several pounds. A strong feature has also been Modderfontein, which have improved to $8\frac{1}{16}$ on the important discoveries on this property. This new development is also of the greatest importance to the Modderfontein Extension property, and it is not surprising, therefore, that these shares should have risen to $2\frac{1}{4}$; but this is still a long way off of the price of $3\frac{3}{4}$, which they touched last year, and which they will probably touch again. In the Barnato group some disappointment has been expressed at the absence of any further statement by Mr. B. I. Barnato on his return from the Cape. I hear, however, that the notification of meetings of the Johannesburg Consolidated Investment Company, and of the Companies to be amalgamated with it, is to be issued for the middle of September. Johnnies in the meantime are quoted $3\frac{7}{8}$, Barnato Banks $2\frac{5}{16}$, Barnato Consols 3. While very little improvement has thus occurred in the stocks of the Finance Companies with which Mr. Barnato is connected, owing to the absence of any adequate information, some of the mining shares of the group have advanced considerably, and it needs hardly be pointed out that this very advance in quotations will benefit the Finance Companies, which have a very large holding in the Mining Companies. Of the latter, New Primrose have risen to 6, Glencairn to $3\frac{5}{8}$, New Rietfontein to $3\frac{3}{4}$, Buffelsdoorn to 3, Langlaagte Royal to $2\frac{1}{16}$, New Crœsus to $1\frac{11}{16}$. The amalgamation of the Glenluce with the Glencairn, to which I directed attention some time ago, has now been confirmed by the issue of a circular according to which the capital of the Glencairn is to be increased to £500,000, giving the shareholders of both the Glencairn and Glenluce Companies 225,000 shares each, or share for share of their present holdings. It is further proposed to obtain £150,000 of additional working capital by issuing 50,000 shares at £3 each, leaving 50,000 shares for future issue if required. The working capital of £150,000 is guaranteed at £3 per share, but shareholders in both Companies have the option of applying for the issue at the same price in the proportion of one new share for every nine shares standing in their names on September 21 next. The Glencairn has, as I may remind my readers, 100 head of stamps at work and a cyanide plant; while the Glenluce has a 60-stamp battery almost ready to commence milling, and it is intended shortly to increase this battery to 100 stamps, giving the mines a joint capacity of 200 stamps. The amalgamation is in the interest of both Companies, and although the Glenluce is not yet producing, the fact that its claims are intact, may be set against the drawback of the Glencairn that its life would not exceed twelve or fifteen years without the amalgamation. The official cablegram from the New Rand Gold Mines confirms the news of the strike to which I have already referred. It is to the effect that "at a depth of 2,035 ft. one of the Main Reef series of reefs has been struck, 7 ft. thick, with 3 ft. 6 in. banket, not yet assayed." As the South reef has never been found wider than 18 in., it is probable that this is the Main Reef, which would be most important. Amongst other shares which are likely to come into prominence in the near future I may mention Woodstock (Transvaal), Transvaal Exploring and Waterfall Estates. With reference to the Woodstock I learn that the 20-stamp battery will by now have arrived on the property, and that every effort will be made to erect it promptly. I have it on the authority of competent experts that this property is likely to rival the Sheba in richness; and at $1\frac{1}{2}$ the shares are an excellent purchase. Waterfall Estates are quoted $\frac{5}{8}$ to $\frac{3}{4}$, and any demand coming on the market, which is bare of stock, would cause a sharp advance. I have already explained the promising position of the Transvaal Exploring Company, which has benefited greatly by the flotation of the Cataract Barberton Company. Transvaal Exploring shares have improved to 1, and are likely to go much higher. Amongst South African Land Companies, Mozambique have advanced to $1\frac{3}{4}$. Lydenburg Estates have risen to $1\frac{7}{8}$, and Henderson's are firmer at $2\frac{5}{8}$. Oceana shares have hardened to $1\frac{3}{4}$, and I anticipate that as a result of the combination which is now fully authorised and in progress, a much more important advance will take place. Some interest attaches to the proposed amalgamation of the United Langlaagte with the Block "B," Deep, and other adjoining claims. M. Jacques Lebaudy, however, who has bought a number of United Langlaagte shares, will have to be reckoned with; and that gentleman seems to carry matters with a high hand. The Rand Central Ore Reduction Company, which has been made so much of by various puffs, pays only 10 per cent., amounting to £12,000; while for the previous year £36,000 was divided amongst the Ordinary shareholders and the Founders'. There has been a revival in the demand for Klerksdorp Exploration shares at 14s. 6d., while Lisbon-Berlyn have improved to 7s. 6d. Neither of these properties are, however, promising, and those who have kept aloof from them in the past on my advice have reason to be grateful to me. Improvements have also taken place in Consolidated Goldfields, Rand Mines, Limited, and East Rands; but these are highly speculative shares which are somewhat dangerous to touch, as many investors have found out by experience. The dividend of 5 per cent. which has been announced by the Stanhope Company is exceedingly disappointing, and it is not surprising that the shares have dropped. This distribution justifies the adverse opinion which I have expressed as regards this Company. Amongst the low-priced shares, Rand Reefs have been in demand at from 9s. 6d. to 10s. According to latest advices, work is proceeding actively on the property, and now that the weak elements have been shaken out, it is expected that a considerable improvement will take place during the present revival, speculative investors having taken rather a fancy to these shares. Diamond shares have also shared in the general upward movement, De Beers having risen to 30⅛, New Jagersfontein to 10⅝. In New Bultfontein, business has been transacted at 1¾, and Consolidated Leicester Diamond shares are firm at 40s. The latest mail report from the Managing Director, dated July 27, is to the effect that Mr. Fyfe, the manager, on lowering the poles washed lumps from the grating, which ran 5 carats per hundred loads, and included a very fine pure stone of about 8½ carats of the value of about £7 per carat. Great things are, therefore, expected from the new gear. Kamfersdam Diamond shares have been in some demand up to ⅛ premium. A special settlement of this Company will take place on Thursday next, and it appears that the shares are oversold, in which case a sharp advance is probable. At the recent meeting of this Company, held on the 13th inst., it was stated that the main tunnel had been extended to 317 ft., and that the new machinery was in an advanced stage of erection, everything possible being done to expedite its early completion.

Golden West Australia.

Why the West Australian market should have eased off just now after having kept up a remarkably firm appearance throughout the holiday season is not quite clear, but I incline to the view that a few realisations in anticipation of the settlement came on the market at the precise moment when nearly all the leading Westralian financiers were on their holidays. That several amongst them propose to take a strong hand in their specialities in September I am assured, and in the meantime they allowed matters to drift on the view that they could easily pull up prices on their return when investors generally were again in the market. What is of greater importance is the continuance of satisfactory crushings and excellent general news from the goldfields. From the Great Boulder Main Reef a crushing of 124 tons for 269 oz. is reported, the tailings averaging 1 oz. 16 dwt. per ton. Then, again, the Desirable Mine (of which nothing is known here) is stated to have yielded 305 oz. of gold from 217 tons. Concerning the Mainland Consols, a cablegram has been received from Mr. Kaufman, the consulting engineer, to the effect that "the mill is running splendidly, and the mine looking better than ever." This statement disposes of all the recent "Bear" rumours, and it is probable that the next crushing will give the shares, which have now receded to 3$\frac{3}{16}$ a fresh impulse. I have reason to think that some of the jobbers who were holders were responsible for the attack. They sold not only their holdings, but put out some "Bears"—a somewhat risky proceeding in view of the excellent returns from the mine. Lake View Consols, also of the Whitaker Wright group, have been firm at 8⅝, and I have reason for anticipating a sharp advance in these early in September. The news from this highly-auriferous mine in the meantime remains very satisfactory. With reference to the Hannan's Golden Treasure, I hear that this is likely to turn out a second Lake View. West Australian Joint Stock Trust shares have been steady at 3½-⅝ premium, the Founders' shares at 60, and it is announced that the Northern Territories Goldfields of Australia has gone to allotment, but that the shares will not yet be dealt with. West Australian Goldfields are easier at 9 and the whole of the Stoneham group is suffering somewhat from the protracted absence of Mr. Allen P. Stoneham, who is recruiting in the North after his recent illness, but proposes to return to London early next week. In the meantime, Hampton Plains have recovered to 4⅜, and as the position of the Company is very satisfactory, as will be shown in the Directors' report, a further important improvement may be looked for eventually. From the Burbank's Birthday Gift mine a cablegram has been received announcing the discovery of gold in the vein formation in the water shaft. Professor Nicholas writes with reference to the Burbank's North that on inspecting the adjoining Bullara mine he recently found what appeared to be two parallel reefs, which contained a fair amount of gold, so that the Burbank North has mines in the north and south working on gold-bearing reefs that pass through it. Hannan's Brownhill have eased off to 6⅛, but Hannan's King are firm at 1½, and Hannan's Oroya have improved to 1$\frac{13}{16}$ on a favourable cablegram. The Hit or Miss is to commence crushing on August 24, and the shares have braced up to 2$\frac{5}{16}$, but Ivanhoe have dropped sharply to 9⅛. A smart decline in Golden Arrow to 16s. has been followed by a recovery to 18s., but this is a much manipulated share, and somewhat dangerous to touch by any but insiders. Great Boulder Proprietary are lower at 7¼, but there has been some demand for Central Boulder and West Boulder at about ¾, both these being very cheap shares. The various Menzies Gold Mining shares are all lower, apparently on inside liquidation. Amongst the new flotations, the Golden Ridge (West Australia) Proprietary Company, Limited, promises to give a good account of itself. It acquires an important property nine miles east of the well-known Great Boulder and Lake View Mines in the East Coolgardie goldfield, comprising an area of 132 acres. These five leases have been well developed, five shafts have been sunk to depths of from 45 to 62 ft., revealing several reefs and lodes varying in width from 6 to 17 ft., and proved to contain gold at the rate of from 1 to 4 ozs. to the ton. The capital is £150,000 in £1 shares, and £25,000 will be available for working capital in addition to 15,000 shares reserved for future issue. The Consolidated Gold Trust of London, Paris, and Brussels is another promoting concern which is formed at the eleventh hour. It appears to have no special advantages to show, although the prospectus states that the Directors have already the offer of several properties which they believe to be of a valuable character, and the Directors do not comprise any well-known men connected with the mining industry. Latest advices from the King of the West state that they have struck water at a depth of 100 ft., and that there is already ample stone on surface, or in sight, for a long time for any kind of treatment. From the Miner's Dream reports are to hand that development is proceeding satisfactorily, and that the machinery is being rapidly erected. The Manager of the Consuello Mine reports that the average flow of water is equal to 4,000 gallons per day. He states that No. 1 shaft is down 93 ft., No. 2 shaft is down 66 ft., and No. 3 shaft is down 52 ft., and that developments generally continue very satisfactory. A considerable demand has arisen for Anglo-Continental shares at 2⅜, and higher prices are now asked. There has also been a good inquiry for the shares of the United Australian Exploration, Limited, the £1 shares 5s. paid being dealt in at from $\frac{3}{16}$ to $\frac{5}{16}$ premium. It will be remembered that this Company was started with a subscribed capital of £250,000 in March last, for the purpose of acquiring mining properties in Western Australia, New South Wales, and other Australian Colonies, several of the Directors being very influential and connected with some of the leading South African Companies. The Board secured the exclusive services of one of the leading South African mining engineers, Mr. Arthur S. Boucher, A.M.I.C.E., formerly Superintending Engineer to the Consolidated Goldfields of South Africa, Limited, besides other able experts; and I understand that Mr. Boucher has now arrived from Sydney in Kalgoorlie, where he has established an organisation for the Company. The Directors have lost no time, and since the formation of the Company have acquired a group of mines in the Murchison district, one of which has already been successfully floated into a Company, while another Company is to be offered for subscription to the shareholders. There is plenty of room in Western Australia for energetically and ably conducted Companies such as the United Australian Exploration, and I should not be surprised to see these shares rise to a higher level. Apparently there is some reason why the representatives of a number of journals were refused admittance to the meeting of the Gold Reefs of Western Australia, Limited, as some very dirty linen was washed in public. The chairman, Captain Dawson, explained that "the Company was promoted by Mr. Douglas Durnford, trading under the aliases of several Companies, including the Great Bonanza Company, Limited, the Great Bonanza Syndicate, Unlimited, and the Co-operative Investment Trust, all of 34, Queen-street, E.C." The chairman also stated that "unfortunately, the Board had not been unanimous, owing to the presence on it of four of the promoters' nominees, Mr. Chatfield, Sir F. J. Milman, General Woolf, and Sir John Campbell." The upshot of it all was that the Directors quarrelled with the promoters, who, according to them, had not completed their contract, and they retransferred the 20,000 Deferred shares (which had been issued to Mr. Durnford and his Companies) again to the Gold Reefs of Western Australia, Limited. Mr. Durnford has since stated in my daily financial contemporaries that he was not trading under certain aliases, and that the meeting was illegally held; but I am glad to see that the meeting unanimously passed a voluntary winding-up resolution, and thus it will be possible to thoroughly sift this matter, which does not by any means wear a pleasant appearance.

Indian, New Zealand, and Other Mines.

Some irregularity is shown by Indian Gold Mines. The rise in Coromandel which I anticipated has come off, while Mysore are easier at 8, and Mysore Reefs, as well as Mysore West, have declined. Nundydroog are firmer at $3\frac{7}{8}$, Champion Reefs at $7\frac{3}{4}$ x.d., and Goldfields of Mysore at 25s. look like going better. In Australians, other than West Australian, Aladdin's Lamp have maintained their firm tone, advancing to $2\frac{3}{4}$. It should be noted that the returns of the Aladdin's Lamp for the last four weeks again show a net profit for that period of about 5 per cent. on the whole capital, the figures being 1,539 oz., valued at £5,625. This was achieved without the additional machinery (which, it is expected, will be in full work in six weeks' time), and irrespective of the recent rich discoveries. A further advance in the shares is therefore probable. Wentworth Proprietary, on the other hand, are neglected at $\frac{7}{8}$-1, and Crown Point, British Broken Hill, and Broken Hill Proprietary have eased off. In Charters Towers mines, Day Dawn Block and New Queen are lower. Croydon Consols have been a feature of strength at 5s. 9d. to 6s. x.d. Mount Morgan are firmer, and Mount Lyall are up at $8\frac{3}{8}$, while an easier tendency has prevailed for Mount Lyall South at $1\frac{1}{2}$. Great efforts are being made to make a market for the latter new concern, but so far with little success. In New Zealand mines there have not been many alterations. Taitapu and Waihi are firmer, but Hauraki and Waihi Silverton are dull. Advices are favourable from the Irene, Preece's Point, Komata Qeeen, and Maoriland mines, and in any revival in the New Zealand section these shares will no doubt be found well to the front. In the general foreign market De Lamar, Frontino and Bolivia and St. John del Rey are all lower. Some demand has arisen for the Grand Central Mining Company's shares at $1\frac{5}{8}$. This Company, which has a capital of £250,000 in £1 shares, owns a very rich gold mine near the towns of Minas Prietas and La Colorada, in the Humosillo mining district, State of Sonora, Mexico. The Company has been brought out under the auspices of the Exploration Company. The reports of the experts, Messrs Janning and J. B. Farish, are very satisfactory. The mine is 238 acres in extent and the depth of the shaft 500 ft. The shaft in the neighbouring property, which has the main reef, is down 450 ft. lower, and is in stone, assaying about 35 dols. to the ton, and the reef at that depth is nearly vertical. A large ore body is in sight about 25 to 30 ft. wide, and recent developments at the Grand Central have been most extraordinary. While the production for June was 103,000 dols., plus 8,000 dols. concentrates and, for July 97,000 dols. plus 14,000 dols. concentrates (including stoppage of mill for ten days owing to the bursting of a boiler), the production for August up to the 14th was at the rate of 8,400 dols. a day, and accounts by cable received since are still more startling. The Company is in full work with thirty stamps, and if the output keeps up at the present rate, the shares should rise to a high premium. Since writing the shares have already advanced to $1\frac{7}{8}$-2 By the way, I hear that the attempt is about to be made to float some worthless Canadian mica properties in this market. Before making any purchases, it will be prudent for those who have been approached in the matter to obtain independent reports, as some of these mines are worked out, and could not be sold in Canada for 500 dols. The warning comes to me from Ottawa.

Abercorn Reefs, Limited, and Umtoli Gold Reefs Company, Limited.

Since I wrote last week in reply to a number of communications from shareholders in the Abercorn Reefs, Limited, and in the Umtoli Gold Reefs Company, Limited, who wish to join a combination for resisting the last call and obtaining an investigation of the affairs of these Companies, circulars have reached me, which have been sent out by the Directors of both Companies, in the following identical terms:—

London, August 19, 1896.

Sir or Madam,—I am instructed by the Board of Directors of the above-named Company to give you notice that, pursuant to a resolution passed this day, under Clause 36 of the Articles of Association of the Company, the shares standing in your name in the Company have been forfeited, in consequence of default in payment by you of the call of 1s. per share due thereon, and payable August 18, 1896. My notice requiring payment was sent to you and dated July 28, 1896.—I am, yours, &c., C. G. Bradnam, Secretary (pro tem.).

This high-handed proceeding on the part of the Directors makes it all the more necessary that shareholders should at once unite so as to safeguard their interests. The Directors, Messrs. J. Dennis, J. W. Blackstone, J. Coward, and A. L. Fyfe, are indeed taking a great responsibility on themselves in thus arbitrarily declaring these shares forfeited, and it is time that the shareholders took a leaf out of the book of the shareholders in the parent Company (the African Gold Concessions and Development Company, Limited), by turning out the Board neck-and-crop, and instituting a thorough investigation. The Directors have not supplied any adequate information, and no one knows what this final call is intended for. In fact several shareholders write that they do not see why they should pay a call on a share which is practically valueless. The shareholders must, however, help themselves, and although I have letters from a large number, so far none of the leading holders have declared their readiness to head the movement. I now call upon two or three of the shareholders (preferably those residing in London), to furnish me with their names and addresses so that I can place all the others in communication with them, for the purposes of forming a committee, of resisting the outrageous behaviour of the Board, and of saving what is possible out of the wreck.

New Enterprises and Issues.

The prospectuses of the following new Companies have been placed before the public during the past week:—

The "Old Bushmills" Distillery Company, Limited.—With a share Capital of £110,000 in Preference and Ordinary shares of £1 each, this Company has been formed to acquire the old-established Distillery business known as the "Old Bushmills" Distillery Company, Limited, situate at Bushmills, near the Giant's Causeway, in the County of Antrim, Ireland. The present issue is of £70,000 Five per Cent. Preference shares of £1 each, £40,000 Ordinary shares of £1 each. and £70,000 Four and One Quarter per Cent. First Mortgage Debentures of £100 each.

The Consolidated Gold Trust of London, Paris, and Brussels, Limited.—This Company has been formed as a Finance, Exploring, and Mining Company, and to do finance business generally. The capital is fixed at £500,000 in shares of £1 each. There are so many Companies already established to do precisely what this one proposes to do, that I fail to see where the "strong position" comes in which the prospectus mentions. It is certain that existing Companies will have a far better chance than a new one. The Directors, moreover, do not appear to be specially posted in mining matters.

The Golden Ridge (West Australia) Proprietary Company, Limited.—The prospectus of this Company is about to be issued.

The capital consists of £150,000 in £1 shares, out of which £40,000 is set aside for working capital.

This is a promising West Australian Company, which acquires a well-developed property, which, according to the experts' reports, is rich in gold. Some further particulars will be found in my remarks under "Golden West Australia."

My Letter Box.

The following are replies to inquiries from various correspondents:—

Government, &c., Bonds.

S. V.—1. You are quite right. The Government of Costa Rica will have to make an arrangement with the bondholders; but every possible pressure has so far been brought to bear upon them. It would be useless to rush matters, but you may be sure that they are carefully watched. 2. The exploration shares in question are fair value, but the Company is not so successful as some of the others.

Banks, Trusts, and Financial.

Pembury.—I should advise you to deal only through members of the Stock Exchange. J. W. W.—The address of the other victim of F. Hemming Custance has been forwarded to you in your envelope, as requested. It is a great pity that you did not either read your Truth carefully or take my advice. Another Victim.—I am exceedingly sorry that you should also have been a victim of F. Hemming Custance to the extent of £15; but you admit that you are, unfortunately, not a regular reader of Truth, otherwise you would not be a loser. So far, I have been unable to ascertain anything of this man's whereabouts. Australia.—The West Australian goldfields cannot in any way influence the reconstructed banks; but matters in Australia generally are improving, and there is no option but to wait. Syntax.—You were evidently too late with the withdrawal of your application, as the letters of allotment had already been sent out. Dabbler.—No; the delivery of shares could not be delayed with impunity, but your broker could have bought in without waiting. It is different with the certificates, which are sometimes late, although the transfer should have been made to you. Pater.—1. Have nothing to do with these outside dealers. 2 and 3. Keep your money in your pocket. If you are a regular reader of Truth, I cannot understand why you still have such confidence in such outside men. You should deal only through members of the Stock Exchange. Ashford.—What you wish to know is precisely what I cannot tell you; there are no gilt-edged investments which can be got cheap. H. Thompson.—I do not think that you can do anything better than deposit these securities with the bank. Amongst the safe-deposit companies, I personally prefer the City Safe Deposit Company, 13, Throgmorton-avenue, E.C., which is under the most able management, and some of the leading City men are on the Board. I cannot reply by letter. A Stupid Old Maid, Chelsea.—I do not like any of the Insurance offices in question; you should apply to the Scottish Widows' Fund.

Home Rails.

F. J. B.—I do not see any reason for exchanging out of Midlands into anything else. H. W. B.—No reason to sell. Roach.—No reason for selling Nos. 1 and 2, which are likely to further improve. Grand Trunk Four per Cent. Permanent Debentures are a good investment. Tunbridge Wells.—Yes, I think South Eastern Deferred (Dover "A") are an excellent speculative investment, and preferable to the other stock.

American and Foreign Rails.

University.—Hold Nos. 1 and 2. After having held No. 3 so long, it would not be advisable to sell now. Grand Trunk Four per Cent. Debenture stock (4) is a good investment. With regard to No. 5, you should await further developments. W. A. M.—Hold for the present; they are likely to recover again. E. Y. L.—I think it is a very good thing that a Committee of Bondholders should have been formed to look after the Leopoldina, Macahé and Campos, and Rio de Janeiro and Northern Railway Loans; and you will do well to join the movement. Owers.—Yes, hold for the present; they are gold bonds. Santa Fé.—No further distribution has so far been made yet; but prospects are satisfactory. Border Boy.—Hold; but do not average yet. I have no doubt that you converted your Atchison "A" bonds and paid the assessments, so that the notice would not affect you any more. Greedy Sam.—1. No reason to sell. Nos. 2 and 3 should certainly be held. Assessment.—Five dols. has been paid, leaving another five dols. to be paid. The present price is 3¾, including the five dols. assessment.

Mining Shares.

Scotch.—I should advise you strongly to hold your West Australian shares Nos. 1 to 4 for an improvement, which is pretty certain to come about shortly in the West Australians. F. A.—1. No reason to sell now. 2. I do not like Kangarilla. 3. No, you can do better in the shares mentioned in my letter under "Golden West Australia." Corbys.—There seems to be a prospect of a further rise in Associated Gold Mines. 2. Apparently not. 3. They might be worth holding. 4. Yes, Adler's Consols are likely to improve; they are doing a good business. 5. This is quite correct. 6. I cannot give information of this kind. Independent.—Certainly hold Langlaagte Star, and buy more to average. Guinness seem to be quite high enough, considering the yield. J. C., Colchester.—Great Boulder Junction Reefs is a promising mine, and will doubtless rise to a premium; but you must not expect to make your profits too quickly. H. B. P.—Amongst the shares mentioned I should consider New Explorers' Syndicate (a), Hannan's King (c), W.A. Joint Stock Trust (d), Princess Royal (h), and Lydenburg Estates (m), the most promising for a speculation. Rustic.—This is a speculative mining share, about which it is difficult to prophesy. Personally I should prefer a South African or West Australian mine. Amongst the shares mentioned by you, I should prefer Croydon Consols, Maoriland, Sheba Hill, Irene, and Balkis Land; but you might make up a better list from the shares mentioned in my letter. R. G. B.—The S.A. shares Nos. 1, 2, 5, 6, and 7 are fair mining risks, and likely to improve. No. 8 (New Primrose) is already advancing, and it would also be advisable to hold the others for an improvement. Bob.—1 and 2. No; you can do better in the shares mentioned in my letter under "Golden West Australia." Alice W.—The Golden Crown is a promising Company, and the shares should be held. Lake View Consols are likely to go much higher. Kamloops.—The office of Clark's Consolidated, Limited, is at 10, St. Helen's-place, London, E.C. M. W. R., Cork,—1. Yes, a fair purchase. 2. I prefer Randfontein, however. 3. Amongst the cheaper shares, Transvaal Exploring and Waterfall Estates might be suitable. 4. Yes. 5. No catch. 6. These shares have advanced since, but are still a good purchase. 7. No. E. W., South Kensington.—You should hold all your W.A. and S.A. mining shares for a rise. The New Zealand concern is a fair mining risk. Saxon, Cornwall.—1. London-Paris shares are so stagnant that I do not recommend their purchase. 2. Not now; you can do much better in the shares mentioned in my letter. As regards the other shares which you hold, you should keep them for an improvement. Waterford Man.—There is absolutely no reason for the reaction in Mainland Consols, and these should be held for an important advance. I have referred to the matter in this issue. M. C.—Take a fair profit in Lisbon-Berlyn and Graskop; but you ought to have sold them on my advice when they were much higher. Bloater.—1. In the present South African revival there may be a chance of an improvement. 2. These should certainly be held. D. A. B., Mansfield.—1. Hold for an improvement. 2. They are likely to improve. Whittle Pike.—1. The New Zealand mines mentioned by you are no particular catch, and Komata Queens are the best of these; but by holding you will very likely get a better price. Amongst the other shares mentioned by you I prefer Gladiators, Oceana, Burbank's North, Croydon Consols, Woodstock (Transvaal), Explorers' Finance Founders' shares, and Hannan's Golden Group and Golden Treasure. Corrigenda. Amongst the shares, Nos. 1 to 13, mentioned by you, I prefer African Estates (4), Langlaagte Estate (8), Nickerk (9), Henderson's Estate (11), and King of the West (12). Frieze.—You should hold all your shares, Nos. 1 to 21, for an improvement, which is close at hand. W. S. S.—The Glencairn is doing exceedingly well, and the amalgamation is promising. City and Suburban prospects are also satisfactory. No news yet with regard to the Copper Company. Uneasy.—I cannot account for the reaction in Hampton Plains; except on the supposition that some of the holders were disappointed at the delay in the issue of the report. I hear, however, that the latter is very satisfactory, and that a good dividend will be paid. You should certainly hold. Puzzled.—I should certainly advise you to hold Langlaagte Star, as the yield is expected to improve. Protoplasm.—1. The New Zealand concern is a fair undertaking, but no catch. G. C.—Prospects of the Buffelsdoorn Estate are improving, as is also shown by the rise in the shares; hold. Replacement.—You had better address your complaint to the secretary of the W.A. Joint Stock Trust. Dubio.—A block of shares appears to have been thrown on the market; but I cannot understand the low price. Wat.—Amongst the shares mentioned by you I should only buy Mainland Consols (d). The others are quite high enough; and it would be advisable to rather make your selection from the shares mentioned in my letter. The Buffelsdoorn Estate and Gold Mining Company paid a dividend of 16s. per share in January last. Crichton.—The Porges Randfontein Company will commence crushing again on September 1, and you should certainly hold the shares. Argent.—You should hold Anglo-Colonial Mining Trust shares. C. H. D.—You will have seen from last week's issue that prospects of the New Rand are greatly improved. The Seasons.—No option but to go into the reconstruction and sell after. The two West Australian shares in question should be held for a rise. Dividend.—1. A fortnight ago. 2. Yes. 3. Doubtful. 4. No fixed rule can be stated. 5. If you are a registered holder you ought to have received the circular; write for it to the London agents. H. S., Hull.—I state my opinion as regards the Glencairn-Glenluce amalgamation in this week's issue under "A Preliminary Canter in Kaffirs." W. J.—Both are fair mining risks; but you can do better in the shares mentioned in my letter. Potatoe.—Yes, Buffelsdoorn Consols should Irroy's Champagne. Vintage 1889. Carte d'or. Brut.

Ernest Irroy & Co., Reims. Established 1820.

also be averaged, though I prefer Buffelsdoorn Estate. Langlaagte Royal is a fair mining proposition. I refer to the Glencairn-Glenluee matter in to-day's issue. Conso.—I almost think it is throwing good money after bad. 2. A fair mining risk; hold these for an improvement. Mysore.—All your mining shares from A to Z should be held, as nearly all are on the up-grade. J. H. C.—The enclosure mentioned was not eontained in your letter; please to write again. Caution.—Both the W. A. shares Nos. 1 and 2 are fair mining risks; but you can do better in the shares mentioned under "Golden West Australia." Dick.—I do not approve of the Rowland Consolidated Gold Mining Company. H. W. N., Forest Gate.—The matter forwarded is returned to you. It is nothing new, and I am fully posted on the subject. Sunflower.—As the shareholders have taken the matter in their own hands, you had better now act with them, a new board having been appointed, and an investigation is now being made. R. P., Aughrin.—You should join other shareholders in the Abercorn Reefs to resist the call, and the confiscation move of the directors. I am again writing on this subject in this issue. North Berwick.—You should act with the other shareholders who have now turned out the direetors of the Afriean Gold Concessions. J. D. S.—With reference to Abereorn Reefs and Umtoli, I have put your name on the list, and must again refer you to my remarks in to-day's letter. W. E.—Refer to my remarks in this issue concerning the Umtoli Gold Reefs. H. S., Brighton.—I must refer you to my remarks in this issue concerning Abercorn Reefs. What is required is a eombination of shareholders to resist the direetors' latest move. W. M., Oxford.—See remarks concerning Umtoli Reefs in to-day's issue, and combine with other shareholders. F. B., Oban.—I note that you wish to eo-operate with others concerning the Umtoli Reefs. With reference to the other shares, it will be advisable to hold them. R. T., Brighton.—I must refer you to my remarks in to-day's issue, coneerning Abercorn Reefs. Nocturna.—1. The best thing you can do is to write to the Secretary of the Balkis Land Company, at 85, Graceehurch-street, London, E.C., for full particulars, with which he will no doubt be pleased to supply you. 2. A very promising Company. 3. Balkis Eesterling are likely to improve. 4. Certainly hold Langlaagte Star and Langlaagte Royal for a rise. Nunquam.—It is not yet settled when the meeting will be held. The mining Company is coming right; but it has had of course the very serious troubles eonnected with the Jameson raid to contend with during the past six months. W. H. B.—I do not like the Ethel Hope Gold Mines, Limited; but if you are a shareholder I do not see how you ean resist the eall. Trimley.—Heidelburg Estates are promising; the other shares are under a eloud at present. Carling Knot. 1. Balkis Laud shares are likely to improve in the present revival in South Africans; hold. 2. I do not advise purchase of these Exploration shares at present. J. F.—1. As a matter of principle, I cannot recommend stockbrokers. 2. Croydon Consols were issued at 5s. for the 4s. 6d. fully-paid shares. I cannot reply by letter. Cantab.—1. A fair mining risk. 2. I do not think well of this concern. W. D. L.—I do not like the new Corporation mentioned by you. Australian Gold Trust is a fair risk. Highland Chiefs are exceedingly promising, and should be bought for a rise. Exsul.—All the South Afriean shares Nos. 1 to 4 are now advancing, and you should hold them for an important improvement; dividends will no doubt come along in time. You had better average Buffelsdoorn Consols. As regards Big Blow, I suppose you have joined the reconstruction. Reader, Harlesden.—1. You should certainly hold W. A. Trusts, and buy more to average. 2. Yes. 3. A fair mining risk. Horse Shoe.—1. If you have bought Aladdiu's Lamp at the low price at whieh I reeommended them, you are now able to clear a good profit; but a further advance is expected. 2. A fair mining risk; but you ean do better in the shares mentioned in my letter. A. W., Nottingham.—There is nothing in the rumours concerning the Mainland Consols, and you should hold for a rise. See remarks under "Golden West Australia." Cygnet.—The Golden Crown is a promising mine, and you should hold the shares for an improvement. Foxhound.—I quite agree with you that the Directors of the Central Wealth of Nations are doing nothing, not even giving any informatiou; and it is quite time that the shareholders looked after their interests. Straits.—A fair mining risk, but neglected at present. C. W. J.—Thanks for your information; but I have so far been able to discriminate most suceessfully as regards West Australian miues. There are many duffers, and there are also many good Companies. Palatine.—These shares have fallen heavily in consequence of the insurrection in Rhodesia. An improvement is probable; hold. Veritas, St. James.—I cannot quite make out the name you mention, but if you mean Golden Links, I have never recommended them. Hannan's Golden Treasure I have recommended, and this is one of the most promising mines in the Hannan's district, and likely to prove another Lake View. I think Colonial Finance Founders shares are quite high enough, and it is just as well that the trees do not grow into the sky. Sassenach.—You should hold your Barnato Banks and Johannesburg Consolidated Investment for a rise, in antieipation of the amalgamation whieh will now be consummated. You will have seen that I asked the question in last week's issue as to whether the Johannesburg Consolidated Investment Company will declare a dividend. Probably when Mr. Barnato returns from his holiday he will give his attention to this matter. T. S. O.—I do not advise you to sell your mining shares at present. This is not the time for selling, as an important advance in West Australians and in South Africans is quite on the eards. Clifford.—1. These shares are promising; but you can do better in those mentioned in my letter. Lancet.—You should hold your shares iu the Central Exploration of Western Australia, they will recover. My opiniou of Nos. 1 to 4 is favourable; hold. J. B. in B.—Pigg's Peak should be held, they will improve with the rest of the South African market. Scabrook.—For the purposes of your small trust in mining shares, I should select amongst the South Africans in your list Nos. 1, 2, 4, 5, 6 (Gleneairn), 7 (Buffelsdoorn); aud amongst West Australians No. 14 (Lake View Consols), 15 (Mainland Consols), 17 (West Australian Gold Coucessions). You had better replace the others mentioned by making a selection from the shares recommended in my letter, notably Hannan's Golden Group, Hannan's Golden Treasure, Gladiators, and Hampton Plains. J. W. W.—I should advise you to hold your West Australian shares now for an improvement, which is probable as soon as the market becomes more aetive. Also certainly hold your Barnato Banks and New Crœsus; in fact, you might with advantage average the latter. You appear to have been badly treated in the matter of Selukwe Gold, and ought to have insisted at the first go-off ou your broker paying up. J. H. B., Bristol, and W. M., Oxford.—See remarks concerning Umtoli and Abereorn Reefs in this issue.

Industrial Companies.

Constant Reader.—I am afraid that prospects of the shareholders in Duval Restaurants are very doubtful. Ludwig.—1. You might as well clear any profit in Hotel Cecil Prefs. 2. No reason to sell Gordon Hotel debentures; they are superior in security to the others. Subaltern.—A fair industrial investment. A. E., Dundee.—These hotel shares are no catch. Love.—A local eoncern, respeeting which very little is known here. Not supposed to be doing well. Pool.—1. No, I do not recommend the investment. 2. Yes, but not much chance yet of paying up. Cosmopolitan. — Under the circumstances, it will be advisable to hold the shares. You have no grounds for refusing to pay the calls. 2. Later on. 3. You must pay up. 4. A fair speculative industrial risk. Gunner.—I do not hold a favourable opinion of this Cycle Company. Springbok.—I do not advise selling at preseut; awaitdevelopments. C. W. W.—It has been the intention to convert Peter Robinson into a public Company; but nothing has lately been heard of this. Ex-Soldier.—No particular reason for selling these brewery shares now. Ballybunian.—I do not think it would be advisable to sell Nos. 1 to 3, as a revival is quite on the eards. No. 2 (Humber Extensions) are, moreover, promising. You should take your profit on No. 5. I do not think much of No. 4. Aurus Aururum.—Louise & Company is a prosperous undertaking; no reason to sell. 2. I do not like Swan & Edgar's prospects. 3. A good Company; but the priee is now high enough. E. S.—Amongst the Companies mentioned by you, both Gordon Hotels and Spiers & Pond are doing exceedingly well. I do not like United Alkali, and Pears Ordinary are too speculative. A. B. C.—No reason to sell No. 3. Nos. 4 and 5 are likely to improve, when you should sell. No. 6 should be held. Nos. 1 and 2 are fair industrial investiments. No. 7 I do not like. Miller.—No.

Mixed Investments.

Hayling.—Amongst the mining shares mentioned by you, I like only Nos. 2, 4, 5, and 7 (Menzies Golden Rhiue). Hold the others for an improvement and then sell. Amongst the Industrials, I do not think much of Nos. 10 and 11; the others are doing well. River.—1. No, I do not like the Fauvel Gold Recovery Company. 2. A fair promoting Company. 3. These brewery shares are not officially quoted. S. P. S.—1. High enough for a publishing Company. 2. Hannan's Development are a fair mining risk. 3. Giusberg should be held now. 4. It is quite time to sell Spanish. 5. No. 6. Yes, Heidelburg Estates might now be averaged. Z. Y. X.—I take the view that cable property is not progressive nowadays, and from that point of view it might be advisable to sell Nos. 1 to 4. No. 5 may have a turn shortly, and No. 6 is doing fairly well at present. Clarendon.—You have been quite right in making an exchange, and you should also hold the Barnato Banks for an improvement. The exchange in the Indian stoek might also be advisable. Cranbrookian.—You hold only good American Gold bonds (Nos. 1 to 3), and there is no reason to sell either these or Chilians. Chicarry.—A fair mining risk; but you ean do better in the shares mentioned under "Golden West Australia." 2. Sell when a good profit offers. M. J. T. H.—You should hold your mining shares, as they will improve in due time, when the mines begin crushing. As regards the investments for your maid, I do not think she can do better than to keep the money in the savings' bank. Malacca.—It is advisable to keep Nos. 1 to 3, and not advisable to sell No. 4. Debonnaire.—The debentures of the Industrial Companies in question would be very suitable; but I should think that, for instance, South Eastern Deferred (Dover "A") would be also very suitable, and sure to give you a better return in time. Perthshire.—No option but to hold No. 1 for an improvement, and no reason to sell No. 2 now. Do you not think that No. 3 leaves you so large a profit that you might take it? This is not the time for selling Mining shares, and Nos. 1 to 10 should be held; but do not forget to sell in a month or two when higher prices rule. J. P.—1. Yes, you should hold these shares. 2. No reason to sell the Prefs. now. 3. Uruguay New Bonds at 70 are a first-rate investment. 4. Certainly sell on a substantial advance, which is likely to follow the deelaration of the dividend. 5. No information is available about this concern, of which your brewer friend ought to know more than I. All your shares Nos. 6 to 17 are well selected, and should be held for a substantial rise. You cannot do better than make your selection for the investment of your £2,000 from the shares mentioned in my letter under "The Preliminary Canter in Kaffirs" and "Golden West Australia." Novice, Belfast.—I do not like No. 1, and have already expressed an adverse opinion of Nos. 3, 6, and 7. Sell Nos. 2 and 4 on an improvement, and hold No. 5 for a rise. Rothiemurchus.—Hold New Rand Mines (1) and Henderson's Estates (4), and buy more to average. Also hold Nos. 2, 3, 5, and 6 for an improvement. Walbrook.—I do not like St. Augustine Diamonds. No option but to hold the Elmore shares, and the Cycle shares should be sold when you can get a fair profit. A. M. C.—I do not think it would be advisable to sell your shares Nos. 2 to 9 now; things seem to be at about their worst. Hold also Nos. 10 to 14 for a recovery. G. W., Ton-y-Pandy.—No information is available about the local timber concern you speak of. Hold Dover "A" for a further rise. Novice, Chelsea.—1. Yes, considerably below. 2. Par. 3. Probably. Larry, Cahill.—1. A fair industrial investment, but do not hold too long. 2. I do not like these Mining shares; sell on a profit. Tipperary.—1. A fair investment. 2. Yes. 3. Probably. 4. Not yet. 5. This mine cannot crush yet for some time; but is considered exceedingly rich. J. R. X.—1. Yes, these Buenos Ayres bonds are likely to improve. 2. No news is available. Albemarle.—1. Write to the Secretary of the Arauco Company, 3, Gracechurch-street, London, E.C. I should say that it would be advisable to hold for the present. 2. Tati Concessions should be held for an improvement. 3. Under the circumstances you had better hold Chartered as you will probably get a better price. Woodcock.—1. I should advise you to hold this stock for an improvement. 2. Better not sell the Nitrate shares at the present low price. I am glad to hear that you did well in Brighton "A" on my advice. 3. Goldfields of Mysore are a very promising gamble. C. J. W.—1. Yes, Croydon Consols should be held for a further advance. 2A. No. B. Very risky. 3. These bank shares are a good investment. 4. Yes. 5. The price is quite high enough now.

Various Investments.

There has been a distinct hardening in the rates of money owing to the resumption of gold shipments from this side to New York. These may under certain circumstances assume large proportions, and the outlook generally in the United States is such as to prevent any low prices ruling in the market here. Consols have declined to $113\frac{3}{16}$ for the same reason. Silver, after a further relapse, marked a temporary rally; but the quotation is still lower for the week at $30\frac{5}{8}$. Rupee Paper has also given way to $63\frac{7}{8}$. Nitrate Rails have been distinctly firmer, and at $6\frac{5}{8}$ show a recovery of $\frac{3}{4}$. The Debentures, too, have improved; thus bearing out the view which I have taken that they have been unduly depreciated. There is very little change in nitrate of soda; but the shares of Nitrate-producing Companies have been steadier, San Jorge being quoted $5\frac{1}{4}$, Santa Rita 4, Lagunas Nitrate $2\frac{1}{8}$. Business in the Cycle share market has been very dull; but it may be that the Dunlop special settlement will cause a revival. Dunlop Deferred are easier at $\frac{7}{16}$ premium, while the Ordinary stand at $\frac{7}{32}$ premium, Humber Ordinary at $1\frac{5}{16}$, Cycle Tubes at $1\frac{1}{16}$, Beestons at 3. The special settlement of the Cycle Manufacturers Tube Company has been fixed for September 2. Undisturbed by the various criticisms which have appeared on their system in TRUTH and in the leading daily financial papers, Frank Tarrant & Company, Stock and Share Dealers, 70 and 71, Bishopsgate-street, E.C., go on inviting participation in their "special joint deals." Their latest invitation is one to a "special joint deal" which was to be opened on the 22nd inst., but the circular does not state with what stock this was to deal. Messrs. Tarrant apparently think it is sufficient to state that their previous "deal" in Denver Preferred had led to the magnificent profit of £94. 10s. on every £30 subscribed. I should like to meet with somebody who has made a profit on this "deal," and received it from Frank Tarrant & Co. By the way, the Secretary of the Wynaad Tea Company, Limited, informs me, with reference to the complaint of a correspondent of the non-receipt of a reply to his inquiries, that no letter to his knowledge has been left unanswered, and if my correspondent will write again, he will be most happy to give him any information in his power.—Your affectionate Uncle,

QUEER STORY.

CAPTAIN WIMPOLE'S EYEGLASS.

THE feud between Captain Wimpole and Mr. Sturmit dated from the last day of the previous shooting season, when they had met at the house of their mutual friend, Mr. Martin, in Hertfordshire. Wimpole was a man from town, and showed it in his manner. Sturmit was a country gentleman, and made rather a profession of hating Cockneys. The Captain, again, was rather undersized, with a quiet voice and style, while his rival was a great burly fellow, with a voice and demeanour to match. Both were excellent shots, but from the first Sturmit had shown a disposition to underrate the Londoner's capacity. A man brought up in the country, and taught to shoot from his youth upwards, must necessarily acquire greater skill than a man about town who had no shooting of his own. That was Sturmit's theory, and he held firmly to the belief that he and Wimpole were practical exemplifications of its soundness. Hence he and the Captain had not got on well together at Martin's shooting-party. The country gentleman had alternately bragged and patronised, and the town man had retorted with sundry sarcastic observations, which lost none of their point from being couched in the politest phraseology, and irritated none the less when only partly understood by the somewhat dull person at whom they were directed.

Now both Sturmit and Martin were members of the County Gun Club, at the meetings of which the former was a frequent and successful competitor. On the occasion of one of these gatherings, Captain Wimpole happened to be visiting his friend Martin, and intimated his desire to enter for the open sweepstakes that was one of the events of the morrow's programme. On the day preceding the competition Martin drove his visitor over to the club to lunch, and who should be there but Sturmit.

One of the peculiarities of Captain Wimpole was that no one had ever seen him in public without his eyeglass. He did not attach it to his person with a string, but there it was everlastingly fixed in his left eye. Any ordinary observer would have noticed that it was deeply concave, and this gave a very curious expression to the steely blue eye behind it. To Mr. Sturmit the eyeglass afforded the finishing touch to Captain Wimpole's cockneyism, and he made it the subject of many quips and sallies at which he laughed heartily himself, and Captain Wimpole always good-humouredly smiled.

They lunched together at the club, and the conversation naturally ran on pigeon-shooting.

"I should never have entered for the open if I'd known you were going to compete, Captain," said Sturmit. "I remember how you wiped my eye with the pheasants last year. Of course, I could not wipe yours, because of the eyeglass—ha, ha!"

"You must not be too hard on my unfortunate infirmity," remarked Wimpole, "considering how it stimulates your pleasant wit."

"I'm glad you like it," cried Sturmit. "You ought to be dead nuts on the plate to-morrow, seeing that you will look for it through plate-glass. There's a window insurance society in the town; you ought to take out a policy for fear of an accident."

"You're not the man to fire at a pigeon and hit a crow," responded Wimpole, suavely. "Besides, I always safeguard myself by keeping a glass in reserve."

"You had better come back with us, and dine and stay the night, Sturmit," said Mr. Martin, wishing to change the conversation. "I see you have driven over; send your man back for your clothes."

"Thanks very much, I will," said the gentleman addressed, who highly appreciated his neighbour's cellar; "let's have a cigar now and a stroll round."

As they walked and talked about the art and pastime of pigeon-shooting, Mr. Sturmit made several opportunities for getting a good look at Captain Wimpole's eyeglass. He seemed also a little absent-minded, as though mentally revolving some project. Presently he remarked:

"I think, if you don't mind, Martin, I'll go back for my clothes myself. There is plenty of time, and I want to attend to a little business."

"As you please," said the host; "we dine at eight, and you can take Wimpole on at billiards afterwards. If I remember rightly, you had a great match when you met in the autumn."

"Oh, I'm no good against your town men at indoor games," said Sturmit, with a half sneer. "I always notice that men with eyeglasses fluke like the devil. I remember that the Captain got a tenner out of me; perhaps I shall get it back to-morrow, as flukes don't come off so much at pigeon-shooting."

He went swaggering off to his trap, Martin and Wimpole looking after him.

"Perhaps, perhaps not," softly ejaculated the latter, unconsciously quoting a music-hall ditty. Martin said nothing, but began to wish that he had not invited Sturmit to dinner. Why was the latter so cross-grained with Captain Wimpole? Was it only the intolerance which big men so often display towards little men when the latter exhibit unexpected qualities of nerve and skill which more than discount mere size and brute force?

Mr. Sturmit did not drive straight home, but made a detour in order to pass through the town. He stopped at an optician's, and, entering the shop, asked for an eyeglass suitable for short sight.

"Do you know the number you require, Sir, or is it for yourself?" said the man.

"No, not for myself," said Sturmit, "and I want it pretty strong. Haven't you got some suited to a peculiar kind of sight—I forget what it's called——"

"Astigmatism, you probably mean," the optician remarked.

"That's it," cried Sturmit. "Well, have you any eyeglasses suited to that kind of sight?"

"Yes, I have some," said the man, "but it will be very difficult to provide the right sight by guesswork."

"You leave that to me," interrupted Sturmit. "Show me the strongest you've got of that kind."

The optician produced the required glasses, and Sturmit examined them carefully. They looked extremely like those worn by Captain Wimpole.

"I suppose," said the intending purchaser, "that though these would suit persons suffering from the form of bad sight you mentioned, they would be of but little benefit to a person with ordinary short sight?"

"That is so; a person to whose eyes they were not adapted would find his vision impaired rather than improved by them."

"Would he discover the fact at once?" Sturmit inquired.

"Unquestionably," responded the shopman, "he would instantly perceive a certain distortion in the objects about him; he would——"

"That will do," interrupted Sturmit, "I will have a couple of them."

The purchase completed, the eyeglasses were carefully put away in the recesses of a pocket-book, and Mr. Sturmit drove off with a look of satisfaction on his florid visage. Arriving at his house, he hurriedly thrust his dress clothes into a bag, and was speedily on his way to Martin's. When he got there both his host and Captain Wimpole were dressing; so he went straight to the room allotted to him to perform the same operation. He casually asked the man who showed him the way which was the Captain's room, and found that it was next to his own. At this piece of information he gave a chuckle of satisfaction.

When he descended to the drawing-room he found the others already there, together with another neighbour named Langford. Dinner was immediately announced, and during the repast the conversation naturally reverted to the subject which had occupied their attention at lunch. Many and various were the theories expressed regarding the conditions and circumstances which make for success at pigeon-shooting. The only point upon which all were agreed was that it was a question of eye more than any anything.

"Don't think of taking aim, but keep your eye on the bird," was Mr. Langford's dictum.

"Both eyes," said Sturmit, emphatically. "I never yet knew a man who shut one eye, or tried to use only one, and shot well. Why, look at Wimpole—he's an example in point. Do you think that he'd stick to his eyeglass so carefully if he didn't shoot with both eyes?"

"I certainly keep both eyes open," said the subject of this remark, "and I know I should not shoot so well without my eyeglass."

"But one eye is generally the master," remarked Langford. "If you aim at some mark in the usual way with both eyes open, and then close first one and then the other, you will find that you are actually sighting with only one eye—generally the right."

Wimpole nodded his head in acquiescence.

"That may be so," pursued Sturmit; "but don't you think that when a man is accustomed to shoot with both eyes open he would shoot worse if anything went wrong with his left eye, even though the other were the 'master,' as you term it?"

"I certainly think so," observed Wimpole—"temporarily, at any rate. It would upset the nerves for one thing, and that would be quite enough to spoil a man's shooting."

Sturmit said no more, but it was clear that for some reason or other the conclusion arrived at, trivial as it seemed, afforded him considerable satisfaction. He helped himself to more wine on the strength of it, and when they adjourned to the billiard-room he was quite jocose. He adroitly brought the conversation round again to the shooting match, tried to get rather more than the regular odds against himself in the open sweepstakes, and then jocularly proposed to make a match of it with Captain Wimpole. The latter, in his quiet way, said he had no objection, though he considered that he ought to receive slight odds as a cockney sportsman when pitted against a country gentleman, whose experience and opportunities were so much larger than his own. Sturmit would not admit this, and cracked many jokes about the opportunities town men had of practising at cats in the back yard, and shooting candles at deal boards, and many more jovial witticisms to the same effect. And under the stimulus of these mental efforts, and several brandies and soda, he played so brilliantly at pool that he won quite a nice little sum, and grew more and more vainglorious in consequence.

The next morning Sturmit woke rather early. He was unpleasantly conscious of possessing a head, and would have given a good deal for a slightly-adulterated soda, but forbore to ring for it, lest the appearance of a servant at an inopportune moment should upset a little scheme he hoped to carry out. He slightly opened his door so that he might hear an approaching footstep, put a bath towl close by on a chair, and then got into bed again and listened. Presently he heard a door open, and hastily jumped out of bed and seized the towel. Some one was coming down the passage, and he opened his door just as Captain Wimpole was passing. He saw what he wanted to see—that the Captain was for once without his eyeglass.

"Going to the bath?" said Sturmit; "all right, after you, I'm in no hurry," and he stepped back into his room again.

Captain Wimpole thanked him and disappeared into the bath room. Sturmit listened until the sound of splashing from within assured him that the ablutionist could not reappear for a few minutes. Then he darted into the Captain's bedroom and looked over the dressing-table. Yes, there was what he sought—the two eyeglasses, in a neat little leather case. Quick as thought Sturmit took them out and put in their place the two he had bought the previous evening. A hurried examination showed that, superficially, Wimpole's and the substituted glasses were very much alike. Would the wearer perceive any difference, except in the matter of seeing through them? And if he felt that something was a little wrong with his vision, to what would he naturally attribute it?

To biliousness, or a cold in the eye, or a further stage in its organic deterioration—anything rather than the glasses, which he would never suspect for a moment had been changed.

These thoughts passed through Sturmit's mind when he had got back to his room, and they satisfied him. So far as he could see he had done the trick very nicely. In justice to him it must be said that he did not realise how thoroughly despicable were the means he was adopting to reach his end. He tried to persuade himself that he was only playing a smart practical joke on the Captain, who possibly wore the eyeglass only for show, and who, therefore, deserved to have his vanity punished. And, if at the same time the interloper's shooting was temporarily spoiled, well, so much the better for the other competitors, genuine sportsmen and honest country gentlemen—like himself.

When the party met at breakfast, Wimpole had got a glass in his eye, but the observant Sturmit thought that he detected a certain uneasiness on the part of the wearer. He seemed more silent than usual, and his mouth twitched nervously; but he made no remark on the topic that was uppermost in Sturmit's mind.

But after breakfast he seized an opportunity when Martin was alone, to ask if the latter could spare a man to drive over into the town for him. On receiving an answer in the affirmative, he sought out the man and explained to him his mission.

"I want you to hurry into Stradbrook and find the optician who yesterday evening sold a gentleman two eyeglasses like this one, which you can take with you. There cannot be many opticians in the town, and when you have found the right one, ask him if he will oblige me by coming over to the Gun Club at mid-day to-day. Say it is a matter of importance for him to be present. You manage to be there, too, and keep him about until I send for him. Don't say anything about this to anybody, and there's a sovereign for your trouble."

The man said he perfectly understood, and departed.

On arriving at the club grounds, Martin and his party found that one competition had been decided, and that another was in progress. Wimpole very speedily discovered that the shooting was not particularly good, and from the conversation of other spectators he gathered that Sturmit was expected to win the open sweepstakes. That gentleman could get only a slight shade of odds against himself, even when it transpired that the outsider from London who was going to compete had no inconsiderable reputation as a shot. There were about a dozen other entries for the event, which was one of seven birds each at twenty-two, twenty-five, and twenty-eight yards' rise.

When the order of shooting had been settled, they speedily got to work. Wimpole made a most disastrous start, missing his first bird with both barrels, but he killed the other six. The first failure, however, put Sturmit in excellent spirits. "The charm works," he muttered to himself. That Wimpole failed in only one instance rather disappointed him, but he reflected with satisfaction that in all probability the charm would work still more efficiently when the distance was longer. And then he proceeded to kill all his seven birds, Wimpole and another man coming second with six each.

The betting now became slight odds on Sturmit, and he laid eleven to ten in sovereigns on himself until takers were tired. Wimpole had so far declined to bet, but he now said to Sturmit:

"What odds will you lay against me individually?"

"Well, that amounts to backing myself against you," observed Sturmit, with characteristic arrogance, "and I think eleven to ten ought to be enough."

"You forget that Mr. Turner has done as well as I have," replied Wimpole, looking at the gentleman referred to; "even if I beat you, I am by no means sure to beat him."

Mr. Turner laughed. "I'll have an even fiver with you, sir, on the strength of your polite opinion," he said, pleasantly, and Wimpole agreed.

"Come, I'll lay twelve to ten against you," cried Sturmit; "but it's only to give you back the money I won from you at pool last night."

"What shall we make it—£120 to £100?" said the Captain, quietly.

Sturmit was slightly staggered by this offer, but as he had been loudly complaining of the difficulty of backing himself, he did not like to refuse it, especially as it was overheard by several of his friends. Moreover, he was quite confident of winning the sweepstakes himself, for he felt in a conquering mood. And it seemed to him that the eyeglass trick was working fairly satisfactorily.

"Oh, if you want to make a gamble of it, I don't mind," he said, "I don't suppose £100 more or less will break me; what do you think, Martin?"

"Break you, indeed!" quoth the gentleman addressed, "I wish you owed me a thousand."

"Well, I expect I could pay it without being sold up," continued Sturmit, swaggeringly, "and if I have to take a hundred from the captain, I hope his half pay will stand it."

Captain Wimpole's face darkened somewhat at this speech, but all he said was,

"I think my friend Martin will guarantee my solvency up to £100."

"Rather," cried the gentleman appealed to, "consider me your bond—and now let's get to business."

The shooting recommenced, and both got their first three birds, Wimpole with the right barrel, Sturmit twice requiring his left as well. Then the former hit his fourth hard, but did not stop it. Wimpole paused a second, as though expecting the bird to fall, and then fired again—a perfect kill. It was an admirable shot, the distance being quite forty yards. Sturmit muttered an anathema to himself, and his faith in opticians vanished for ever. He only feathered his next bird with his right barrel, and missed it altogether with his left. He killed his fifth and sixth, but bungled his seventh, which got away, and as Wimpole killed all his, it came about that, at the end of the second heat, instead of being one down he was one up. Things looked black for Sturmit, but not blacker than he looked himself.

"I think I ought to offer you the odds you laid me," said Wimpole to him in his politest manner, "shall I say £120 to £100 that I beat you?"

"You're damned obliging," growled Sturmit, "but I shoot for sport, not to put money in the pockets of——" sharpers, was on the tip of his tongue, but he caught the Captain's unglazed eye at that moment, and the expression warned him off, so he finished—"experts from town." Then he added, "It was very smart of you to miss the first bird, and so get longer odds; have you got anything else up your sleeve of the same sort?"

"If you wish me to explain how I came to miss the first bird, I will do so," said Wimpole, looking sternly at the other. But Sturmit hastily rejoined that he didn't care a straw how it happened, except that he should like to know the trick himself, as it seemed mighty convenient.

"Do you mean to insinuate——" began the captain, wrathfully.

"Of course he doesn't," interrupted Martin, who saw that the men were getting to loggerheads; "that's only his idea of a joke."

"Well, the idea does not strike me as a happy one," rejoined Wimpole; "and I like Mr. Sturmit's practical jokes even less, if he will permit me to say so."

Sturmit tried to laugh the matter off, but he was palpably uneasy. His waning self-confidence altogether disappeared at Wimpole's unmistakable innuendo. Clearly the captain had some inkling of the trick that had been played upon him, and had made a shrewd guess as to the identity of the perpetrator. But could he prove anything?

The shooting now began at the 28 yards rise. Only two of the other competitors were equal to Sturmit, the rest being practically out of the contest. Wimpole held his lead, not missing a single bird, while his particular adversary went all to pieces, being about fifth on the list at the finish. By that time Sturmit was quite yellow with rage and mortification, and, despite the more than suspicion in his mind that his little trick had been found out, he could not hold his tongue. He snatched a sheet of paper from the stationery case directly they had returned to the club-house, and wrote out an order on his banker to pay the bearer £120. This he threw across the table to Wimpole; then, addressing the others to whom he owed bets, he said—

"I will send you gentlemen cheques when I get time."

"This is not to be borne," exclaimed Wimpole. "I had intended to spare this person the ignominious exposure he deserves, but he has rendered it impossible. Gentlemen, may I ask your kind attention for a few minutes?"

The altercation had already attracted some notice, and now everybody gathered within hearing distance of the irate speaker. Sturmit flung himself into a chair with a badly assumed air of indifference and took up a paper.

"Mr. Martin is an old friend of mine," Wimpole proceeded, "and I came down on a visit to him yesterday. I have met Mr. Sturmit once before, and it happened that last night he also enjoyed our friend's hospitality. You will all have observed that I have an infirmity of vision which compels me to wear an eyeglass. This morning while I was temporarily absent from my bedroom, some one entered it, and in place of the couple of glasses I always carry with me, substituted others of a different character. I detected the trick in a moment, and from the first I suspected the guilty person. There is no doubt whatever in my own mind that this mean trick was played upon me in order to spoil my shooting; and with most men it would certainly have had that effect. In a moment I will tell you why it did not in my case. What I have to say now is that I charge Mr. Sturmit with surreptitiously entering my bedroom and changing my glasses."

"And I say that you're a liar!" cried Sturmit, jumping to his feet.

"Martin," said Wimpole, turning to his friend, "will you have the goodness to go outside and bring in a gentleman you will find there with your man?"

Martin departed on this errand, and Sturmit also walked towards the door, but was promptly intercepted by the secretary.

"I think we must trouble you to remain, Mr. Sturmit," said that functionary. "This is a matter which affects the honour of the club as well as your own."

"Damn the honour of the club!" burst forth Sturmit. "Do you think I am going to be put on my trial because some infernal sharper from town brings an accusation against me to cover his own delinquencies?"

"Naturally we shall not allow an unsupported assertion to carry any weight," said the secretary, "but I understand——"

At this moment Martin returned with the stranger, whom Wimpole forthwith interrogated, first informing his auditory that the gentleman before them was Mr. Spackman, an optician from the neighbouring town.

"I have troubled you to come here to-day, Mr. Spackman," said Wimpole, "because we want your evidence in regard to a certain matter. I sent a glass over to you this morning; did you recognise it?"

Mr. Spackman took the glass in question from his waistcoat pocket.

"I think it is one of two that I sold to a gentleman yesterday," he said.

"Should you think that is the other?" continued Wimpole, taking the glass from his eye and offering it for inspection.

"I am practically certain those are the two I sold," said the optician. "I recognise them because the lenses are very peculiar, being for astigmatism."

"A person suffering only from short-sight would be considerably inconvenienced if he had to use one of these glasses?" pursued Wimpole.

"Certainly he would," the optician stated; "he would see indistinctly and inaccurately."

"Do you know the gentleman to whom you sold two eye-glasses of this kind yesterday?"

"No, he was a stranger to me; but I noticed him particularly. He was tall and stoutish, with rather a red face, and small side whiskers; he had on a tweed suit and cloth gaiters, and had a white tie with a dog's-head pin in it."

This was so exact a description of Sturmit that everybody looked round for him. But he had disappeared.

"Does any gentleman desire to further question Mr. Spackman?" Wimpole asked.

There was no answer, and after a momentary pause Wimpole informed the optician that they would not detain him further, but were exceedingly obliged to him for his attendance; and the good man departed, somewhat mystified by the proceedings, but hoping that they would in some way prove good for trade. Wimpole turned to the members of the club.

"Gentlemen," he said, "I greatly regret to have been the unfortunate cause in one way of this unpleasant business. Believe me, although I was conscious that a somewhat dirty trick had been played upon me, and suspected both the perpetrator and his object, I did not intend to make the matter public, and I should have refrained from doing so had I not been provoked beyond endurance. And I now wish to explain a fact which may have puzzled you—how it is that, with an eye-glass of an altogether different sight from my own, I have nevertheless shot pretty well. Gentlemen, although I always wear an eye-glass, and feel very uncomfortable without one; although this strange one did bother me at first, and probably was the cause of my beginning with a miss; yet this has nothing to do with the character of the lens. For, to let you into the secret of my unfortunate infirmity, the eye in which I always wear a glass is, in fact—a glass eye!"

MUSIC.

THE MUSICAL FESTIVALS.

NEXT Wednesday the London orchestral rehearsals for the Three Choirs Festival, to be held at Worcester, will commence at Queen's Hall. This autumn there will be no fewer than five musical festivals, namely, at Worcester, September 6-9; at Norwich, October 6-9; Sheffield, October 13-14; Bristol, October 14-17; and at Hanley, October 29-30. Several novelties are announced, none of them perhaps of particular importance, if I may except Signor Mancinelli's setting of Boito's "Hero and Leander," which will be given at Norwich as a cantata, and, should it then succeed, may possibly be produced on the stage at Covent Garden next season. Festivals have, indeed, of late years fallen from their high estate. Some of our best composers, more than one of them smarting under quasi-failure, have relinquished writing for musical festivals upon the very just, though painfully commercial, rather than artistic, ground that novelties are not paid for. The festival authorities expect such things gratis, and even look askance at the suggestion of a composer's hotel bill, hoping that the Bishop of the diocese, or the Dean, or at worst the organist, will stall the stranger without fee. Indeed, where British musicians are concerned, festival committees seem to have a conscientious objection to offering them any sort of adequate remuneration. Foreigners are different, for although the unenlightened provincial may smile at local talent, he takes off his hat to a "Monsieur," a "Herr," or a "Signor." A British oratorio or cantata may occupy a composer's time for twelve months, but festival authorities seem to labour under the impression that the author is sufficiently rewarded by hearing his music in public.

It is the "charity" business which, from a musical point of view, is the curse of provincial festivals. Everything, save the fees of the chief artists, who have a lively idea that charity begins at home, is subordinated to the passing round of the hat. Therefore, these celebrations are likely to become more and more local and less generally interesting, and, consequently, more costly and less profitable, until music instead of charity is made the principal object. At the Three Choirs Festivals the clergy of the Established Church have, indeed, coolly appropriated the whole of the money which formerly was divided between them and the musicians. Even at the greater festivals, such as Leeds, Bristol, and Birmingham (for Norwich seems to be given over to the Italians) committees appear to think far more of getting up a big subscription for the local hospitals than of assisting the cause of Art. Consequently, the composer, who gives his work for nothing, and too often hears it massacred by the local forces, does not see why he should waste his time. In former days we had several progressive choral societies in central London eager to take up festival novelties. The composer was then supposed to have his reward in the increased celebrity with which a successful festival production invested him. But now, even when his oratorio makes a hit, he is compelled to rely for a bare hearing exclusively upon provincial choirs, who pay nothing for the right of performance, the unfortunate musician being supposed to be remunerated by the few pence per copy which the publishers allow him on sales. No English composer ever gained a shilling for the best symphony he ever wrote, and cantatas and oratorios seem now to be falling to an equally low commercial level. Festival committees also complain that novelties take up a good deal of time and are costly to produce, while local audiences do not support them in the sense that they crowd to familiar works, such as the "Messiah," "Elijah," and "The Golden Legend." So important Festival novelties, until a change for the better occurs, are likely to be things of the past.

The only Festival novelties this year accordingly are at Worcester (with the help of the choirs from Hereford and plague-stricken Gloucester), a short oratorio "The Light of Life," by Mr. Elgar, a local musician, and a church cantata by Mr. Blair, a local organist; while at Norwich, apart from Signor Mancinelli's cantata, the only new works are a violin concerto in D minor, by Mr. Cliffe, which will doubtless be heard at London and other concerts, and an Irish chorus, "Phaudrig Crohoore," by Dr. Stanford. At Sheffield there are no novelties at all, while at Bristol (which, by the way, like Sheffield, is held so late in the year that it clashes with the Colonne Orchestra at Queen's Hall, Mr. Manns' performances at the Crystal Palace, and other concerts) the only new works are a short setting of Coleridge's hymn "Before Sunrise," by Mr. P. M. Miles, and Mr. Roeckel's song "Siddartha," though a "Requiem" by Gounod, which is said to be new to England (although it has probably been heard at some of the Roman Catholic Churches), will also be given. For the rest the programmes at all these festivals will be devoted to the standard oratorios and similar works, while at each festival there seems to be this year a tendency towards miscellaneous programmes, in which orchestral symphonies and excerpts from Wagner's operas figure.

In short, the Festival schemes have been drawn up almost exclusively from the local point of view. I have no doubt that in this sense they do some good, for, particularly in the West country, performances of symphonies and similar compositions by large festival bands are rare, and they may thus fulfil some educational purpose. Such repetitions by scratch bands under local men do not, of course, appeal very strongly to London musicians, who were formerly amongst the staunchest supporters of the provincial festivals; for better performances under the greatest masters of the conductor's art are frequently heard in the metropolis. Perhaps partly for this reason, although the festivals seem to increase year by year, the receipts, or, at any rate, the profits, annually show a marked falling off.

A London musical season will open on Saturday with the Promenade Concerts, which will be given at Queen's Hall nightly till October 10. Mr. Wood this year has put forward a rather ambitious scheme, and it is only hoped that the means at command will suffice to properly carry it out. To hear first-rate music for a shilling is doubtless an advantage, but the performances must be a good deal better, and better rehearsed than last year, to be considered quite satisfactory.

Mr. Maurice Grau has now returned to Europe. In America he told his compatriots some strange things. For example, he is alleged to have said that the best representations at Covent Garden are not so good as those at the cheap-priced Saturday-night performances in New York. His opinion was probably formed after hearing some of the poorly-cast representations towards the close of the recent season — that is to say, after Sir Augustus Harris's death. Mr. Grau told an amusing story of singers who keep asking more and more every year, although they have now pretty well approached their limit, while "this season," he said, "since the free silver ticket, a number of them have insisted on the insertion of clauses in their contracts requiring the payment of their salaries in gold." The prima donna of the period obviously does not believe in free silver. Mr. Grau also complained of the size of Covent Garden, the capacity being only about half as great as that of the Metropolitan Opera House New York, so that London prices are about 20 per cent higher than American. I do not know quite what Mr. Grau wants. The gallery folks at Covent Garden are far enough away from the stage at present, and to put them twice as far off would need a supply of telescopes.

In New York, and possibly also in London, Mr. Grau promises some interesting casts, such as the De Reszkes, Mme. Melba (Brünnhilde and the Singing Bird), and Bispham (Mime) in "Siegfried," Melba as Rosina in "Il Barbiere," Calvé as Susanna and Selika, and Eames as Valentina. Amongst the new comers will be Mlle. Bellina, a young Italian soprano; M. Goquy, a tenor; and M. Thomas Salignas, a tenor from Rheims. Herr Siedel will conduct all the German operas, Signor Mancinelli being relegated to "Tannhäuser" in French and "Die Meistersinger" in Italian. It is a pity we cannot, in London, hear the Wagner operas conducted by a German. The Italians, with all their enthusiasm and genuine musicianship, are not at all at home in Wagner's advanced music.

The Carl Rosa Company are having a successful season in Dublin. Of course, the idea of a short visit to Drury Lane is now abandoned. In fact, as I stated at the time, the Carl Rosa Company merely intimated that they were prepared to give a month at Drury Lane in September-October providing that a dramatic season were not otherwise arranged. Mr. Coleman now has the house, so that the opera idea falls through.

Now that Sir Augustus Harris is dead certain writers are wildly speculating on his finances. For example, it is gravely stated by one of my confrères that the takings for Smetana's "Bartered Bride" at Drury Lane were only £6. 7s. 9d. Why the ninepence? Was there a thrippenny gallery for disthrested musicians of the unhappy Isle?

Herr Mottl has wisely resolved to abandon his autumn concerts this year, and instead will give an increased number in the spring. We have now so many orchestral schemes in the autumn, including three concerts under Richter, four under Colonne, six under Lamoureux, several under Henschel, twelve under Manns, and the usual amateur and extra performances, that the field of Wagnerian and symphony music seems to be pretty well filled.

The musical comedy, "Newmarket," at the Opera Comique, has a good deal of turf and comparatively little musical interest; though at any rate we have to thank Mr. Edouin for abolishing the vapid love ballads and the hitherto inevitable topical song sung by a would-be-comedian usually with a flower pot instead of a hat. "Newmarket" is, in fact, seriously dramatic, Mr. Edouin giving a beautifully-finished and striking character-sketch of the quick-tempered though good-hearted horse trainer; while Miss May Edouin is a bright representative of his mischievous grand-daughter. Except as to a few numbers by Mr. John Crook, the authorship of the music is mercifully not disclosed.

LETTERS ON BOOKS.

MY DEAR MR. WYNDHAM,—In every age to deny degrading beliefs about God is—to those who hold these beliefs—to deny His existence; as though, to borrow an illustration from Bacon, to deny that Saturn ever ate his own children was to deny the existence of Saturn. Tom Paine was the bogey atheist of his day to candid contemporary Christians, yet not one of them more firmly held or more lucidly and earnestly expressed faith in immortality and in God than this execrated atheist. You have but to read his "Age of Reason" (1), of which a perfect edition has just appeared, to realise how convinced and fervent a theist was its author. In reading, again, an admirably written "Life of Oliver Wendell Holmes" (2), I find that for some time the author of "Elsie Venner," the most devout of Christians, was the bogey atheist of the Churches. It was, perhaps, inevitable that he should pay this penalty for preaching the duties of God to man almost in the spirit of Omar Khayyam's large utterance:—

> Oh, Thou, who man of baser earth didst make,
> And who with Eden didst devise the snake;
> For all the sin wherewith the face of man
> Is blackened, man's forgiveness give—and take!

"If a created being," said the Doctor, "has no rights which his Creater is bound to respect, there is an end to all moral relations between them." This was strong meat to those who, to use the scriptural expression, "filled their bellies with the east wind" of arid doctrines, without ever assimilating the teaching of Christ, or, in other words, to the vast majority of Christians. "Can any man look round and see what Christian countries are now doing," asks the Doctor, "and how they are governed, and what is the general condition of society, without seeing that Christianity is the flag under which the world sails, and not the rudder that steers its course?" Another heretical utterance of his recalls Voltaire's rejoinder to those who asked, "If you take away our faith, what will you put in its place?" "You might as well say of a tiger," replied Voltaire, "if you take away this tiger, what will you put in his place?" "One thing seems to me clear," writes Holmes in a letter on immortality, "that if the future life is to be for the bulk of mankind what the larger part of our pulpits teach, namely, a condition of hopeless woe, there is no reason why we should wish to have a proof of another life." When men are called atheists for holding such views, you are reminded of Epicurus' answer to the charge, "It is heresy—not to deny—but to accept the popular notions of the gods." "Non Deos vulgi negari profanum; sed vulgi opiniones Diis applicare profanum." The old negress who in Mr. Haweis' delightful book "Travel and Talk" (3) shouted frantically and frequently at a revival service he attended in New Orleans, "Glory! Glory! Barabbas in the Highest" (meaning probably "Hosannah") fairly expressed the mistake of the Churches about their Founder. The old ladies who are the usual spokesmen of the Churches are happily hit off in this pleasant book of Mr. Haweis' by Bishop Phillips Brooks' description of them as "Dear old moth-eaten angels." By the way, Mr. Haweis gives you a very pleasant impression of Wendell Holmes; though he does no great justice to his memory in printing a common-place hymn of the "Autocrat's," and comparing it, to its advantage, with Tennyson's "Crossing the Bar." No doubt Holmes was a very old man when he composed the hymn, but he did not, like Emerson, survive himself. "After Longfellow's death," he said to Mr. Haweis, "as he lay in the chapel before the coffin-lid was shut down, I went in with Emerson to take a last look at our poor friend. Emerson stood gazing at the quiet face for some moments. Then, turning to me, he said, 'That is the face of a very amiable gentleman, but I do not know who he is.'"

> In life's last scene what prodigies surprise!

Walt Whitman also described to Mr. Haweis these last vacant days of Emerson, but he did not think the spectacle piteous or painful. "Painful!" he said, "No, no, it seemed to me just right; it was natural; Nature slowly claiming back her own—the elements she had lent—he himself did not seem to feel it painful. I did not; it was all as it should be—harmony, not discord." And he then proceeded to compare such a decay to a sunset—surely the inaptest comparison ever made! What could less resemble the glory of a sunset than this:—

> Dull, mechanic, pacing to and fro,
> This set-grey life and apathetic end?

I have not been fortunate in the only novel I have read of late, "A Modern Siren" (4), in which a woman seduces her sister's betrothed and her own stepson. Perhaps a single specimen of the hysterical style of this silly story may suffice:—

> "O, kiss me, kiss me before we part," said Lilith, softly and tenderly. Julian could scarcely forbear clasping her to his breast, but he overcame the temptation. "As your son," he said firmly, and imprinted a kiss upon her forehead. With a wild cry she flung herself upon his breast. "Love! dearest! soul of my soul," she cried, the words rushing from her wildly as a torrent, "I love you. Why should we part? My love shall bridge over the great gulf between us."

She succeeds in seducing him, and in persuading him to an elopement, but, upon the death of the child of their shame, she commits suicide. Fortunately, the story is as feeble and foolish as it is unwholesome. I remember once seeing in one of those hotch-potch weeklies that sell by the million a column headed, "To be Read Aloud," containing brief paragraphs of such import and importance as to call for all the emphasis of elocution. The fifth paragraph in this portentous column ran thus: "The Queen is very fond of tapioca pudding." Those who think such revelations should be read out like the Gospel in church will revel in the disclosures and descriptions of "Marlborough House and its Occupants" (5). It speaks well indeed for the Prince and Princess of Wales that nothing this courtly book can say of them rouses a reactionary prejudice in the reader. Those for whom it is especially written must be charmed with its manner and matter, though it leaves still some fascinating mysteries unsolved. It does not, for instance, absolutely guarantee that all the male members of the Prince's Household purchase each a "Lincoln & Bennett" a day, though it suggests this as the only adequate explanation of the astonishing fact that none of them is ever seen with a shabby hat. Surely he should have remembered and quoted Holmes's lines:—

> Wear a good hat: the secret of your looks
> Lives with the beaver in Canadian brooks.
> Virtue may flourish in an old cravat,
> But man and nature scorn the shocking hat.

—Believe me, my dear Mr. Wyndham, ever yours very sincerely,

DESMOND B. O'BRIEN.

GIRLS' GOSSIP.

DEAREST AMY,—We constantly meet coveys of bicyclists, sometimes all men, sometimes a mixed party of youths and maidens. They do not often present a picturesque appearance, but very much the reverse, the girls looking cut in two, with dark skirt and light blouse, and the men with a displeasing insufficiency of cap. It would be better to wear none than to ride in the wretched little flimsy things that serve only to accentuate the meagre supply of hair that is now conventional, and the small and ill-developed head that seems to be the rule among the uneducated classes. The movements of the girls' knees are usually more or less hideous, though a small minority manage to ride gracefully enough without unduly raising the limbs. I sometimes think this is a mere matter of skirt-building. Minna, who wears a Redfern cycling costume, looks charming, and even from a back view presents a graceful appearance.

The other morning we sighted from afar a cycling party, and as they came nearer both of the girls exclaimed at once: "No blouses! What a mercy!" We were so delighted with that party. Whether by accident or design, they presented a perfect chord of colour in their attire. The men wore brown or heather mixture, and the girls had costumes with neat waistcoats, and trim collars and ties. One costume was orange and brown mixed, and with this an orange vest was worn. The girl was an attractive brunette with a clear complexion, and great velvet eyes with a hint of yellow in them. Another of the party wore chocolate cloth faced with a deep shade of greyish blue velvet. Her vest was white drill, and she had a white hat with cornflowers and a white veil. A third girl, whose youth was attested by a great switch of hair hanging to her waist and tied midway with pale blue ribbon, wore a rifle green cloth skirt and coat and a full front of pale blue batiste. Her hat was green straw with pale blue flowers and a knot of chené ribbon in the two colours.

It was quite a pretty sight.

I have seen so many bicycles in an unprotected condition at railway stations, on steamboats, and on the top of cabs, railway omnibuses, and broughams, that I notice with pleasure the particulars of a crate just registered by Drew & Sons. It is very light of weight, being chiefly made of strong wickerwork, and it takes the machine without the pedals being unscrewed. The handle has to be taken off. It straps inside the crate, which is on steel rollers, and can therefore easily be led along. This is a decided advantage, especially on Continental railways, where there is almost always a scarcity of porters. "Pity the sorrows of a poor old bike," might be the refrain of most of the machines one meets on one's travels. One sees them getting visibly demoralised, and, considering how much they cost, it seems a pity that this simple expedient for saving them from damage should not be adopted.

I see that Tennyson's early home, Somersby Old Hall, in Lincolnshire, is to be let or sold. I wish I were rich enough to buy it. Don't you think that life would in some degree be beautified by living in the midst of such associations as gather round the birthplace of such a man? Or would they, after awhile, be forgotten and become merged in the commonplaces of existence? I used to think that no one could lead an ignoble life within sight or sound of the sea. I need scarcely mention that this idea belonged to a very early age, and that it soon gave way before the realities of the seaside, as we know it. The sea is almost desecrated by the humanity that flows down to it in August—the cheap trippers; the people who munch incessantly from morning to night, whose only dishes are paper bags and only plates their fingers; the badly brought up children, whose yells go up incessantly from one quarter and another of the beach; the tired and thirsty goats and donkeys with their thoughtless boy attendants, liberal of whip but scant of real care; the "niggers" and the gaping crowds they draw with vulgar song and chorus, tedious tinkle of the banjo, tiresome thumping of the tambourine, and loathly braying of the concertina. The yells of "fresh s'rimps" and "water*creases*" do not improve matters either.

So that, instead of the idyllic ocean of my youthful dreams, there is rather an increase than otherwise of the vulgar and commonplace "by the sea."

But then, did not Byron write of the "rapture by the lonely shore," of the society "where none intrudes?"

Li Hung Chang fascinates me. I read every word of the accounts of his doings, and was delighted to note that, in the course of seeing the ship-building he had made two jokes. No one but his interpreter and himself understood them, but they were sufficiently good to make the latter laugh until he cried, and to cause the Viceroy himself to utter a laugh so loud, so sudden, and so brief, as to cause men who were at work several yards away to turn round to see if anything was the matter.

I admire the beautiful simplicity of the Chinese plan of orders of merit and decorative medals. Unlike ours, which are in a confusing number of patterns, and are, in fact, a complete study in themselves, just as though they were an ology or an ism, those of China consist of one Order only, that of the Double Dragon, which is divided into five classes, each class being subdivided into a variety of grades. This Order Li Hung Chang intends to bestow upon some three hundred individuals with whom he has been brought into agreeable association during his English tour. Paris, Petersburg, and London have all competed for the honour of making these souvenirs, and I am sure you are sufficiently patriotic to feel pleased that England has been the successful competitor. The Order has been given to the Goldsmiths' and Silversmiths' Company, 112, Regent-street, and they have succeeded in reproducing with absolute fidelity the very elaborate Chinese ornamentation and characters in the finest possible repoussé work. The Order is in gold and silver, embellished by rich enamels of various colours.

I drew your attention some time ago to a new verb "to bunch," an etymological arrival from America, meaning to send or give bouquets to a lady. I have now found another new word—in fact, two new ones, both of which are elliptical and labour-saving. One is "brunch," signifying a meal that combines breakfast and lunch, and one that is partaken of at an hour somewhere within hail of ten a.m. The other is "blunch," and means a rather similar meal, but with more lunch than breakfast about it. Do you not admire the subtlety of these distinctions? The important difference must be borne in mind.

We had a whole wet day yesterday, and as Clare has developed a disagreeable condition of her bronchial tubes, we employed it in making her up some Vizella garments for wearing at night. It is an ideally soft and luxurious fabric, and quite lovely to sew. It is also perfectly shrunk, both in white, the natural tint, and in the soft shades of blue, pink, and citron in which it is made.

So we turned our one wet day to account, and afterwards, when it cleared, enjoyed a sunset walk, Dungeness looking like a line of gold in an amber sea, while the sky was pale green below and blue above, with clouds of pink and amber deepening into sepia.

The newest colour for fashionable notepaper is apple-green, a fresh and pretty tint. I am writing some of this on it, so that you may see what it is like. When we went to Parkins & Gotto's to get it we were shown the latest whisper in monograms—those in the form of a seal with the letters apparently stamped upon it. For instance, a large green seal is raised in relief round the edge exactly like wax, and in the flattened central oblong appear the interlaced initials. On others an old-fashioned wafer is simulated in the corner opposite the address and on the flap of the envelope, the monogram appearing on both. The wafer takes the form of a heart sometimes with a spray of golden ivy for support. Even prettier is a diamond-shaped shield in rose-petal pink bordered with a slender line of black and hung up by tiny black chains and a true lover's knot. This is repeated in white and blue, in mauve and silver, and probably in other combinations of colour.

And now let me give you two or three recipes. To begin with, you will find these chocolate sandwiches charming for afternoon tea :—

Beat 4 oz. of butter and 4 oz. of sugar together until white, add 2 eggs separately, then mix in 4 oz. of flour; spread the mixture on to a greased and papered baking-sheet, and bake twenty minutes in a moderate oven. Beat 2 oz. of butter with 4 oz. of sifted icing sugar, adding gradually 2 oz. of chocolate Menier, previously dissolved in a little water on the stove. When the cake is cold, spread half with the chocolate icing; put the other half on the top, and cut into neat square pieces. Put 4 oz. of sifted icing sugar into a stewpan with a tablespoonful of water, stir until warm, and add a few drops of essence of vanilla. Coat the top and sides of the sandwiches with the icing, and sprinkle them with desiccated cocoanut.

These tomato darioles make a delicious savoury :—

Pour a little dissolved aspic into a sufficient number of small dariole moulds, and garnish them with diamond-shaped pieces of hard-boiled white of egg and truffle. Now mix a gill of stiffly reduced tomato purée with an equal quantity of melted aspic jelly. Cut 4 stoned olives, 2 boned anchovies, and half the breast of a cold chicken into small dice-shaped pieces, and stir them lightly and carefully into the tomato aspic. Fill the prepared moulds, and place them aside to get firm. When ready to serve, turn them on to a silver dish. To form a border, garnish round with chopped aspic jelly, and put some nicely-seasoned salad in the centre.

Here is another savoury, and quite a new one :—

Place thick slices of ripe, skinned tomato on an equal number of round pieces of brown bread and butter. Put a teaspoonful of essence of anchovy, a pinch of cayenne pepper, a teaspoonful of lemon juice, and a pinch of salt and pepper to a gill of cream, and whisk it until stiff; put the cream into a paper cornet and press it on to the tomato; sprinkle the cream with grated Parmesan cheese, put a sprig of chervil on the top, and dust lightly with coralline pepper. Arrange them on a bed of small salad and garnish with a little chopped aspic.

Ever, dear, your loving cousin, MADGE.

THE SOWERS. By HENRY SETON MERRIMAN, Author of "With Edged Tools," "The Grey Lady," &c.

"The best and strongest romance which he has yet given to the public."—Athenæum.

"From first to last the book teems with interest. . . . . There have been few such good novels for years."—Mr. JAMES PAYN in the Illustrated London News.

THIRTIETH THOUSAND.

CLEG KELLY. ARAB OF THE CITY. By S. R. CROCKETT.

"Immediately after reading 'Cleg Kelly' an enthusiastic reviewer might be tempted to hail Mr. Crockett as a latter-day Dickens. . . . . The story teems with incidents of all sorts, and it carries the reader along, keenly interested and full of sympathy from the first page to the last. It is a thoroughly good and interesting novel, and particularly wholesome in its handling of character."—Spectator.
